"Oh, there's Santa", he cried exultantly, and rapturously shook hands with St. Nick—Charles B. Dilbeck of Cheyenne.

Immediately Nubbins was absorbed in admiring the red child's automobile Santa brought, along with a pile of gifts, estimated at 250 packages, from persons and organizations throughout the nation.

Nubbins, ordinarily frightened among strangers, posed at a window for photographers and for friends gathered outside the house. He was not the least timid and fortunately felt well enough to enjoy his Christmas celebration.

Besides the toy automobile —gift of William Jeffers, president of the Union Pacific Railroad—there were a Teddy bear, a stuffed kangaroo almost as large as the 22-pound Nubbins himself; presents from his parents which he himself had picked out, including a toy jeep, battleship, wooden freight train and candy-filled locomotive. The puppy came from a fellow-worker of Nubbins' father on the railroad.

The little boy was so happy that he didn't even notice there was no snow.

Men Struggle With Cold, Terrain And Enemy on Alpine Front

By ROBERT WILSON
(AP War Correspondent)

With the Allies in the Maritime Alps, Nov. 20. (AP)—A cruel yet strangely beautiful war is being fought by American and French troops along the 200-mile jagged Alpine front from the Swiss border south to the graceful beaches of the Ligurian Sea east of Monte Carlo.

It is static as fronts go, for the job of Maj.-Gen Robert T. Frederick's airborne task force, which has the capture of Cannes and Nice to its credit, is to protect the flank of the United States 7th Army and the French 1st Army elements, also manning frontier outposts high in the Maritime peaks radiant with deep snow.

Crack German mountain troops are sitting on opposite peaks along the Italian front and holding down the job of protecting the flank of Field Marshal Gen. Albert Kesselring's army.

The cruelty of this campaign derives not so much from the daily artillery duels of American guns firing from French soil and answered by German guns from Italian soil but from the struggle against the bitter cold, which freezes the water in canteens, against the terrain and against the mountains.

The peaks have long, deep canyons where it is always dark. Men on patrol have walked into these shadows of these mountains never to be seen again.

To survive these hardships, infantrymen have learned to move about only in groups of two or three, to let their mules precede them to explode mines ,and to stick to high ground to avoid ambush.

The boys call this the "champagne front" because when they get a pass it is only an hour's drive to a warm bar along the still slightly gay Riviera.

With Allied Armies in Holland, Nov. 21 (AP) — A courageous stand by the U.S. 7th. Armored Division late in October in southeastern Holland aided in the success of the British-Canadian Scheldt campaign and won the thanks of Lt.-Gen. Dempsey, British 2nd. Army commander, it was disclosed today.

The 7th. delayed and finally helped stop a strong German counter-attack against the eastern side of the 2nd. Army's salient into Holland, although at one time outnumbered three to one.

A letter from Gen. Dempsey told the Americans:

"I congratulate you all on the splendid way in which you held off the strong enemy attack which came against you at Meijel. You were heavily outnumbered but by holding firm as you did you gave me time to bring up the necessary reserves. I appreciate very greatly the high fighting qualifications which your division showed.

A SOLDIER writes:

All Records Broken

Results of the subscription to the Seventh War Loan in Hastings County and in its areas announced on Saturday satisfaction for the way in which the County helped to swell the subscriptions and set new records. Nearly four and a third million dollars was purchased in bonds in the County. As for the city, the buying was $1,450,250. The number of applications was a record, namely 18,451 for the County. In Trenton there was a heavy subscription over the objective and in the rural sections the response was very marked.

Figures like $4,321,700 for the County as against the objective of $3,730,000 are something that is the cause for justificable pride in what the old County of Hastings has done for the total effort of the war in the support of the gallant young men who serve Canada and the Empire on the battlefronts.

The men on service will be greatly encouraged by what those at home as well as the fighting forces themselves have done in this loan.

Canada's high peak of subscription was also reached in this loan, over a billion and a half dollars having been subscribed according to the latest report.

In Canada and in the various sections of the country the same story is told of new high marks in lending to the Government in its war effort and in the number of subscriptions, the participation being a grand demonstration of whole-hearted interest in a great cause.

Here was the proper kind of participation. There was no waiting to see what others might do, but those who have invested in the loan were fired with one object—to see the loan go over the top for an all-time high in Dominion financing of the loan by public subscription.

Books Saved From Huns

The Odessa Public Library, founded in 1829, has reopened after a lapse of three years, the U.S.S.R. Bulletin reports. Before the war the library possessed over two million volumes, rare manuscripts and old editions. A large part of the books were saved by the heroism of two library workers, Kudlach and Korchin.

Tropic Proofing

The problems of packing the supplies and waterproofing the equipment for D-Day, so that they would arrive on the Normandy beaches in good, useable condition inspired a great deal of British and American ingenuity.

Doing the same job for the quite different conditions of the Far East has inspired a good deal more, as was shown at the recent exhibition at the Royal Ordnance depot at Feltham, Middlesex, sponsored by the Anglo-American Packaging Committee of the Ministry of Production.

As Mr. Oliver Lyttelton, Minister of Production, said, "From the factory to the battlefield, the stores are subject to temperatures ranging from 10 degrees below zero to 150 degrees Fahrenheit."

Packaging for the Japanese theatre must be designed to withstand extremes of temperature, rainfall and attack from fungus and insects.

New materials and techniques, both British and American, were in evidence at the exhibition, for packaging electrical and tele-communication equipment, weapons, aircraft, foods, medical supplies, clothing and leather goods. Among the exhibits was a complete aeroplane preserved, down to the smallest replacement parts, in a corrosion-resistant film. A thick coating of ethyl cellulose on small parts of equipment can be peeled off at the end of the journey.

For a great many packages moisture and vapor-proof envelopes are used. Aero engines are sealed in a transparent bag which contains small packets of 'silica gel' that absorbs the moisture inside. Some of the transparent bags have a moisture indicator that can be seen through the covering, which turns from blue to pink if humidity has penetrated.

Mr. Lyttelton described at some length the conditions these devices were designed to meet. He gave one instance of some tanks with springs of ¾ inch steel which had corroded right through. The tanks' packing cases were found to contain several inches of water. It was thought at first that the tanks had been deck cargo and that the vessel carrying them had shipped water, or that perhaps the crew had soaked them while hosing the decks. Investigation showed, however, that they had been stowed under cover. The cause of the destruction was variation in temperature and humidity.

The Minister went on to point out that under conditions in the East "metals corrode, paper disintegrates, glass becomes etched and mould infested, textiles rot—the stores are lost and the effort of making them cancelled."

Health in Britain and Reich

(Vancouver News-Herald)

One of the more common assumptions of Germany's apologists is that, deplorable as is the moral effect of a dictatorship, the Hitler regime has made Germans a strong, healthy nation on the physical side.

Some idea of the true comparison between dictatorship and democracy in this regard may be formed by consulting the official German and British figures.

Both countries have been at war for five years. Rations in Germany have not been inferior to quality or quantity to those in Britain. The population in both countries has been subject to bombing.

The most sensitive index of health conditions is the incidence of diphtheria, typhoid, enteric and paratyphoid.

In the first six months of 1941 there were 18,000 cases of diphtheria in Great Britain. There were 124,000 cases in Germany. Since the population of Germany is roughly twice that of Britain, the German rate per unit of population is approximately twice that in Britain.

In the same period there were 365 cases of typhoid, enteric and paratyphoid in Britain, and 9,081 in Germany.

In 1942 there were 60,000 cases of tuberculosis in Britain, and 146,000 in Germany.

In Britain the infant mortality rate was 49 per 1,000 live births; in Germany it was 72 per 1,000.

The British health figures all include military personnel, as well as civilian. The German are civilian only.

So far as army health is concerned, it is interesting to note that in the three months preceding the capture of Tunis, the combined sickness and battle casualty rate in the British forces was less than two per 1,000 strength. By contrast, between 40 and 50 per cent of the German troops engaged at El Alamein were debilitated by dysentery alone. Even physically the Nazi "superman" is not on a par with the citizens of the democracies.

British Research in Coal

A new British discovery has increased the potential value of the world's coal resources. This has been done by making it possible to produce coke from types of coal previously unsuitable for coking.

Hitherto it has not been possible to burn ordinary coal in blast furnaces because it contains impurities which would damage the iron. Thus the 100 million tons of coke required yearly for the world's blast furnaces has had to be drawn from a limited range of special types of coal.

Professor Riley of Newcastle, north England, found by X-ray analysis that the properties of coking coal were due to the presence of small disc-like particles, but the chemical properties of these particles were obscure. Now he has discovered that it is possible to add a synthetic material to the coal which has the same properties as the disc-like particles. He first located the properties in certain types of synthetic dye-stuffs—themselves derived from coal—and was thus able to explain the chemical process involved. He has now demonstrated that this necessary coking compound can be extracted from materials such at pitch.

Professor Riley's work means that huge coal deposits in Britain can replace the waning supplies of special coal hitherto used for coking.

The discovery is part of the great volume of research in utilisation of coal which has been going on in Britain for many years, which, it is estimated, has doubled the average value of every ton of coal mined in Britain during the last 30 years.

AUTUMN'S END

A touch of sadness marks an autumn day,
As if all things were murmuring: "Farewell!
No long, not long before we go away!"
A sadness much too deep for words to tell.

Though field and hill are decked with red and gold
And every tree a royal mantle wears,
'Tis like the going of a loved one old
When death has passed the door and climbed the stairs.

Still, in this final loveliness there glows
The hint that nothing living ever dies;
That elm and maple, hyacinth and rose,
After the sleep of winter, will arise.

HEIGHT OF ELEPHANTS

Some ingenious naturalist has discovered a rule-of-thumb method of determining the height of elephants. He says that the circumference of an elephant's foreleg is roughly equal to one half of the animal's height.

Elephants do not grow so tall as is generally supposed. They are so great in bulk that there is a tendency to overestimate their size, and in consequence many extravagant estimates of their height have been reported.

The largest elephants are the adult males of the African species. A specimen more than ten feet tall at the shoulders would be regarded as an extremely tall animal. Herbert Lang and Carl E. Akeley measured two elephants in East Africa that were eleven feet, four inches in height. They were probably the tallest elephants of which there is authentic record. Such a specimen in good physical condition would weigh four or five tons.

Of course, there is no reason why there may not be elephants in the jungles larger than any that have ever been measured, but it is not probable that any specimen belonging to a living species has grown much taller than twelve feet.

In the British Museum there is the fossil of a prehistoric elephant that appears to have been 14 feet tall.

Dr. William Hornaday, the noted naturalist and director of the New York zoological park, made this interesting observation on the difficulty of measuring a wild elephant on the hoof:

"When a big elephant is dead probably no man on earth could measure its shoulder height as it lies and hit upon the figure representing its standing height while alive. Nor is it likely that any two men could measure a dead elephant and find their figures for height in agreement. The position of the dead foreleg is a puzzle. As that member lies prone and relaxed in death, it would be almost impossible to know how much to push it up into the shoulder in order to place it just as in life."

Jumbo, the famous African elephant exhibited first in the London zoo and later by the Barnum and Bailey Circus, weighed six tons and was ten feet nine inches tall.

Indian elephants seldom exceed ten feet in height, and the average for adult males is about eight feet.

Monte Fortino Recaptured By German Troops

Rome, Nov. 20 — (AP) — German troops recaptured Monte Fortino, 5 miles southeast of the Bologna-Rimini highway town of Faenza, after bitter fighting with Polish units of the British 8th Army, Allied headquarters announced today.

The Poles repulsed two German counter-attacks on Converselle and improved their positions adjacent to Monte Fortino.

Eighth Army patrols probed enemy positions south of Ravenna on the Adriatic coastal sector and along the Montone river.

In the mountains south of Bologna American units of the Allied 5th Army threw back several small-scale German counter-attacks.

Chinese Troops Take Mangshih

Chungking, Burma, Nov. 20 — (AP) — A Central News dispatch today said Chinese troops yesterday recaptured the Burma Road town of Mangshih, 62 miles from the Burma border and third important objective of the Salween offensive.

The other two main objectives — Tengchung and Lungling — already are in Chinese hands.

The High Command yesterday said Chinese troops which took Lungling on Nov. 3 were being reorganized for further action in the Mangshih Valley area.

Recapture of Mangshih further secured the prospective India China supply route and pipe line now under construction from Calcutta and expected ultimately to extend into Yunnan Province.

The next important Burma Road objective in that province is Chegang, 34 road miles southwest of Mangshih.

26 U.S. Soldiers Killed in Crash

London, Nov. 20 — (CP)—Twenty-six United States soldiers were killed and four injured in the crash last night of a C-47 Skytrain troop carrier en route from Britain to France, Air Force headquarters announced today.

The plane was not a hospital ambulance, and it was stated that contrary to earlier report there were no wounded men or flight nurses aboad.

The Skytrain, a transport type that has carried thousands of men to battle, crashed near an 800-foot peak north of Brighton, in southern England. Six victims were taken to a nearby hospital, where two died and the others remained in serious condition.

"No cause has been fixed for the plane going out of control," Air Force headquarters stated.

Investigators were hampered by mud, which made the spot where the plane crashed virtually inaccessible to automobile traffic.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

OUR READERS CONDUCT HIS COLUMN

Years ago you said the term "self-addressed envelope" was incorrect, for of course the envelope does not address itself. I have roamed about mentally for a word to take the place of self-addressed, and have finally come upon "pre-addressed," which, as I see it, would do the work, without being open to dispute or misunderstanding.

(A.B.D.)

It impresses me, too, but still I'm afraid to try it without offering this explanation first. Readers have an infinite capacity for misunderstanding—and if I mull it over time and again and finally release it for printing with every assurance that it will appear as written, there is still the hazard of a misprint.

"Pre-addressed" suits well enough but we'll have to break it gently.

Now here is a round robin (three signatures which, I suspect, is the work of a student of dentistry or perhaps a dentist. Although three names are signed, they are all in the same handwriting.

Be that as it may, the letter raises a subtle question:

"In your article .. you said 'These are authorities to whom I refer dentists or doctors' ..

"Do you mean by this statement that dentists aren't doctors? After all, dentists are qualified as much as physicians to be called doctors. Don't you realize that both medical men and dental men receive a minimum of six years of training in their respective schools, at the end of which time they receive the doctor's degree?

"We realize it is really a grammatical error, but it has a degrading effect on the dental profession in that it implies that dentists are not doctors. You should have said dentists or physicians. Are we not correct?

(Signed) G. P.
R. V. T.
R. H. B."

You are right. Else it wouldn't be Homer. But answer me this, son. Whenever in an emergency there is a call for a doctor do you or does any one have the slightest doubt what doctor means?

More than that. I have now relinquished and abandoned the attempt to persuade dentists to use that unmentionable trade name I proposed for them instead of "Doctor." Believe it or not I was ashamed and embarrassed when, in revising the booklet "Save Your Teeth" I found that name on nearly every page.

Now I hope dentists everywhere will send me a pre-addressed stamped envelope so that I may send them a copy of the revised booklet. Physicians too. Others who want that booklet must send 25 cents and pre-addressed stamped envelope.

QUESTIONS and ANSWERS

Bowed Legs

Can bowed legs be made straight by any exercise, massage, corrective apparatus? If so, will you please tell us about it. (P.E.)

Answer—Massage, no; exercise, such as pushing a velocipede, tricycle, etc., and active outdoor play, may tend to correct bowing in a child under six years of age. Only possible correction for older person is operation on the bones—about which consult your physician or the orthopedic surgeon he recommends.

Vitamins and Pyloric Stenosis

Some time ago you had an article about the relation of vitamin intake of expectant mother to pyloric stenosis in the newborn infant.

(Mrs. H.D.S.)

Answer—Dr. C. Ulysses Moore reported in 1932 that experimental and clinical observations indicated that vitamin B-complex deficiency in the expectant mother's diet made the newborn baby more likely to have pyloric obstruction. That is one reason why, in the booklet "Preparing for Maternity," I urge that the prospective mother's diet should be supplemented by a good daily ration of vitamin B-complex. For copy of booklet send ten cents and stamped pre-addressed envelope. If you would like also a copy of the Brady Baby Book inclose an additional ten cents for it—but no clippings, please.

WEDDINGS

BAITLEY—CHANNEL

Wellington, Nov. 20. (Staff)—The marriage was solemnized on Saturday, Nov. 18 at two o'clock of Donald James, only son of Mr. and Mrs. George Baitley, R.R. 1, Wellington, and Helen Marlene, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert S. Channel, Hillier. The Rev. J. P. Lane minister of the United Church of Canada Wellington officiated.

The ceremony took place at the home of the bride four miles west of this village, and was performed before a colorful bower of evergreens and golden chrysanthemums. The bride was given in marriage by her father, the conventional white of her wedding gown, which stood out in lovely contrast to the bronze and gold of the floral setting, was fashioned of French lace and sheer and had a sweetheart neckline and long sleeves with pointed cuffs. Her veil was of illusion with Juliet cap and white gardenias. She carried a bouquet of American Beauty roses.

Miss Jeane Baitley, sister of the groom, attended the bride and looked charming in pink taffeta with small headdress of pink flowers with blue ribbon bows. Her bouquet was of Briarcliffe roses and sweetpeas.

Little Miss Shirley Wanamaker, niece of the bride, looked a picture of daintiness in a long dress of material similar to that of the bridesmaid, with poke bonnet to match. She carried a small bouquet of roses and sweetpeas.

The groomsman was Mr. Jack Wanamaker, of Trenton.

The bride's mother wore a blue crepe ensemble with corsage of roses, while the mother of the groom was attractively gowned in purple sheer brocade with corsage of yellow baby 'mums.

The wedding music was played by Mrs. Jack McNeill, Wellington, whose lovely voice was heard in "O Promise Me" during the signing of the register.

Following the ceremony, a wedding tea was held for about forty guests. A unique feature of the reception was the fact that five brothers of the bride, Ronald, Wilbert, Gordon, Clifford and George Channel, acted as attendants to the guests.

The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful cedar chest; to the bridesmaid and flower-girl, a locket and bracelet respectively, to the groomsman, a pen and pencil set, and to the organist a silver dish.

The young couple left for a wedding trip to Kingston and Ottawa, the bride choosing for travelling, a rose wool dress and powder blue Chesterfield coat with black hat and accessories to match. On their return they will take up residence near Wellington.

Out-of-town guests included Mr. and Mrs. George H. Carver, Belleville; Mr. and Mrs. Wilbert Channel, Picton; Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Channel, Picton; Mrs. James Channel, Bloomfield; Mr. and Mrs. Wilfrid Wanamaker, Trenton; Miss Norma Channel, Trenton.

MAWSON—VANNER

Trenton. — King Street United Church, Trenton, was the scene of a pretty wedding on Saturday, Nov. 18th at 2.30 p.m. when Miss Norma Clementine Vanner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Vanner, Trenton, was united in marriage to Sergeant Pilot Donald C. Mawson, of the R.C.A.F., son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Mawson, Trenton, Rev. J. D. Martin officiating.

The bride entering the church on the arm of her father, was lovely in floor length gown of white slipper satin fashioned with appliqued front panel, sweetheart neckline and long sleeves ending in fine lace points over her hands. Her embroidered full length veil was crested with a halo of matching shirred satin and edged with seed pearls. She wore a single strand of pearls, the gift of the groom, and carried a shower bouquet of red roses and bouvardia.

Miss Margaret Vanner, as her sister's bridesmaid, wore a floor length gown of heavenly blue sheer over taffeta, with halo of pink and blue flowers and shoulder length veil. She carried an old fashioned nosegay of yellow roses and 'mums.

Tiny Gaile Mawson, the groom's niece, made a very dainty flower girl, as she scattered rose petals along the aisle. She wore a long pink taffeta gown with matching flower buds in her hair and carried a small pink flower basket.

The ushers were George Vanner Jr., brother of the bride, and Edward Simmons, Jr.

During the signing of the register, Mr. Claude Huffman sang "Until".

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the "White House" Brighton, the bride's mother receiving in gown of heavenly blue crepe with black accessories and corsage of pink roses. She was assisted by the groom's mother, wearing a two-piece ensemble of violet crepe with black accessories, and corsage of yellow roses.

Later the happy couple left on a motor trip to Toronto, Niagara Falls, and points west. For travelling, the bride donned a dressmaker suit of powder blue wool crepe, muskrat coat, and black accessories, and wore a corsage of Talisman roses.

CATHCART—MOORCROFT

A very lovely Autumn wedding was solemnized in West Huntingdon United Church on Saturday, November 18th, at 2.30 p.m., when Rev. W. W. Patterson, Queensboro, united in marriage Hilda Pauline, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Moorcroft, to P/O. James Cathcart, only son of Mr. and Mrs. James Cathcart, Belleville.

Miss G. Pitman, Belleville, presided at the piano, and Mrs. R. Plumpton, Corbyville, rendered two lovely solos, "O Perfect Love" and "Because".

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, looked charming in a white sheer over taffeta gown, fashioned in long torso effect, made with a lace bodice, a softly gathered skirt and a sweetheart neckline and accentuated with inserts of lace around the neckline and at the back. She wore long lace fingerless gloves. Her floor-length veil of tulle illusion was arranged with a custer of gardenias. She carried a bouquet of American Beauty roses.

Miss Kay Moorcroft, sister of the bride, and Miss Janet Cathcart, sister of the groom, were the bride's attendants. The former looked lovely in a gown of Alice Blue taffeta, fashioned on princess lines with soft shirring at shoulders and lowered waistline. It had three-quarter length sleeves and sweetheart neckline. The latter looked equally lovely in a similar gown of gold taffeta. Their headdresses were half-hats of material matching their gowns. Both carried nosegays of roses and baby 'mums.

P/O. Terrance Creteau, Trinidad, was groomsman. The ushers were P/O. Jack Martin, Picton, and Mr. Melbourne Moorcroft, brother of the bride.

A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. The bride's mother chose a frock of navy crepe with navy accessories and corsage of Bettertime roses and white 'mums. The groom's mother was attired in purple crepe with purple accessories, and corsage of Talisman roses and bronze 'mums. The serviteurs were Misses Elsie Rose, Helen Jeffrey, Margaret Drummond and Mrs. Ray Lennox.

The bride's gifts to her attendants were plastic compacts and to the pianist and soloist, glamor pins. The groom's gifts to the groomsman and ushers were wallets.

On their wedding trip to New York, via Toronto and Niagara Falls, the bride donned for travelling a lime-green two-piece crepe frock and a beautiful muskrat coat with brown accessories, and orchid corsage.

Out-of-town guests were present from Madoc, Belleville, Corbyville, Picton, Wooler and Toronto.

Naturalist Talks To Good Companions At Tabernacle U.C.

Featured speaker of the Good Companions' Club meeting of Tabernacle United Church on Friday night in the Sunday School Hall was Mr. Stuart L. Thompson, of Toronto, who spoke to the assemblafe on "A Ramble with a Canadian Naturalist". Ever since Mr. Thompson's boyhood days, he has been extremely interested in birds, and he has developed that particular interest into a hobby. Not only has he addressed audiences all across Canada on this particular subject, but he has also given radio broadcasts and written articles for magazines concerning it. Mr. Thompson illustrated his talk with colored slides of Canadian birds familiarized with every season in the year. He also imitated the bird songs of the majority of them.

The meeting, which was presided over by the President, Mr. George Wright, was opened with two piano solos by William Connor, one of which was called "Music Box", which was written by Joan Bennett, a former Tabernace Church member. Miss Gertrude Poste contributed to the program with her two ballet dances.

ASSEMBLY

(Wednesday, November 15th)

Fall Home — Mrs. McLaren of the St. John Ambulance Corps was on hand to announce to the girls that due to the lack of instructors, those who had applied for enrollment in this organization's courses would be obliged to wait until more teachers could be obtained.

Announcements — The sales of War Savings Stamps have dropped off in the past two weeks. Good news from the war fronts seems to be injecting a feeling of complacency in the student body concerning the war. This is the wrong attitude to take in view of the fact that there is a long way to go yet and wars still cost money.

BOYS' SPORTS

House League Basketball.

Semi-finals—Rollins vs. Spafford, 26-13.

On Tuesday, November 14th, Maurice Rollins' team defeated Bill Spafford's team in the first game of a two-game series, total points to count. The second game will be played on Monday with the ultimate winner meeting Gord Bankier's team for the championship. Rollins' team started the game with an early lead, and from then until the final whistle were never headed. The game was very loosely played with practically no checking being done on either side. For the winners Bridger and Bongard with 16 and 10 points respectively were the high scorers.

Lineups: Rollins — Bridger, Bongard, Massey, D. Barlow, Marsh, Best, A. Thompson; Spafford — Clare, Pappas, B. Thompson, Smale, Watson, McIntosh, Hitchon.

Junior Basketball.

The Junior basketball team has now been narrowed down from over forty candidates to twenty. Throughout last week the prospective players, divided into three groups, went through two practices each, under the eyes of Mr. Townsend, assisted by Maurice Rollins and Gord Bankier. The twenty boys that remain have been divided into two groups which will practice this week, and the final ten players will then be selected. Good luck to every one of the twenty remaining boys.

Interform Rugby.

Last Friday during the noon hour, XIIG and XIIB played a hard-fought game to a scoreless tie. With this game to decide the Upper School championship, the game must be replayed this week.

Senior Rugby.

Congratulations are in order for our Senior boys' twelve man football team, as they came through like champions to eliminate Albert College in a sudden death game, 6-0. With quarterback Bill Spafford calling the plays like a veteran, and Roddy Lyle carrying the ball for substantial gains on every buck behind some excellent line blocking, our team was easily superior. Adverse weather conditions were responsible for many fumbles and the consequent low score. However in the third quarter Doug Legate skirted the right end of the line on an extension play and raced sixty yards for a touchdown, which was converted by a pass, Rollins to McCarthy. With the Belleville line holding strongly, this score provided sufficient margin for a win. Albert threatened in the last few minutes, but the B.C.I. line held, and Dodson hoisted a beautiful kick to put the play out of harm's way. Our Seniors now meet St. Mikes on Tuesday and we wish them the same success. The winner will advance against Stirling for the Bay of Quinte C.O.S.S.A. championship.

COMING EVENTS

Tuesday Nov. 21

Here's your big chance, fellows. Learn to dance. In the girls' gym at four o'clock, under the charming instructresses, of course, you will be given your first opportunity to absorb the rudiments of this art. If enough are interested this class will become a weekly affair. Don't forget you have to register. (Do you have to be a greenhorn to attend?)

In the boys' gym, there is a slightly different situation when Spafford fights a do or die battle with Rollins for the privilege of meeting Bankier in the finals of the Junior House League. Snowed under by a 26-13 count in the first game of the semi-final, Spafford's will have their backs to the wall. With no holds barred this will be a battle royal.

Wednesday Nov. 22

The finals are finally here. It's Bankier vs. Rollins or Spafford in the first game. Now Spafford beat Bankier two games straight in the regular schedule and Rollins pulled off a Frank Merriwell finish to grab the third play off spot. So either way, these finals are well worth seeing.

Note — The Junior Rugby game —St. Mikes vs. B.C.I. postponed to make way for the 12 man game with Albert last Wednesday will probably be played some day this week. The date is as yet indefinite.

Well, that's the news up to the deadline. Yours till next week.

JUNIOR MISS

The Auditorium of B.C.I.V.S., on Thursday and Friday evening of last week, was the scene of an outstanding triumph for the Dramatic Society of our school. Under the direction of Miss Merry, Mrs. R. Reed, and Kaye Martin, the members of this organization presented their annual school play, a three act comedy entitled "Junior Miss".

Orchids are in order for the entire cast but certain of the actors deserve special notice. To our mind, the greatest praise, if such there be, should go to Miss Sylvia Youdale, who starred as Judy Graves in the title role. This young lady is putting in her first year as a student at this school and she took on quite a load when she accepted by far the heaviest part in the play. However there is no doubt as to the fact that she was successful in her job. By making her debut in such a difficult role and by portraying it with the skill and finesse of a professional actor, Sylvia proved that dramatic fans will be seeing much more of her in future plays.

Donald Beavis as Harry Graves, Judy's father, turned in as fine a performance as could be desired on any stage, bearing all the trials of the head of the family as well as a nasty hangover with commendable strength of character.

One of our veteran Thespians, Vera Flindall, almost stole the show in the role of Fuffy Adams, Judy's intimate fiend. (excuse us—friend).

The part of Judy's mother was extremely well enacted by Ruth Blatherwick. Her part was that much more difficult in that it was that of an adult, but Ruth came through with her usual fine performance.

Lois Wishart did a fine job of the role of Lois Graves, the glamorous member of the family. A good picture of her outlook on life might be seen in the fact that her chief worry was that her face was sagging.

Harry Graves' employer, the elderly J. B. Curtis was portrayed by Stuart Wood, who blustered around in true tycoon fashion.

His daughter, Ellen Curtis, was the role assigned to Margaret Williams, and this part could have been performed in no finer fashion.

The character of Judy's uncle, Willie Reynolds, received the attention of George Manjuris, and the way in which he enacted this difficult part proved George's ability as an actor.

The scientific, self-assured Haskell Cummings, the one and only young man in our heroine's life was enacted by Jimmy Watson, who appeared resplendent in dinner jacket, dicky and dimples. We are all waiting for the end of the war when "Fearless" can wear such attire at a school formal.

It might be mentioned that a particularly fine performance was given by Bud Cavanagh in the role of Albert Kunody, one of Lois' many young men. It was "Sylvester's" first appearance in a school play and the manner in which he "did his bit" seems to suggest much larger comedy parts in future plays.

Of course, no play could be a success without the efforts of all the smaller character players. Fine performances were turned in by Ruth Palmer as the maid Hilda; Wally Muir as Joe, the bell-boy; Bob Stebbing as Fuffy's brother, Barlow Adams, and by Jack Campbell as the musically inclined telegram boy.

The parts of Lois' men were enacted by Campbell Cameron, Gordon Watkins, Percy Marcus, Doug Legate and Don Boyle.

Special credit must be given to all those who managed things in general behind the scenes. One to whom we are especially indebted is Peter Laskaris who had the terrific task of managing the sale of tickets and advertising.

THE MOST TRUSTED COW IN THE WORLD

JUST TO SEE the stately way she walks to milking, you'd say Bessie is no ordinary cow. And you'd be right.

Bessie comes from a proud line of ancestors. She is fed on the tenderest pasture, the choicest hay, the most nutritious silage. She lives in a well-kept, sanitary barn. Her farmer-owner tends her every need with jealous care. Even the doctor pays a visit now and then, just to check up.

Why all this fuss about Bessie? Because she is one of the thousands of fine dairy cattle that people trust for pure, safe, wholesome milk. Working with the farmer, your dairy makes sure that the herds are inspected regularly. All the way from the dairy barn to your doorstep, the highest standards of cleanliness and sanitation are religiously observed. Chances are, you take these safeguards for granted as part of your dependable daily dairy service. But at your dairy, it's a never-ending responsibility to see that Bessie keeps "up to par"... as the most trusted cow in the world.

BALMY BEACHERS WIN GAME 6-0 BUT LOSE ROUND

Hamilton Wildcats Appear Headed for Another Dominion Title

Toronto, Nov. 19 —(CP)— The Hamilton Wildcats today appear to be headed for their second Canadian Football championship in two years. They hurdled their most formidable barrier Saturday when they won their second successive Ontario Rugby Football Union title taking the home-and-home final series from Toronto Balmy Beach 13-10. They lost Saturday's game, 6-0, but the 13-4 victory they scored in the series opener gave them the championship.

Their opponents in the sudden death Dominion final in Hamilton next Saturday will be the Navy Combines from H. M. C. S. Donnacona at Montreal and St. Hyacinthe, Que. Combines, champions of the Quebec Rugby Football Union, suffered a 12-1 defeat Saturday from Toronto Navy Bulldogs in the sudden-death game for the Canadian Navy championship.

The Ontario and Quebec Unions were the only ones to file entries for the Canadian Rugby Union play-offs. Toronto Navy is not eligible to play because the Ontario Armed Services League in which it competed during the season did not file a C. R. U. entry.

McKelvey Brilliant.

A brilliant individual display by 20-year-old Ross (Red) McKelvey, Balmy Beach halfback, in Saturday's game virtually eclipsed Hamilton's title win. His broken field running, most sensational seen in Toronto this season, continuously enthused the crowd of nearly 10,000 fans, who braved a drizzling rain.

The six Beach points were provided by rookie and veteran halfbacks. Nineteen-year-old Billy Myers got five points with a sensational 70-yard touchdown run after taking a 22-yard forward pass from veteran Earl Selkirk. The touchdown run came in the second quarter and in the third Selkirk got a single point when his attempted field goal from placement was wide of the bars and rolled to the deadline.

Although outplayed most of the way the Wildcats proved tough defenders near their goalline and twice Beaches made fruitless forays within the five-yard strip. Then in the game's closing minutes when the Toronto team resorted to a forward-passing offensive in an effort to get a touchdown which would win the round the Wildcats intercepted three of the throws to offset the threat. Bill O'Brein, [illegible] Lawson and Joe Krol each snared a throw in turn.

(Very Very Slow)

As the master of the house smoked his pipe the old gardener was busy at his digging.

Suddenly the old chap straightened up with a jerk, seemed to think hard for a minute, then gave the spade a vicious kick.

"What's the trouble, Mac?" asked his employer.

"Weel, sir, ye mind that Annie, who was maid here about twenty year ago?" replied Mac, angrily. "I was standing at the back door wi' her one nicht and she said she was cauld; so I gied her my muffler. Whiles, she said she was still cauld, so I gi'ed her my coat. An' it's just struck me that the lass wanted me to cuddle her. I'm just mad I didn't think of it before!"

Still Army-Ohio.

It's still the West Point "Kaydets" as the Ohio "Buckeyes" as the leading American College football squads in the unbeaten class, although Yale remains in that category after Saturday.

At Franklin Field in Philadelphia where 70,000 gathered, unbeaten Army's point-a-minute football forces maintained their season's average by beating Pennsylvania 62 to 7, while in Cleveland's Municipal Stadium Ohio kept its record spotless by beating Illinois 26 to 12 as 80,000 roared approval. The Buckeyes need only next Saturday's win over Michigan to win the Western (Big Ten) Conference title of 1944.

Army's galloping plebe, Glenn Davis, roared up and down Franklin Field for three Army touchdowns bringing his list of major tries for the season to 20 and establishing him as the nation's No. 1 scorer of the year regardless as to future results. The 62-7 defeated absorbed by Penn Saturday was the worst suffered by the Quakers since Princeton beat them 76 to 10 away back in 1885.

By rolling up 62 points Saturday the Army eleven raised their season's total scoring points to the amazing score of 481 points for, as against but 28 scored against them this season. Brown, Pittsburgh, Duke and Penn scored one touchdown each against Army in seven games. On Saturday Navy beat the Purdue "Boilermakers" 32 to 0 tuning their guns for the season's climactic battle with Army on Dec. 2nd. at Annapolis.

After losing to Navy and Army in succession, Notre Dame came back to beat the Northwestern "Wildcats" 21 to 0, but had to use freshmen to turn the tide of battle. Alabama's Crimson Tide toppled Mississippi State from the unbeaten bracket romping home to a 19 to 0 win.

Remember when

Heavyweight boxer King Levinsky and wrestler Ray Steele tangled at St. Louis nine years ago tonight to determine what would happen when a boxer and wrestler met — each at his own trade. The Chicago "fish peddler" aimed a haymaker, missed and it was just at the 35-second mark when he was on the bottom gazing into the rafters, the loser.

That is exactly what John Katan, the Palermo Panther, promises to do to "Whipper Billie" Watson when they meet at the Hume Arena in a British Empire championship wrestling bout Wednesday night. Not only does Katan claim to be able to beat any boxer in the world, but he makes no bones of the fact he claims to be the greatest wrestler in the business. "Just get Watson in the ring, that's all I ask. 'Don't bother with a referee, timer or anything else. I'll take care of all future proceedings," bellowed Katan into the willing ears of his self-styled manager — Al Dunlop.

HERSHEY BEARS AT TOP OF LOOP

By The Canadian Press

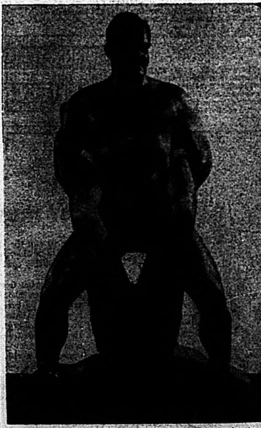
Games last night in the American Hockey League placed Hershey Bears at the head of the eastern division when they defeated Providence Reds 6-3 at Providence, R.I., while Indianapolis Capitals tied Pittsburgh Hornets for first place in the western division when they played a 1-1 tie with Buffalo Bisons at Buffalo, N.Y.

Art Strobel was the outstanding scorer for Hershey when he hit the mark in each period of the game with Providence.

Pittsburgh snapped a four-game losing streak Saturday night when they routed Cleveland Barons 6-1 at Cleveland. It was Pittsburgh all the way except for the first period when Bartholome scored for Barons.

Speed and air-tight defence enabled Indianapolis Caps to whitewash Hershey Bears 3-0 Saturday night at Hershey, Pa.

JUST A SAMPLE FOR KATAN!



It appears as though "Whipper Billie" Watson is preparing to give John Katan, the Palermo Panther, the complete wrestling business when they meet at the Hume Arena in their return bout for the British Empire heavyweight wrestling championship. On the other hand Katan contends he was jobbed, given the well known business and generally pushed about by Watson's personal friends the last time these ancient and honorable (?) masters of the muscle bending business clashed. "There'll be no chance for any interference this time as I intend to polish pretty boy Watson off, but quick," promised Katan as he worked out with Dunlop at his Palermo farm over the weekend. Two high-class preliminaries start this championship show off.

YORKMEN MARCH TO 12-1 VICTORY OVER DONNACONA

Trample Quebec Champions on Two Converted Touchdown Plays

Montreal, Nov. 20 (CP)—With the first all-Navy Canadian football championship under their belts, the Middies of H.M.C.S. York of Toronto, today were anxious to see what the outcome of the Grey Cup final between Hamilton Wildcats and Montreal Navy Combines will be next Saturday.

Saturday the Yorkmen marched to a 12-1 victory over the Combines of H.M.C.S. Donnacona and St. Hyacinthe, and they are wondering how they compare in the national grid books to the Hamilton club that will be gunning for second straight Dominion crown.

Displaying a high-powered ball club, that took advantage of every break, the Yorkmen trampled the Quebec Union champions on two converted touchdown plays. Both of these came from opportunities against a Montreal team that dished up its poorest brand of ball this season. Only three plays were needed before coach Teddy Morris' team was out in front to stay. Dutch Davey of Montreal fumbled at his own 15 and Toronto recovered. Annis Stukus then fired a forward to Rod Egan and he went over standing up. Stukus converted.

Then in the third period, when Montreal was goal-ward bound, lanky El Laing stepped to grab a forward pass and made a picture 80-yard run, to which Stukus again added the convert point.

CANADA'S VETERANS
Their Post-War Opportunities

This is the eighth of a series of advertisements to inform the people of Canada of plans to re-establish men and women of the armed forces. To get the full details save and read every advertisement.

For complete information write for the booklet, "Back to Civil Life."

Handicaps Overcome —
RE-ESTABLISHMENT of WAR DISABILITIES

In Canada there is an ex-service man who has lost both hands and who is a railway agent in a large Canadian railway city. There is another with a similar disability, who holds a position requiring the use of precision tools. Another has an important post in the testing department of a large Canadian industry. These are serious handicaps, but they have been overcome. Similar and lesser handicaps are being overcome every day by those ex-service men and women prepared to help themselves.

PLANS ARE COMPLETE

It was early in 1940 that Canada started preparations to ensure an opportunity for a full and productive future to those who lost some of their faculties as a result of war service. A special committee was set up to plan for the re-establishment of war casualties. Their plans have been made law and they are in full operation now.

NO FINANCIAL WORRIES

To face the problem of re-establishment the wounded veteran must have peace of mind. He must know he is secure financially while recovering from injuries and that his family will not suffer hardship. Canada's plans take care of this. Any man or woman, discharged from the services in need of continuing treatment, and unable to work, has pay and allowances of rank continued for at least a year, if necessary, and longer if the disability is pensionable and if treatment is still beneficial.

HEALTH CENTRES

Canada is providing health and occupational centres, in a restful country atmosphere, for those who need convalescent treatment for wounded nerves and wounded bodies. Five of these are being established across the Dominion.

TRAINING IS A FEATURE

There is the widest possible opportunity for training to those in receipt of disability pensions. Their right to this training is continuous, and has no limitations of time, such as apply in the case of the physically fit. In many cases, training commences in hospital as soon as medical authorities will permit.

SPECIALIZED HELP

The service of specialists in the problems of the disabled are available to all. Those who lose their sight, for instance, are placed, immediately they return to Canada, under the care of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. The National Society for the Deaf and the Hard of Hearing assists in the problems of those disabled in this way. The services and the guidance of the War Amputations of Canada are available to all who suffer amputations. These specialized services are rounded out by assistance from other veterans' organizations such as the Canadian Legion, Canadian Corps Association and others.

ATTITUDE OF INDUSTRY

A continuous educational campaign has been carried on among employers of labour to demonstrate to them that a man or woman who has lost one faculty can be usefully and fully employed if their remaining faculties are taken into account. Volunteer Citizens' Committees and service clubs have aided in this work. To-day, most Canadian employers know it is not what has been lost, but what a man or woman still has, that counts.

OTHER RIGHTS

War disability pensions are paid to all who suffer permanent disability not a result of their own misconduct while on overseas service. They are paid to those who suffer permanent disability in Canada if the disability occurred in the line of duty.

War disability cases are entitled to free treatment, with allowances, for life for their pensioned disability, and receive, free of charge, artificial appliances which their disability makes necessary. An additional clothing allowance is paid monthly to those whose clothing is subjected to unusual wear because of these appliances.

Veterans' welfare officers are stationed in key centres throughout Canada. They are the friends of ex-service men and women. It is their duty to advise and assist all ex-service personnel with their re-establishment problems. If there is anything about the rehabilitation programme which you do not understand consult your nearest welfare officer.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 536

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

There once was a player from Gervais whose handling of cards made you nervais. He dealt kings and aces in predestined places. But only his partner got servais.

It is no secret that aces and kings are usually essential to the safety of a slam. So, before a pair bids a slam, they should know how many aces and kings they have.

Take a pair of partnership hands like these:

SOUTH
♠A K Q 8 7 5 2
♥A Q 6
♦9 6
♣6
NORTH
♠3
♥K J 3
♦K 8 3 2
♣A K 5 4 3

South opens with three spades. North responds with four clubs. When north does not raise to four spades, it is a signal that shows two sure tricks in that hand.

When a player has enough for a three bid and his partner has two sure tricks, there is usually a slam in their pair. After that, their main worry is whether they have enough aces and kings.

So, south bids four no-trump; the ace and king asking convention. In answer thereto, partners must agree in advance what system of replies they intend to use.

Using The Kibitzer's convention, five clubs shows no aces; five diamonds, one ace and no kings; five hearts, an ace and a king; five spades, an ace and two kings; five no-trump, an ace and three kings.

Thus, the north response is five no-trump to show his one ace and three kings. South then knows there are three aces and all four kings in their pair. Opponents must have one ace and no kings.

With an ace missing, south dare not bid a grand slam. What would you do in a case like that? Just what south did. He bid six spades and hoped he would not get a diamond lead.

West happens to lead a heart. Dummy spreads. Without seeing opponent cards, what plays would you plan for taking 13 tricks.

To plan with sagacity may tax your capacity.

Toronto Comes From Behind In Both Games With Chicago To Win Twin Bill Over Weekend

Team Loses Services of Sweeney Schriner, Who Suffers Severe Charley Horse

By ERIC SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

The heaviest weekend schedule in the 1944-45 campaign for the National Hockey League championship came to a close without causing a hitch in the team standings.

Biggest surprise probably was the showing of New York Rangers who held the fast-moving Detroit Red Wings to a 2-2 tie on home ice Saturday night and then kept the Stanley Cup champions, Montreal Canadiens, scoreless for half their Sunday game before the Flying Frenchmen skated off with a 6-3 victory.

Paul Thompson's Chicago Black Hawks gave the league-leading Toronto Maple Leafs plenty of trouble before bowing out 5-4 in a Saturday night match at Toronto and 4-3 on home ice Sunday. Leafs had to come from behind in both games.

Canadiens chalked up their first week-end triumph Saturday when they outpointed Boston Bruins 6-3 for their second win without a loss over Art Ross' club this season.

Detroit handed Boston their 2nd loss Sunday night 4-3 on home ice.

After the final whistle had blown, Leafs remained on top of the ladder with 16 points, two more than Montreal.

In the Toronto-Chicago game Saturday, the Leafs had to come from behind three times before winning. Their victory, before 13,162 fans, was costly, however, as they lost the services for two or three games of their ace forward, Dave (Sweeney) Schriner. He crashed into his own goalpost and suffered a severe charley horse.

Before his injury, Schriner scored twice, to bring to 11 the number of goals he has scored so far this season. He also has six assists to his credit.

Three Quick Goals

Bill Mosienko and Mush March each counted for Hawks in the first period and Bob Davidson got the other Toronto goal. Red Mitchell got the only goal of the middle session to give Hawks a 3-2 lead going into the final period. Three quick Leaf goals followed by Ted Kennedy, Ross Johnstone and Schriner. Clint Smith finished the scoring for Chicago.

Sunday night it took a three-goal spurt in the second period to fashion victory for Toronto. Clint Smith and Earl Siebert had counted for Chicago in the first 20 minutes and Reg Hamilton, Lorne Carr and Babe Pratt tallied in the third before Mosienko slammed in a goal to tie the count at 3-3 going into the last period. Pratt feinted goalie Mike Karakas clear out of his net to sink the winning counter and only goal of the last period.

Detroit ran up a 2-0 lead over New York, on goals by Carl Liscombe in the first period and Murray Armstrong in the second, before the Rangers' Fred Thurier broke loose to slam in two quick goals late in the third. The game was the third successive non-losing effort for the New Yorkers.

Rangers Once Ahead

In their Sunday night game, New York raced ahead 2-0 early in the opening period and kept the Canadiens at bay until after the 12-minute mark of the middle session when Maurice Richard counted. Frankie Eddolls tied it up shortly after the face-off in the third and three minutes later Dutch Hiller, a former Ranger, netted the winning goal. Before the game ended Buddy O'Connor whipped in two more Montreal tallies and Elmer Lach one.

In marking up their fifth win in nine games this season to remain in third place, Detroit, after a slow start, rammed in three first period goals and another in the second and then held off a Boston rally to win out 4-3. Armstrong, Flash Hollett and Don Grosso all counted in the last four minutes of the first period and Joe Carveth got the other Detroit goal in the middle stanza after Bill Jennings netted Boston's first goal. Ken Smith and Armand Gaudreault netted for Boston in the last period attack.

Effort Falls Short

Boston's efforts to beat Canadiens fell short as the Montrealers took a 2-0 lead in the opening period and held the upper hand throughout. Veteran Herbie Cain scored Boston's first goal midway through the game, Jack Crawford got their 2nd counter in the last minute of the second period and Bill Cowley got the third goal late in the last session.

Little Buddy O'Connor was the spearhead of the Canadien attack, scoring one goal and making the plays for two others. Richard, Toe Blake, Fern Majeau, Hiller and Fern Gauthier got the other Montreal counters.

QUEBEC ACES TIED FOR FIRST

Quebec, Nov. 20 —(P)— Quebec Aces today share first place in the Quebec Senior Hockey League standing with Montreal Royals, idle during the weekend, after completing a double victory over Ottawa Commandos here yesterday 15-3 as a sequel to their triumph last night at Ottawa 10-6.

Paced by flashy centre Nil Tremblay, who bagged four goals, the Allan Cup holders controlled the situation throughout and skated circles around their foes. The Quebec team scored five tallies in the opening stanza and ran the count 7-0 early in the second frame before the Commandos could succeed in tallying twice. The Aces added six more tallies in the last period while Commandos could do no better than getting a goal.

Bobby Thorpe, a Brampton, Ont., product, who reported only last Tuesday to coach Don Penniston, tallied three times for the Quebecers. Doug Baldwin, Ludger Tremblay, Phil Renaud, Ulric Tondreau, Adjutor Cote and Frankie Dartnell were the other counters for Quebec.

Stu Smith performed the hat trick in bagging the three Ottawa goals.

LACHINE RAPIDES WIN FIRST GAME

Lachine, Que., Nov. 20 (CP) — Lachine Rapides won their first home game in the Inter-Provincial Hockey League schedule when they defeated Cornwall Flyers 4-3 here Saturday.

The game was close all the way. Lachine first goal was scored by Jacques Terriault after nearly five minutes of play. Bobby Burr tied it up for Cornwall at the 14-minute mark. Less than two minutes later Cornwall took the lead when Bobby Carragher scored on a pass from Andy Perron.

Lachine took the ice for the start of the second period trailing 2-1, but they scored the only two goals in the middle frame and led 3-2 at the start of the third. Both goals were scored by fast skating Jack Morrow. At the outset of the final period, Marcel Chapman gave Lachine a two-goal lead. It was not long before it was cut as Bobby Burr scored his second goal of the game.

Generals Down Rangers and St. Michael's Swamp Marlboros

(By The Canadian Press)

Both Junior "A" finalists in the Ontario Hockey Association last Spring Oshawa Generals and St. Michael's Majors, stepped into an impressive stride Saturday to open their 1944-45 campaigns.

At the motor city, the Memorial Cup champions quickly closed in on the Toronto young Rangers to satisfy the audience with a 6-1 decision, with the home crew going to the front in the first period with a counter by Al Shewchuck, one of last year's veterans. Denny accounted for two goals while other scorers were Jack Taggart, Freddie Petsura and Sullivan. The Rangers' single went to Pidhurny.

Joe Primeau's St. Mikes swamped Toronto Marlboros at Maple Leaf Gardens 10-1. Len Costello, Johnny Blute and John McCormack were double scorers for the students, all being newcomers to the squad.

Bolstered by two of their banned Western Canadian Recruits, Hamilton Barons turned up at Galt for their scheduled opening fixture only to be turned back 8-1. The two disputed blasers, Ian Mackintosh and Edward Marchant, were the pick of the losers while Bill Curick, formerly of Timmins, wound up with three goals and two assists for Galt.

Sport Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Nov. 20 — (AP) — A couple of years ago when Judge Landis was sick, he told close friends that he intended to retire as baseball commissioner when his present term expires . . . Whether the Judge has changed his mind since then, we don't know, but it seems obvious that he hasn't told the joint Major League committee that recommended the extension of the present Major League agreement . . .

In case you've never read the document, about the only limit it places on the Commissioner's powers is the size of the fines he can assess . . . Somehow, we can't imagine the club owners submitting themselves to such arbitrary power administered by anyone else . . . Of course, there's no question about re-electing Landis as long as he wants the job, but a lot of good baseball men don't like the idea of letting the Commissioner do anything he pleases, especially with that promise that there'll be no diminution of any commissioner's powers during his term of office.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press.)

Secretary W. A. Hewitt of the Ontario Hockey Association said yesterday the Hamilton Club has withdrawn its entry because of inferior material to form a team. The Hamilton action results from refusal of the Manitoba Amateur Hockey Association to grant transfers to three players who were slated for Hamilton this season.

The Hamilton squad, stripped of all but three members of last year's team, had depended upon the imports for the backbone of their team.

Paul Thompson, coach of the Chicago Black Hawks, wants to see post-war hockey go back to pre-war playing rules.

"Our present rules were made to take care of certain problems," he said last night in an interview in Toronto, where his Hawks play Maple Leafs tonight. "What we're providing is a game that's drawing customers, but it's not hockey as I have been educated to."

Dave Castilloux, Canadian lightweight and welterweight boxing champion, has received an offer to fight Ronnie James, British lightweight titleholder, for the British Empire lightweight championship.

It was understood that Castilloux would be willing to go to London for the bout for a cash guarantee of $15,000.

Juan Zurita, 138, Mexico City, recognised as world lightweight boxing champion by the National Boxing Association, made an impressive showing at San Francisco last night by knocking out tough Jerry Moore, 143 1-2, New York City, in the sixth round of a scheduled 10-round non-title fight.

H.M.C.S. Donnacona, Quebec Rugby Union champions, will play the Wildcats at Hamilton next Saturday for the eastern Canada championship if the Hamilton club defeats Toronto Balmy Beach for the O.R.F.U. title, it was learned last night. Wildcats lead the two-game points-to-count series with Beaches by nine points as a result of their 13-4 victory last Saturday.

One-sided scores featured college football in the United States Saturday with Army leading the parade by crushing Pennsylvania 62-7 at Philadelphia and Navy trouncing Purdue 32-0 at Baltimore. Before a crowd of 83,627 at Cleveland, unbeaten Ohio State took the measure of Illinois 26-12 while University of Michigan administered a 14-0 whitewash to Wisconsin. Notre Dame came back to shut out Northwestern 21-0. In the big upset of the day, Mississippi State, previously unbeaten, fell before Alabama 19-0.

But the British Eighth Army kept pressing forward.

PICKET LINE AT PLANT ON STRIKE

Led by bearers of the American flag, a long picket line moves outside one of the buildings of the Wright Aeronautical Corporation, Paterson, N.J., where a strike of supervisors has tied up production on the Cyclone engines used in the B-29 Flying Superfortresses— the big planes used in the bombing of Japan. Strikers defied a War Labor Board order to return to work, a spokesman saying that the strikers would remain out until the U. S. army takes over.

GYPSY BLOOD

By MARGARET NORRIS

CHAPTER 13

It was Christmas eve, snow was falling, as one expects it to fall that day, and over the city lay the expectant hush that portends the Miracle. It was a hush so all pervading that even the hardest wretch felt an urge about his leathern heart to be at peace with a maudlin world.

But in the woman's ward of the Charity Hospital there was no urge for peace. On the contrary there was a lively argument, fast turning into a quarrel, between the nurse in charge of the ward and the young occupant of bed No. 5 that was disrupting the entire hospital, even to the head nurse and the surgeon.

Bed No. 5 had one arm in a sling and eyes that were black by nature, their blackness now intensified the vicissitudes of an automobile collision. But the accident which had blacked her eye and broken her arm had by no means broken her spirit nor subdued her temper, which was raging untrammelled and all too free.

"Now come along, Missy, and get into your clothes." The nurse was saying it quite patiently, in view of the fact that she had been saying it for the last half hour at least.

"I won't get up, I want to stay in bed."

"Doctor's orders!" said the nurse.

"You mean police orders!" said Anna.

"Nonsense" said the nurse but without as much assurance in her voice as the patient desired to be given.

It wasn't that Anna was too ill to get up. Her recovery had been astounding, but developments of the past four days and certain severe questionings by the police, had convinced her she was being removed from the hospital to a place far worse, more inauspicious and less jolly for the holiday season than her present quarters. And better the known hazards of the frying pan than the untried perils of the fire.

Again the nurse dangled before Anna's eyes the familiar articles of her wardrobe which, bearing the scars of the accident, were even shabbier than ever. The nurse held them forth as invitingly as though they were a new Paris trousseau. But Anna, seeing no lure in them, turned her face stubbornly to the wall.

"To get me out, you'll have to throw me out."

The nurse acknowledging defeat, departed to fetch the doctor.

In the corridor, the other nurses were discussing the situation.

"I don't care if she did steal the bracelet, it's a disgrace to this hospital and a shame to lock up a poor, little, strange sick girl on Christmas eve, of all times!" She was a pupil nurse who spoke, too young to have become hard boiled.

"You won't take things so much to heart after you've been here a while," said her companion, "Besides, with these new emergency cases, we haven't an extra bed for her."

The harrassed nurse from the woman's ward was returning triumphantly with the doctor. The stubborn young occupant of bed No. 5 was lifted authoritatively out of it, wrapped in a great coat, ensconced in a wheel chair and trundled out of the room to properly private dressing quarters where no time was wasted on her toilet.

"The wagon's waiting down stairs," said the doctor in a stage aside. "Remind the offficer again that she's to be put right to bed with no questionings until the day after Christmas."

Anna knew she was expected to weep, therefore she didn't do it, but sat very straight with bright dry eyes while she was lowered in an elevator to the courtyard, where a burly policeman awaited her and lifted her into the wagon.

The wagon was a species of well enclosed car, but no one could mistake it for a limousine. Its monogram was simple but elegant and he who runs might read the six yellow letters on its shiny dark sides—POLICE. Anna and the officer were the sole occupants and the man clutched her by her one good arm.

"I know where you're taking me," Anna said when she couldn't stand the silence any longer. "It's to jail—and all because of that silly bracelet that you insist I stole."

"Well not exactly jail," said her companion, "but some place where you'll be just as safe."

The wagon halted in front of a gray stone pile which, if it were not jail, must hold a distinction without a difference. Anyone longing for the experience of jail would not be at all disappointed at the prospect of spending a night here instead. In the gloaming Anna could make out the black letters carved on the gray stone walls.

"Juvenile Detention Home."

So this was her new abiding place.

As Anna stood there beside the policeman waiting to be swallowed up inside, bells from all over the city peeled forth gaily in the snowy air.

"What's that ?" asked Anna. Was her arrival being celebrated?

"Why don't you know it's Christmas tomorrow? We all got to be happy, girl."

Just then the doors swung open.

Chinese Troops Ready for Drive

Kandy, Ceylon, Nov. 18 — (CP-Reuter)—Chinese troops attacking Bhamo, Japanese strongpoint at the eastern end of the Japanese line guarding the approaches to Central Burma, now have consolidated their positions in readiness for the final onslaught on the town, it was announced today.

The Japanese who occupy an area three miles long and two miles wide are facing a solid wall of Chinese to the north and east and south. All lines of escape have been blocked.

On the Chindwin front Allied troops have pushed southwards from Kalemyo for more than 10 miles.

Heavy bombers caused severe damage to objectives on the Bangkok-Chiengmai railway on Thursday.

TRADING EXPANDS

Toronto, Nov. 18.—(CP)—Canada's post-war trade with Soviet Russia which is already expanding, will be measured by the mutual understanding, confidence and friendship developed today, Roy H. Davis of Welland, Ont., president of the National Council for Canadian-Soviet friendship, said in his opening address of the three-day second annual congress here last night.

HIT BY TRUCK

Toronto, Nov. 18—(CP)—Seven-year-old Elizabeth Young was killed yesterday when struck by a truck in front of a Scarborough district church where she was about to attend a Christmas concert rehearsal.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking and thinking to himself, and ma said, William, I'm afraid I'll have to invite the Rawlees for dinner in the very near future, I mean next week at the latest. It must be at least 4 months since we were at their house for dinner, and a social obligation is like a gambling dett, I mean you simply cant ignore it, she said.

We've ignored it for 4 months now, that's not doing so bad, pop said, and ma said, They must think we're simply impossible from a social standpoint, never hearing from us after all this time, but Mrs. Rawlee is a broad minded woman, I'm sure she realizes that even the best intentions cant make much headway against the horrors of marketing and the scarcity of ration points. Really, William, I mean really, you have no idea of the difficulties of the times we're living in, ma said, and pop said, I believe I've heard you speak of them once or twice.

Of course we could take them to a nice resterant, but after all that would be a makeshift way of repaying them for entertaining us so nicely in their own home with an extra woman in to serve, ma said. Although at the same time you must remember that they had 2 other couples there at the same time, I mean it was a convenient wholesale way of getting rid of social obligations and not by any means the same thing as going to unlimited trouble just for one couple. Oh dear, I'll really have to think it over seriously, she said, and pop said, Say, by gollies, we did have the Rawlees to dinner since we ate at their place, had duck because there's nothing Rawlee would rather do than eat a duck, except maybe to shoot one.

Of course, I remember, what a relief, ma said. Well of all thines, it's certainly high time they invited us back for land sakes. Even if they only took us to a good resterant, I'm sure we'd understand, under present conditions. Some people dont seem to have any sense of social consciousness. And what's so funny, William, she said.

SALES DISTRIBUTION WANTED

One of the oldest and most complete lines of Welding and Cutting apparatus manufactured in North America is available for distribution in several areas in Ontario.

Large developments in the use of Oxygen with Acetylene and other fuelgases have taken place in recent years, and many mechanical processes in industry have been displaced by "cutting" or "burning".

This is an excellent opportunity for individual agents or established business organizations with good industrial connections to secure the exclusive selling rights in various counties, singly or in groups. The scale of compensation is liberal.

For further information apply to Box 30 this newspaper.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGES

New York, Nov. 20 —(AP)— Bidding remained selective and somewhat timid in today's stock market. Dealings were negligible throughout. Slackening of speculative and investment interest was attributed mainly to anticipation of more year-end tax adjustments, start of the big war bond push in which virtually all Wall streets have a hand and the desire to await battle developments on the Western front.

At peaks for 1044 were Loew's and the $6 and $7 preferreds of standard gas, ahead now and then were U. S. Steel, Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Chrysler, Montgomery Ward, Du Pont, American Telephone and Texas Co.

Canadian issues were down fractionally, McIntyre and Distiller Seagram the only firmed spots.

Senator Bouchard Heard at Kingston

Kingston, Nov. 20 (CP)—Senator T. D. Bouchard told the Kiwanis Club today that "loyal citizens of our ancient province of Quebec have no desire to see on the soil they love the murderous street-riots, the horrors of civil war, that have been experienced in those countries where the masses have finally paid heed to the seditious advice of religious hot-heads or racial extremists."

In a speech prepared for delivery at a luncheon gathering, Senator Bouchard added that "these same French-Canadians are in a great majority in my province, and it is well to have this fact known by outsiders."

Speeches made in Ontario sometimes have good effects in Quebec, he said, in reference to his maiden speech in the Senate last summer when he charged that certain elements were seeking to set up a separate state in Canada.

"Everybody has observed that since the exposure I made in Ottawa, street-riots of the apparent zoot-suiter type, illegal jailing of international trade-unionists by Catholic youth organizations, and all excesses of this character have stopped.

"Some people, of course, will say that my speech has not been the cause of this change for the better. Maybe they are correct in this estimate. But if such facts have been shall we say, only coincident, it had been, then, at least a happy coincidence."

There are "some people" in Quebec in favor of creating an independent state "based on race and religion," he said.

Double Tragedy At Vancouver

Vancouver, Nov. 20 (CP)—Arthur Otto Schultz, 37, of Vernon, B.C., and George McGunigle, 38, are dead and Schultz's sister, Mrs. Grace Varney, 32, is in hospital with injuries suffered in what police described as a murder-suicide committed here yesterday.

Mrs. Varney, a divorcee, and school teacher at Port Coquitlam, B.C., had lived with McGunigle, police said. She had left for school Friday and did not return to her home until yesterday when Schultz also arrived from Vernon in answer to a summons from his sister.

When they went to McGunigle's house to pack Mrs. Varney's effects, an argument ensued in which Schultz was knocked unconscious by a blow from a rifle stock. Mrs. Varney told police McGunigle tried to choke her and hit her on the forehead. She ran from the house and shortly afterward heard a shot.

Police found Schultz dead in a bedroom, shot through the head. McGunigle was lying dead in another bedroom with a bullet hole through his temple, a gun lying beside him.

Liberal Member Replies to Legion

Kitchener, Nov. 20 — (CP)—L. O. Breithaupt, Liberal Member of Parliament for Waterloo North, has informed the local branch of the Canadian Legion that he is determined "The men serving overseas shall be supplied with the necessary reinforcements."

Mr. Breithaupt was replying to a Legion request that he state his position on whether he would support a move to make home defence army men available immediately for overseas service.

He said he intended to go to Ottawa on Wednesday, when Parliament re-assembles, "with this thought uppermost in my mind," and added that the Legion's representations " fall on very friendly and sympathetic ears."

Obituary

LATE DAVID McGARVEY

Marmora.—The funeral of the late David McGarvey was held on Friday afternoon at two o'clock with service at St. Paul's Anglican Church conducted by Rev. J. M. Brownlee, who gave a comforting message on "The Love of Jesus". The choir sang "Saviour Jesus Pilot Me", and "On the Resurrection Morn". At the request of the family, Mrs. Wesley Hamilton sang "The Old Rugged Cross".

The pall bearers were William Lavender, Minley Lavender, Dan Shannon, Dan Osborne, James Bailey and Julian Bedore.

Interment was made in Marmora Protestant Cemetery.

LATE FO. W. H. THOMPSON

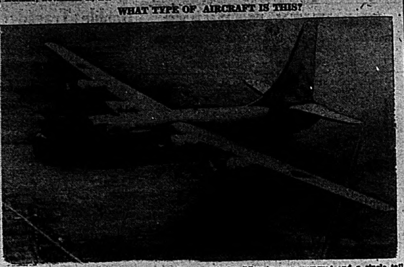
Madoc.—Funeral service for FO. W. Hector Thompson who was killed in a plane crash near Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, was held in St. John's Anglican Church, Madoc, on Friday Nov. 17. Eighteen members of the R.C.A.F. and a padre from Trenton Air station were in attendance. The service at the church was conducted by the Rector, Rev. W. Robinson, assisted by the padre. The rector chose as his text "Let not your heart be troubled" and left many comforting thoughts with the relatives and friends. Interment took place in Lakeview Cemetery, with members of the R.C.A.F., as bearers and the Last Post and Reveille by one of the members. The flowers bearers were friends of the late Hector Thompson: Messrs. Carl McCoy, Percy Nayler, Dr. Grant Fraser and Hugh Keller.

The late Hector Thompson was well known in Madoc having conducted a jewelry business here after the Great War, laterly moving to Ottawa. His wife is the former Marguerite Tufts daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Tufts, who with a young son in the R.C.A.F., and two daughters, are left to mourn.

The accident which caused his death occurred one year ago last February, when he and five other occupants of the R.C.A.F. training plane left Newfoundland for Montreal. No trace had been heard of them until two weeks ago when hunters came across the wreckage.

Flying Officer Murray of Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, accompanied the remains to Madoc.

WHAT TYPE OF AIRCRAFT IS THIS?



You couldn't possibly know unless you were in on the secret. It is the AL 504, Royal Air Force Transport Command Liberator, so modified that it is the only one of its kind in the world. Known as a "Commando" it has logged more than 400,000 miles travelling on historical war missions and special flights to every part of the globe and it is the most famed aircraft operating out of Canada. Recently, it inaugurated the new Canada-Australia regular air service. Some months ago the standard stabilizer fins of an orthodox Liberator were removed and a single tail, 31 feet from the ground and highest fitted to any aircraft, was substituted. Seven feet were added to the length of the aircraft to permit installation of arm chair seats, beds and an electric kitchenette. As the "Commando" was unique, the photograph could not previously be published, but is now released because there is no likelihood that on future special missions the aircraft will be within range of enemy attack.—(R.C.A.F. SENATOR TURGEON DIES

Bathurst, N.B., Nov. 18. (CP)—Senator Onesiphore Turgeon, 98, Liberal member of the Upper House of Gloucester, died at his home here today. He was the father of F. A. Turgeon, newly-appointed Canadian Ambassador to Belgium, and Gray Turgeon, Liberal members of Parliament for Cariboo.

WANTS BETTER HOGS

Hamilton, Nov. 20 (CP)—Agriculture Minister T. L. Kennedy of Ontario Saturday urged farmers of this province to produce "better hogs" so that the British market will be retained after the war. Addressing a meeting of the Wentworth Federation of Agriculture, Col. Kennedy said he had been told by an English authority that Sweden and Finland have a hog surplus and intend to invade the British market after the war.

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

(By The Canadian Press)

With the RCAF Overseas (CP)—PO. Jack Briggs of (2075 King's Road), Victoria is captain of an R.A.F. air-sea rescue launch somewhere in the Middle East and he sums up his work in just eight words: "I just reach over and drag 'em in."

He means just that, too, for he's a well-muscled six-footer and won a service heavyweight boxing title when he was in England. He went to England in 1938 to join the air-sea rescue outfit. After service in the English Channel during the battle of Britain he was transferred to the Mediterranean and followed the 8th. Army in its push from El Alamein.

He says his biggest chuckle of the war was his rescue of a German airman:—

"When we drew alongside I took out a big jack-knife to cut off his parachute harness. He must have thought I was going to carve him up. You never saw a guy look so scared in your life."

The Tiger Squadron won't go short on comforts this Christmas if plans of the Hamilton, Ont., Chamber of Commerce go through. The unit has been advised that the Chamber—which adopted the Tigers recently—plans to make sure that adequate Christmas cheer is available.

"The citizens of Hamilton and district are doing a swell job in looking after the squadron," said the commanding officer.

PO. Bill Bissent of Grande Prairie, Alta., who has completed a tour of operations as mid-upper gunner with the Thunderbird Squadron, figures Berlin and Nurnberg are Jerry's hottest targets. He was over Nurnberg the night Bomber Command lost 96 aircraft so he know what he's talking about. He was over Berlin three times.

But probably his worst experience was when a load of incendiaries from another Allied plane at higher altitude made a flaming torch of his planes' starboard wing.

"We had just dropped our bombs and it was a pitch-black night," he said. "You couldn't see anything above and they hit us before we knew it. The skipper (Squadron Ldr. Don Patterson, D.F.C., of Calgary), dove 5,000 feet and we got the fire out, but it was an awful nightmare as long as it lasted."

Of the numerous Spitfire wings operated in the western theatre, only two belong exclusively to the RCAF, but they have been hottest of them all since the Second Front was opened. In one five-day slaughter of German aircraft over Nijmegen Bridge when a Tactical Air Force group knocked down 105 Huns, 91 of them fell to Canadian fliers.

Most potent of the two RCAF wings at the moment is commanded administratively by Group Capt. G. R. McGregor, D.F.C., Montreal, and operationally by Wing Cmdr. Dal Russell, D.S.O., D.F.C., and bar, of Westmount, Que. The other wing is commanded from an administrative standpoint by Group Capt. W. R. MacBrien of Ottawa, with operational command under the famed R.A.F. ace, Wing Cmdr. Johnny Johnson, D.S.O. and two bars, D.F.C. and bar, leading Allied scorer in the European theatre.

With Canada's Naturalists

Toronto (CP) — The starling is looked upon as a destructive pest and organized warfare against the bird is going on in Ontario, but government entomologists admit that they have some worth as killers of pests that may become even more destructive.

Starlings are being shot and trapped in Ontario by the thousands and their eggs are being destroyed in an effort to eliminate the threat of these birds of German and Central European origin. But even while this is going on another pest the Japanese betile—threatens and entomologists say one of the best means of fighting the beetle is through the despised starling.

The Japanese beetle came to North America in recent years in shipments or iris and other plants from Japan. They are a menace to crops in the United States and are spreading their area of destruction in the field and orchard at the rate of five miles each year. It is feared they may invade Ontario in the near future.

However, there is no suggestion that the war against the starling should be eased to let them go to work on the Japanese beetles when and if they come.

Not only the government entomologists have a good word for the starling. A farmer near Toronto reported that at a time when a black grub, resembling the wireworm, was threatening the ruin of his extensive strawberry planning, a flock of starlings arrived. They did not peck a single berry, but devoured the black grubs and saved the crop.

Thousands of western ducks are making their regular autumn visit to Ontario, stopping over on the lakes, lagoons and marshes on their way to winter quarters farther south. The visit is a result of an odd detour many of the prairie-bred birds make in their southward migration.

Leaving their breeding and feeding grounds in the remoter regions of the western plains, they first fly due south, then abruptly turn eastward through Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan to make a call in Southern Ontario. From there, their course is southeast to the marshlands of the coast in the Carolinas where they winter.

A young deer recently invaded a populous suburb of Halifax while fleeing from a bush fire. Chased by a band of yelling children the frightened animal crashed through the window of a cellar. It was only superficially injured by glass, and a kindly citizen hired a taxicab and personally conducted the deer back to its natural habitat in the woods.

Observant naturalists occasionally find exciting things even amid the roar of city traffic. Prof. T. F. McIlwraith of the University of Toronto, recently spotted a big raccoon peacefully sleeping in a mape tree on upper Yonge Street, Toronto's main street. Apparently it had strayed from a nearby wooded ravine. Thousands of citizens must have passed close to the animal during its visit to town without knowing of its presence.

REACH MULHOUSE SUBURBS

French Turn North To Outflank Nazi Stand in Vosges

Enemy Withdrawing Toward Strasbourg and Saarbrucken

By WILLIAM FRYE, AP STAFF WRITER

London, Nov. 21 —(AP)— French armor swinging north up the Rhine reached the outskirts of Mulhouse today—perhaps already had entered the industrial city of 97,000—in swift exploitation of the Belfort breakthrough, which undercut the whole collapsing German stand in the Vosges.

Farther north the Germans were falling back toward Strasbourg and Saarbrucken behind weakening rear-guard resistance officially described as disorganized.

Belfort Captured

Belfort, by-passed city guarding the Rhine, was captured, General Eisenhower disclosed in calling for ever-increasing pressure until victory.

Six Allied armies are putting on the pressure at quickening pace.

At the north end of the front, beyond Aachen, British and American armies had cut through fierce German opposition to within some three miles of the Roer River, the last natural defence barrier short of the Rhine near Cologne.

British troops in southeastern Holland were eliminating the Nazis from the west banks of the Meuse before Venlo, a gate to the Ruhr.

The U.S. 7th. and 3rd. Armies, swarming eastward in the other blade of a French-American scissors, hit into broken Nazi resistance described officially as sporadic and disorganized.

Berlin said 7th. Army troops had broken into Saarebourg, a rail-highway junction 32 miles from the Rhine. Armor of the 3rd. Army farther north wheeled deeper into the Saar basin.

An unconfirmed Swiss report said the French were attempting to bridge the Rhine southeast of Mulhouse. An assault was reported under way on Mulhouse itself.

Greater Resistance

In the battle area east and northeast of Aachen, the British 2nd. and U.S. 1st. and 9th. Armies pushed their lines slowly toward Cologne—approximately 26 miles beyond the American vanguards — and the Rhine against increasingly furious German resistance marked by tank-led counter attacks which slowed but failed to stop the Allied drive to crack Germany's strongest defences.

Five fortress groups at Metz continued firing after the German commander within the enemy-held northern portion of the French fortress city ignored an ultimatum to surrender.

A two-mile advance on the U.S. 3rd. Army wing east of Metz carried Lt.-Gen. Patton's men to points eight to 12 miles south of the Saar frontier. Third army troops entered the old Maginot line defences north of Faulquemont, 20 miles southwest of Saarbrucken, and took Lelling, 9½ miles from the Saar border.

Dieuze, 30 miles southeast of Metz, was captured. The 3rd. Army had patrols at Insviller, 10 miles northeast of Dieuze.

The 10th. Armored Division which drove into the Saar—a major German iron and coal region—has deepened its penetration of Germany to three miles in the Merzig area. This division encountered heavy enemy fire from east of the Saar River.

Twelve miles to the northwest mechanized cavalry units prowled five miles into Germany up the Moselle River valley, ancient gateway to the Rhineland.

Weather Forecast

Kenora and Rainy River: Partly cloudy and cool today and Wednesday.

Manitoba: Partly cloudy today and Wednesday with stationary or slightly higher temperature; probably snowflurries in northern districts.

'Down with Hitler' Posters Torn Down In Berlin, Report

Stockholm, Nov. 21 (AP)—The newspaper Aftonbladet published an undated, unattributed story today saying numerous posters proclaiming "Down With Hitler" appeared on the streets of Berlin yesterday and were torn down immediately by police and S. S. men. The posters were reported to have said:

"On Nov. 20, 1942, the destruction of the German Seventh (Sic) army began at Stalingrad under Hitler's order. On Nov. 20, 1944 begins the destruction of Hitler and his hangmen who sacrificed the German people that they might live. Germany must not go under as did the Seventh (Sic) army. Therefore—down with Hitler."

The German 6th army was destroyed at Stalingrad with 330,000 casualties.)

BIG THREE PARLEY IS NOT LIKELY BEFORE SPRING '45

Believed European War Will Be Fought Full-Scale Into The Winter and Spring

(By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER)
(AP Staff Writer)

Washington, Nov. 21. (AP)—Plans for an early meeting of Messrs. Churchill, Roosevelt and Stalin appear to have changed and the best prospect now is for a parley early in 1945.

The whole schedule of post-war conferences and world peace organization evidently is having to be revised in consequence. It may have to be moved two or three months into the future, which probably would mean a United Nations gathering on the Dumbarton Oaks security plan next Spring rather than in the Winter.

Exactly what has happened to the projected big-three meeting before the end of this year is not certain. But presumably the way in which the European war is having to be fought full-scale into the Winter and the probability now that it will last into next Spring has had a lot to do with it.

All three leaders, as President Roosevelt told reporters a few days ago, wanted to have the conference. And Mr. Roosevelt emphasized his desire for it by saying he thought it took priority over his invitation to visit Paris. Prime Minister Churchill told Parliament it was "high time" the trio should get together again.

From what they said it was clear that Premier Stalin had expressed similar views. But Mr. Stalin is tied to the eastern front in a way that Messrs. Churchill and Roosevelt are not tied down in the west.

Officials here say that at such a time it is highly unlikely that Mr. Stalin would leave Russia. It seems equally unlikely, despite recent speculation there, that Mr. Roosevelt would agree to make the long and arduous journey to Moscow.

CHINESE REPULSE JAPS IN SOUTH OF BHAMO

Kandy, Ceylon, Nov. 21. (AP) — Chinese troops of fighting inside the North Burma Japanese base of Bhamo repulsed an enemy counterattack in the southern sector of the town after heavy fighting, an Allied communique said today.

Operations around Kalemyo west of the Chindwin River progressed satisfactorily, the communique added, and east of the river an attack on an Allied position was repulsed without loss.

R.C.M.P. Have Found No Evidence Of Enemy-Directed Acts of Sabotage

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Nov. 21 —(CP)— The Royal Canadian Mounted Police have been called upon to investigate many cases of suspected sabotage in Canada, but they have yet to find any evidence of enemy-directed acts, the R.C.M.P. annual report disclosed today.

The report, covering activities during the year ended last March 31, said that during the 12-month period 219 suspected sabotage cases, including many fires in army and air force training centres, were investigated but "no evidence of enemy activity could be obtained."

"A decision was consequently reached that the great number of fires reported was due to the relaxation of security measures and the actions of disgruntled personnel," the report said.

A steady decline was noticed in cases of damage to machinery, which undoubtedly was attributable to the increased skill of industrial workers.

"In general, there is no evidence of enemy-directed acts of destruction, all instances being the direct result of carelessness, malice, spite or prank. The effectiveness of our anti-sabotage work cannot be gauged by the number of individuals prosecuted or convicted; the only test is the absence of sabotage.

"Much credit for the lack of sabotage is due to the Veterans' Guard, the auxiliary constables and other organizations whose members have performed the monotonous duty of guarding bridges, canal locks, power lines and other vulnerable points in a very capable manner."

Besides checking reports of enemy activity, the R.C.M.P. were kept busy preventing some Canadians from harming the war effort through black market dealings.

Of all the black market offences, those dealing with rationing of gasoline have been by far the most prevalent, said the report. Falling within the category were trafficking in loose coupons, counterfeiting of coupons, and the wholesale theft of coupons as the result of breaking and entering the premises of wholesale oil distributors.

Reported infractions against gas and oil regulations brought about 1,600 investigations, including 569 in Ontario and 374 in Quebec. A total of 165 cases, including 72 in Ontario and 40 in Quebec, of reported infractions against tire and tube regulations also were investigated.

"The trafficking of coupons has developed into a large scale racket in the larger centres, especially in Eastern Canada, and recently we have taken special steps in this matter", said the report. "A number of investigations into the illegal trafficking of tires and tubes have been conducted, but these offences are not as numerous as those concerning gasoline.

"A recent trend, particularly in Eastern Canada, has been the sale of second-hand automobiles over the ceiling price. Heavy fines have been imposed where convictions have been obtained".

In Western Canada a number of cases of counterfeit coupons was brought to light.

Maximum Effort Must Be Made on Day Of Germany's Surrender--Eisenhower

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Paris, Nov. 21 (AP)—Gen. Eisenhower declared today his plan for future operations is to increase pressure steadily all along the western front until the Germans are crushed.

To do this, greater supplies are necessary, the supreme commander of the western front said.

"I want more supplies than we are getting and I think the soldier wants more than he is getting, both now and in the future," he said.

"To get peace, we have got to fight like hell for it," the commander said, "now let's do it."

Eisenhower appeared fit as ever after a tour of all parts of the fighting zone, and said he was especially happy over the French 1st army break-through to the Rhine.

"No single instance has pleased me so much in a long while as the capture of Belfort by the gallant French army and its reaching the Rhine," Eisenhower said.

The General told correspondents that his plans were to hit and hammer the Germans with increasing pressure, reaching its peak on the day the Nazis finally surrender.

"Unless everyone all the way through the nations—those at the front and those at home—keep on the job everlastingly and with mounting intensity, we are only postponing the day of victory," Eisenhower declared.

"The very maximum effort must be made on the day of surrender."

The General said he had received reports the French had pushed north into the outskirts of Mulhouse and beyond the city but he thought the Germans could pull out their southern flank there without much loss, except in prestige.

There were no signs of a crack in German morale.

Declined Prediction

Eisenhower declined to make any prediction as to when the war would end and said his call for an all-out effort both at the front and at home was his "prescription for victory."

He said the weather had prevented a full effort in the air in the current offensive but added:

"On thing that continues to grow to my intense satisfaction is the teamwork between the ground forces, navies and air forces."

He said that while he saw no sign yet of a German crackup, the Germans were human beings like other people and if confronted by failure after failure of their armed forces, they would inevitably crack. It is the Allied job, he said, to confront the Germans with more and more of these failures.

In asking for more supplies, the General made it clear that he was not criticizing the efforts of the home fronts in Allied countries up to now, but simply stating that more material would be needed as still greater numbers of soldiers are committed to battle.

He said he was convinced that Allied peoples at home are one with the armies in determination that the enemy shall be given no minute of rest.

Reason to be Optimistic

He said the people had every reason to be optimistic as he himself is, but should guard against becoming complacent.

Gen. Eisenhower reported German leaders were faced by a critical shortage of manpower and supplies and were stripping Germany bare to continue the war.

He said the Volkssturm, now being mobilized, was a force far below the standard of the Germany army —poorly trained, poorly equipped but capable of very effective fighting when put in trenches or behind fortifications. Such soldiers put in fixed positions and knowing they will be shot in the back if they leave, are formidable opponents, the General said.

French successes at the southern end of the front were what Eisenhower expected of the French 1st. Army. He said he knew its mettle since it had fought under his command in Tunisia when it had only such equipment as the French were able to hide from the Germans.

A Little Brighter

Asked whether the situation was brighter than had been expected on this date at the time of the invasion, the General responded that it was decidedly better in one respect—in that no one could have believed that the Allied armies in November would be massed before the Siegfried line.

He conceded, however, that on D-Day June 6, most people would have doubted that the Germans could have kept fighting after suffering such defeats as they have taken.

By August it became apparent, he said, that the German leaders, with nothing to lose by continuing the war, had in the Gestapo a weapon powerful enough to compel the German people to fight on.

SUPERFORTRESSES IN HEAVY STRENGTH HIT JAP HOMELAND

Island of Kyushu, Most Southern of Homeland Islands, Objective

Washington, Nov. 21 — (AP) — Superfortresses in heavy strength hit the Japanese homeland island of Kyushu again today.

Gen. H. H. Arnold, as Commanding General of the 20th Air Force, made the brief announcement with the promise of more information, as to results and possible losses of any of the big bombers, "when further details are available."

The first report said merely that "a large task force of B-29 aircraft" attacked industrial targets on Kyushu, the mission being carried out from China bases by the 20th Bomber Command.

On previous B-29 raids against Kyushu, the big aircraft centre of Omura was the primary target. Omura was hit hard Oct. 25 and Nov. 11 the B-29s returning to destroy all the centre's structures left standing.

Kyushu is the most southern of the Japanese homeland islands.

Struck in Two Waves

San Francisco, Nov. 21 — (AP) — Tokyo radio reported 70 or 80 Superfortresses struck in two waves at Nagasaki and Omura areas of western Kyushu Island in southern Japan today.

The broadcast, recorded by the Federal Communications Commission, asserted Japanese interceptors engaged the B29s in "fierce air duels that raged from 9:45 a. m. to 11 a.m. (Tokyo time.") Broadcasters asserted eight Superforts were shot down and another damaged.

A Domei news agency report predicted that later Japanese radio accounts would report higher "enemy losses" after an "investigation" of the air battle.

HUM OF BOMBERS SIGNALS ANOTHER STAB AT GERMANY

Warnings Sounded by Nazis in Magdeburg and Leipzig Areas

London, Nov. 21 — (CP) — More than 2,350 American planes, 1,250 of them heavy bombers, attacked oil plants in central Germany today with upwards of 4,000 tons of explosive.

The plants were at Hamburg and nearby Harburg and at Merseburg, 100 miles southwest of Berlin. More than 1,100 fighter bombers guarded the heavyweights from Nazi interceptors.

The near-record attack on the industry needed urgently to keep Germany's hard-pressed armies on the move came while six Allied armies pressed their offensive on the western front.

It was the first time all three divisions of the U. S. 8th Air Force had gone to the continent since last Thursday when they carpet-bombed German positions minutes before the American Ninth and First Armies.

More than 100 Mosquitos of the R.A.F. bomber command — many packing two-ton blockbusters, hit Hanover twice last night. Clouds obscured the target but bombardiers reported that flashes of the exploding bombers were well within pathfinder flares.

Followed in Five Hours

The second attack followed the first by five hours.

R.A.F. Lancasters also bombed Coblenz, at the confluence of the Moselle and the Rhine, during the night.

Yesterday the 8th. Air Force attacked a Geilsenkirchen oil plant and the Munster railroad yards and 9th. Air Force fighter-bombers flew 80 sorties in support of frontline troops, mostly between the U.S. 3rd. Army and the Saar industrial area.

RUSSIANS OPEN WINTER OFFENSIVE IN WEST LATVIA

Attack on 30-Mile Front Near Leipaja One Of Baltic Escape Routes for Nazis

London, Nov. 21 — (CP) — Red Army troops closed in today on northern escape routes for enemy troops rolled back to the outskirts of Miskolc, Hungary's fifth city, as the Germans declared the Russians had opened their winter offensive far to the north against 300,000 Nazis pocketed in western Latvia.

Late front reports said a German withdrawal from Miskolc appeared imminent. Escape routes to the east and west of Miskolc, 85 miles northeast of besieged Budapest, already were cut.

One Red Army column had battled to the outskirts of Eger, 22 miles southwest of Miskolc, Russian front dispatches said.

Another Soviet armored unit which had rolled through Diosgyor, three miles west of Miskolc and within 20 miles of the pre-war Czechoslovakian frontier, veered north to grapple for a hold on road and rail communications between Miskolc and the rail hub of Losonc (Lucenec) on the Slovak border.

Units of Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky's 2nd Ukraine Army plunged into the southern outskirts of Miskolc with the capture of Csaba and Szirma, less than one and two miles south and southeast of the city.

Berlin reports on the Latvian offensive said the Russians had thrown huge infantry, tank, plane and artillery forces against the Germans on a 30-mile front near Lejpaja, one of the two Baltic escape ports left to the Nazis.

The German accounts said the Russians had ripped holes in the Axis lines in violent fighting entering its third day, but claimed counter-attacks had nullified the Red Army gains.

C.N.R. Revenue Drops in October

Montreal, Nov. 21—Net revenues of the Canadian National Railways all-inclusive system for the month of October amounted to $5,172,000, as compared with $9,230,000 in October, 1943. Operating revenues for the month totalled $37,496,000, as compared with $37,585,000 in the corresponding period last year; operating expenses were $32,324,000, as compared with $28,346,000.

For the first ten months of the present year, the net revenue is shown as $66,383,000, as compared with $81,357,000 in 1943.

The cost of wage increases authorized, following the recent award of the National War Labor Board, from their retroactive effective date to the end of the year is estimated at $22,500,000. One fifth of this amount, $4,500,000, has been charged to operating expenses each month, beginning in August, 1944. The wage increases were retroactive to various dates between March 3 and November 25, 1943.

UNSWEETENED CANNED FRUIT IN LARGE CONTAINERS OFF RATION LIST

Ottawa, Nov. 21. (CP) — The Prices Board announced today that unsweetened canned fruit packed in containers holding 105 ounces or more has been removed from the list of rationed fruits, together with unsweetened "pie filler" and "fruit filler" in these large containers. Rationing continues, however on unsweetened canned fruit in small-sized containers.

Londoners Enjoy Street Lighting For First Time in Over Five Years

London, Nov. 21—(AP)—For the first time in more than five years of blackout London rejoices in the next best thing to full pre-war street lighting—a moonglow that enables pedestrians to make their way about most of the capital without flashlights.

This modified kind of lighting came on for the first time last night. Crowds were noisily appreciative.

An attempt was made in late September to change over from the blackout to a dimout but the result was so cautious and confused that Londoners benefited only slightly. In numerous other cities and towns, however, uniform bright lighting was restored almost to pre-war brilliance.

The chief official explanation of the September dim-out failure in London was that much of the electrical equipment was worn out and that many shopkeepers and householders lacked the proper material. The new rules also permitted window lights to show.

Main Resistance At Metz Believed Nearly at End

Remnants of Garrison Groups Continue Firing

By LEWIS HAWKING
(C. P. War Correspondent)

Metz, Nov. 21 (AP)—American troops have eliminated all large-scale organized resistance in Metz, but it appeared today there may be no formal surrender of the famous fortress city for lack of a German commander to effect it.

Remnants of the garrison still clung to two islands in the city and five fortress groups continued firing as the German commander within the northern enemy pocket ignored a surrender ultimatum.

Maj.-Gen. Anton Duncker, Elite guard comander in Metz, was captured by U.S. 3rd army forces yesterday and the real battle was over by nightfall last night.

The Volkssturme defence inside Metz turned out to be a farce despite the presence of several hundred German officers and men who, with the assistance of the Gestapo, were supposed to goad the home guard into bitter house to house fighting.

Seldom has Metz succumbed to siege, and there have been even fewer occasions when attacking armies succeeded in taking it by assault as Lt.-Gen. Patton's men have done.

In the Franco-Prussian war Marshal Achille Francoise Bazaine surrendered the city after a three-month siege. It was ceded to the Germans in 1871 and was not regained by the French until after the First Great War, by which time half of the inhabitants were German-speaking.

In the first Great War American troops came within reach of the fortress guns of Metz shortly before the Armistice.

In the present war Metz fell to the Germans June 17, 1940, while France lay crushed.

691,989 Prisoners Taken Since D-Day

London, Nov. 21. (CP)— Allied armies on the western front have captured at least 691,989 prisoners since D-Day, June 6, the equivalent of 69 German divisions as presently constituted.

Latest announced totals showed today:

1st Canadian Army	95,132
British 2nd Army	948,794
French Forces of Interior and British and Canadian Armies	20,000
U.S. 1st Army	200,138
U.S. 3rd Army	117,400
U.S. 7th Army	60,916
U.S. 9th Army	55,670
French 1st Army	57,939

HAD MANY TAKERS

Wichita Falls, Tex., Nov. 21 — (AP) — W. T. Knight told soldiers in a war bond rally audience he would buy a $25 war bond for each soldier who would buy one for himself. He had *8 takers. Cost of the gifts to Knight: $1,275 in war bonds.

ECHOING RESPONSE

London, Nov. 21 (CP-Reuter) — Gen. Eisenhower's appeal to American workers to "pour out" the shells has found an echoing response in Britain. British fatories which had stopped production have been or are to be restarted. Others are to step up production to keep pace with the huge expenditure of ammunition on the Allied western front.

Battle for Leyte Almost Stopped By A Typhoon

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Nov. 21 —(AP)— The battle of Leyte had almost ground to a typhoon-soaked stop today while Manila recovered from its fourth major American air raid of the month.

On Leyte, the typhoon took precedence over efforts to both sides on the swaying battle line.

Only in the air was there spectacular activity. There, 35 enemy fighters and five bombers raided American positions, losing seven aircraft to air patrols and ground fire. American aircraft countered with attacks on Japanese communications lines, supply areas and waterfront targets near Ormoc.

United States carrier planes hit Manila again Saturday, damaged airfields, set blazes flaring on three merchant ships and destroyed 118 Japanese planes. Most of these were on the ground. Only 10 enemy planes were shot down in the Manila area and another eight near the fleet carriers.

At Limon on Leyte, the Japanese continued their last-ditch efforts to hold a confused and disconnected line on the crests of ridges overlooking the Ormoc corridor.

Elements of the Japanese 1st division, cut off by the American road block south of the town, were still calling for help; and Gen. Yamashita sent tanks and automatic weapons to try to blast a way through to it. Gen. MacArthur's communique said, however, that the road block "is holding firmly under heavy attack."

Fire Destroys Entire Business Section of Village

Ramore, Ont., Nov. 21 — (CP) — Almost the entire business section of this farming village 30 miles north of Kirkland Lake was destroyed today in an early morning fire which caused damage estimated at $60,000.

The fire started at 1.30 a. m. in a general store owned by J. N. Cloutier who was awakened by the noise of the flames. He was unable to control the blaze with fire extinguishers and he and his family experienced some difficulty in getting out of the building. Store and contents, valued at $40,000, were a complete loss.

The Ramore hotel was destroyed with the loss being estimated at $8,000 and two other adjacent buildings valued at $4,000 also were razed. Several other nearby buildings were burned but loss in these was not known immediately.

Ramore has no fire department and calls for help were sent to Matachewan and Kirkland Lake. Pumps and extinguishers were sent but the lack of water facilities prevented the use of standard equipment.

No one was injured.

FOUR USED TIRES TAKEN FROM APARTMENT

Sneak thieves entered an apartment occupied by E. Baragar, 224 Front St., some time Monday night and stole numerous articles including four used tires. Entrance was gained through a rear window that leads to a lower roof from where it was an easy matter to climb through the window and leave by the same route. Police were notified when Mr. Baragar arose this morning to find his apartment had been burglarized. Besides the four tires a blue suit, top coat and fountain pen were also reported missing. Mr. Baragar was unable to throw any light on when the burglary might have taken place.

LEFT LOADED RIFLE IN PARKED CAR

The practice of carrying a loaded rifle in an automobile might have proven a serious matter yesterday. A local citizen left a loaded rifle in his motor car which he parked at the Cities Service parking lot while working nearby. During his absence it is believed some mischievous lads entered the automobile and took the loaded rifle and a camera. Upon discovering the theft the motorist immediately notified police and the camera was found abandoned nearby, but not so with the rifle. Later two small girls found the rifle hidden beneath the river wall behind the old fire station. Although the two little girls carried the rifle to the police station a serious accident could have well taken place had either of them so much as touched the rifle trigger. Police today announced it was unlawful to carry a loaded rifle in a motor vehicle, regardless as to whether the vehicle is locked or not.

CITY SCHOOL CHILDREN BOUGHT $708 IN WAR S. C. IN SEPTEMBER

Children in the four public schools in Belleville and in St. Michael's invested a total of $708 in War Savings Certificates during the month of September, it is announced through the War Finance Publicity Committee from its Toronto headquarters. Throughout Ontario children in public and separate elementary schools invested a total of $112,761 in certificates during the same period it was stated.

TRENTON PLANES ASKED TO ASSIST

The assistance of aeroplanes from the Trenton R.C.A.F. base was sought by Provincial Police here today in an effort to locate Arthur Nelson, a hunter from Peterborough, who has been lost in the bush five miles north of Apsley for the past three days. Information regarding Mr. Nelson's plight reached O.P.P. headquarters here today following which Inspector Harry Storey contacted the Trenton R.C.A.F. station, seeking the employment of planes in the possible locating of the lost hunter. Police here were not notified of the fact a hunter was missing until today.

RESUMES POST AS CROWN ATTORNEY

Major Gordon Wamsley, who was recently demobilized from the Canadian army after serving as A.J.A.G. at M.D. 3 at Kingston since 1939, returned to his civilian position as crown attorney for Prince Edward County at Picton last week. Major Wamsley enlisted with the First Battalion Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, but was transferred to the Judges' Advocate General's department at Kingston where he served in a legal capacity until demobilized recently.

TURKEYS, CHICKENS TAKEN FROM FARM

It is hardly likely the fact that Thanksgiving Day in the United States comes on Thursday of this week had anything to do with the theft of turkeys and chickens from the farm of Jack Whalen near Melrose, over the weekend. At any rate Mr. Whalen arose Monday morning to find 30 of his prize fattened chickens and nine turkeys missing from his poultry pens. Mr. Whalen told investigating Provincial Police he had been fattening the turkeys for Christmas markets.

KENNETH CAMPBELL HOME ON FURLOUGH

AB. Kenneth Campbell, naval gunner on a defence equipped merchant ship, is enjoying a well deserved furlough at his home, 250 Charles St. after being at sea for nearly two years. He sailed from Vancouver, B.C., late in 1942 and since that time has visited India, Ceylon, Australia, Africa and South America. His ship was forced to pull into Madagascar for an indefinite period when enemy subs were active in that zone. He enlisted in 1942 and took his training at H.M.C.S. Cornwallis at Halifax — then leaving for the West Coast for active duty. Ken was a former student at the B.C.I. and was a star on the football squad for that school besides taking part in other sports of the student body.

NOTED MISSIONARY TO SPEAK ON FAR EAST AND INDIAN MISSIONS

Rev. A. Russell Graham of the Canadian Industries Missions in India will be the special speaker at the annual fall missionary rally of the missionary and maintenance department of the Belleville Presbytery to be held in Bridge Street United Church on Thursday evening.

Canadian born and son of a minister, Mr. Graham is widely known as a Christian businessman and as a missionary evangelist. He took over the Canadian Missions Industries in India in 1914 and during the last Great War was on active service with the Y.M.C.A. in Mesopotamia. He is a graduate of Biblical Seminary in New York and of Emmanuel College and has devoted his life to the Christian mission service.

Twice travelled around the world and having visited both China and Japan prior to the outbreak of war, Mr. Graham is in position to give a first hand report of missions in India and in the Far East. His message Thursday evening will be one well worth hearing.

MISS EVELYN HORTON GIVEN APPOINTMENT AT GENERAL HOSPITAL

Former chief instructor the nurses' training school at East Toronto Hospital for a period of five years, Miss L. Evelyn Horton, Reg. N., of St. Catharines, has recently been appointed director of nursing at the Belleville General Hospital, it has been announced by the hospital administrator, Mr. Gordon Barclay.

DR. J. C. FERGUSON RECEIVES LL.D. AT TORONTO UNIV.

Noted Son of Hastings County Who Will Address Belleville C. of C. Banquet

Dr. John C. Ferguson, of New York, who is to be the guest speaker at the Chamber of Commerce Annual Banquet at the Tabernacle Church on Friday night of this week, is in Toronto today to receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from Toronto University.

Dr. Ferguson is probably Hastings County's most famous son. He was born at Lonsdale in Tyendinaga Township, and is the son of the late Rev. John Ferguson, a well-known Methodist minister, who filled many pastorates in Eastern Ontario.

After graduation at Albert College, Dr. Ferguson went to Boston, Mass., where he graduated from the College of Liberals Arts with the degree of B.A. Thereafter he attended the Union Theological School of Boston for two years. Later he was sent to China as a missionary under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States.

Rise to Prominence in China

His rise to prominence in China was nothing short of phenomenal. A mere summation of a few of his activities and of the positions he has held is both enlightening and amazing.

He has filled the offices of president of Nanking University; president of Nanyang College, Shanghai; secretary to the Chinese Ministry of Commerce; chief secretary of the Chinese Railway Administration; foreign adviser to the Viceroy of Nanking; vice-president of the Red Cross of China; chairman of the Chinese Relief Commission; Chinese committeeman to revise the treaties with the United States and Japan; special representative to the United States of the Chinese government on at least a dozen important missions; counsellor to the Department of State in China; member of the conference on the Limitation of Armaments held in Washington; president of the Sin Wau Pao newspaper; proprietor of the Shanghai Daily Times. He is now confidential adviser to Chiang Kai-Shek.

His Writings

Dr. Ferguson has devoted many years to the study of Chinese literature and art and has published a number of books dealing with those subjects such as "Chinese Art," "Chinese Mythology," "Chinese Paintings" and "Chinese Porcelains." For a time he was editor of the "Chinese Journal of Science and Art."

Dr. Ferguson has been made an honorary member of Rotary International. On September 13 last he was guest speaker at the Rotary Club of Boston.

Last Spring he addressed the Empire Club in Toronto and the remarkable message he delivered on that occasion was the source of much editorial comment by Canadian newspapers.

On his present visit to Toronto he is accompanied by his daughter, Mary. During their stay in that city they will be guests at the home of Hon. G. Howard Ferguson. They are expected to arrive in Belleville by the noon train on Friday.

More Charges Laid by Crown

Four of the five youths charged with breaking out of the Hastings County jail by violence earlier this month, appeared before Magistrate T. Y. Wills today only to have their cases further enlarged until Friday. Those arraigned were Martin Green, 20, David Quigley, 17, Bert Hawkins, 18, and Norman Bell, 17, all of Toronto.

They were not asked to plead, but Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan read two additional charges against the quartet, that of stealing motor cars at Brighton and Colborne. The police allege the quartet used these vehicles in making their escape to Toronto, where they were captured. Floyd Andrews, 17, and fifth member of the gang, was not arraigned for the reason he was not present, when the above two vehicles were stolen. All five face charges of breaking jail with violence.

It was revealed in the court today that R. A. Pringle, local barrister would appear on behalf of some of the accused young men when they are officially arraigned next Friday. Also during the court Crown Attorney Donnan presented a telegram to Magistrate Wills which indicated a Toronto lawyer by the name of Shannon had also been engaged by the family of one of the accused. It was upon learning this fact His Worship deemed it advisable to enlarge the entire procedure until Friday.

Dr. C. G. Salisbury, Native Of Moira, Heads World's Finest Indian Hospital

Million-dollar Institution in Northern Arizona Indian Reserve Owes Its Existence to Energy and Initiative Of A Former Resident of Hastings County

The world's finest Indian hospital situated in the sagebrush desert of Northern Arizona, would still be a few bleak shacks, if Dr. Clarence Grant Salisbury, who first saw light of day on the first concession of Huntingdon Township, Hastings County, had feared ridicule, tribal medicine men or lynching by vengeful Redskins.

The incidents following, as relating to Dr. Salisbury's exploits in a Navajo Indian settlement at Ganado, Arizona, are highlights of his experiences as told in a feature story appearing in the Nov. 18 edition of the Saturday Evening Post.

A few days after his arrival in Ganado, where he has been sent to "fill in" for two months in this bleak Indian settlement, Dr. Salisbury stood on the steps of his tiny hospital and looked down on an angry mob of Navajo Indians. A daughter of the tribe had died after the medicine men with their weird dress and chants had failed. The doctor had been called too late. The Indians came with ropes and knives to wreak their vengeance.

Intervention by a wise medicine man "Red Point" probably saved Dr. Salisbury's life.

Started Work in 1927.

From that day in 1927 to the present time, the magic of Dr. Salisbury's "medicine" has transformed a bleak sagebrush desert into a community that is the epitome of medical and educational science.

There in the vast desert of Northern Arizona, fifty-six miles from any town or railroad, he has changed Ganado from a few dirty shacks to a kind of Shangri-la. It looks like a university, with its fifty buildings and 200-acre campus, beautifully landscaped. In the Navajo dialect he is called Dr. Tso —transated this means "Dr. Big". He is now fifty-nine years of age and weighs 240 pounds.

Today there is a modern nursing school in Ganado. Its graduates representing 37 Indian tribes are scattered around the world. Nearly one-half are in war service. A complete grade and preparatory school for Indians is functioning. Some graduates have gone on to earn college degrees.

Self-Contained Community.

The present church building at Ganado would be the envy of many a city congregation. It cost $50,000. Volunteer Red men worked like slaves to dig the deep foundation. Men, whose families had been treated by Dr. Big, rode in to help. They had never paid a hospital bill.

The Sage Memorial Hospital at Ganado, the product of a $50,000 gift from the widow of Russell Sage, has 150 beds, and a complete complement of laboratories, dispensaries, kitchens, offices and other modern adjuncts. There is a $3,800 ambulance.

Here too, are schools and gymnasia, bakery, barns, storage houses, laundry, fire department, commissary woodworking shops, refrigeration plant, powerhouse, garages and other structures. A central park has fountains, benches, fireplaces for barbecues, flowers, fish ponds, trails and flower-beds. The technical inventory of the whole institution is about $1,000,000.

Raises Own Feed.

Indians staff each unit. Coal is taken from the mission mine. Coffins are made at Ganado. Its own irrigation project supplies much of the food, including pork, poultry and dairy products. Chief farmer is Dr. Big who steps from a surgical gown into agricultural overalls. The big vegetable gardens are supervised by Mrs. Salisbury, the former Cora Burrows, of Boston, who has active charge of the commissary and all buying and selling.

Dr. Tso, or "Big" is an apt name for Dr. Salisbury. He is physically large, and has the firm look and demeanor of a tribal chieftain. This is convenient for a man who must be a physician, pastor, psychoanalyst, confessor, sheriff, even mortician to a primitive people. He is lovingly called the "Father of the Navajos".

The doctor's own great love, sometimes dominating even his missionary zeal, is surgery. He is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons and of the exclusive International College of Surgeons. He is active in the American College of Hospital Administrators and at present is the president of the Association of Western Hospitals.

No Idle Moments.

He is a very busy man. For instance after a busy morning in the operating room he extracted 78 Navajo teeth, delivered five papooses and at night sang at a wedding, repaired a power-plant boiler and helped baptize a man named Twelve-Gauge Shotgun.

This, however, was a crowded day. Normally Dr. Big has four staff physicians besides a dentist. The hospital served 2,000 patients during 1944, plus 10,000 dispensary cases, "and horses".

Born Near Moira.

Dr. Salisbury was born on a farm on the first concession of Huntingdon Township, near Moira, the eldest of ten children who comprised the family of Mr. Eli Salisbury now residing in California, and the late Mrs. Salisbury, who was the former Mary Foster of Moira. He is a cousin of Mr. Wallace Salisbury, insurance agent of this city.

He attended the little red schoolhouse at West Huntingdon and at Ivanhoe where Mr. J. O. Herity, who incidentally is a relative, was his first schoolteacher.

In 1893 he moved with his family to Calgary, where his father remained for twenty years. Dr. Salisbury's exceptionally fine physique earned for him the honor of being selected as a model for a statuary "Young Canada" which was exhibited at the Toronto Exhibition.

He furthered his education in Calgary, later going to Boston where he received a medical degree. It was here he met his wife Miss Cora Burrows. In 1917 he went to China as a medical missionary for the Presbyterian Church of the United States. His parish was on the island of Hainan, off the southeast coast of China composed of 11,000 square miles with a population of two million souls.

He returned to the U.S.A. in 1937 with his son, who was born in China, and it was then he accepted the call to "fill in" at Ganado, Arizona. The same year he visited Belleville and spoke from the pulpit of Tabernacle Church.

Highlights of Trip to United States And Mexico Reviewed by J.O. Herity

"Lay that snowball down, Owen,
Lay that snowball down,
Snowball-packin' Owen,
Lay that snowball down."

That was the parody of a once popular song that greeted Belleville's dean of service clubmen, Rotary Past District Governor J. O. Herity, when he visited an inter-club meeting of the Excelsior Springs, Mo., and Lexington, Mo., Rotary clubs.

Mr. Herity related the above in a colorful story of his 10,000-mile trip through the United States and Mexico, to the Rotary Club here on Monday.

He represented Canada on a Rotary International Committee that included five Americans and an Australian at a special meeting held in Excelsior Springs to discuss plans for the assistance of overseas Rotary clubs affected by the war.

British Clubs Decline Help.

An important feature of the meeting, Mr. Herity said, was the reading of a letter from British Rotary clubs declining the offer. "We will look after our own," they said. "Please give these funds to clubs that need them more than we."

In traditional Heriterian eloquence, the speaker took his listeners on a verbal trip through the various states that he visited. Through Colorado and the Grand Canyon, and the Garden of the Gods, over the Rockies, 10,800 feet above sea level up steep gradients where four 500-ton locomotives are required to haul small passenger trains, and by bus to San Francisco, he journeyed.

He paused at Salt Lake City and stayed at Reno, Nevada, one night. "The unsnarling of matrimonial entanglements, which is the first industry of Reno," he said, "is a very profitable one. Nevada has no public debt, no succession duties and no income tax. That is the Eden I saw there."

In Chicago he visited the Rotary Club, which boasts the largest membership, 641, in the world. He heard a noted athlete as guest speaker, who demonstrated his wrestling abilities before the gathered Rotarians.

Found Mexico Interesting

Oakland City and Hollywood were in turn visited by Mr. Herity. Down to Mexico City he went where he was accorded a very warm welcome. Here he met men who had visited Canada, and Belleville. One of the "greeters" was a Rotarian who addressed the Belleville Club three or four years ago.

Mexico City which boasted a population of one million ten years ago now has doubled that number. The Toltec Indians who inhabited Mexico centuries ago left structural proof of their intellect and ability in the age-old pyramids still evident in Mexico. Beautiful carvings still adorn the Indian temples. Sculptures carved 600 years B. C. and other records of this ancient race are still evident.

He described Mexico's newest volcano which originated from a small puff of smoke found by a peasant plowing in his fields. Suddenly erupting dense clouds of smoke and lava, the young volcano within a year became a mountain 1,500 feet in height.

Mexico is potentially a great nation and her experiences have been similar to that of Russia, Mr. Herity said. She received her "Magna Charta" in 1917 and has since been passing through a period of reform and education. She has universal suffrage and labor reforms and is now giving the greatest consideration for the common man.

Mexico gave the land back to the Indians. ("Why doesn't our government do that"? asked Jimmy Bone), and they are doing a splendid job. The Mexican Indian is not degenerate but is bright and intellectual.

Past President John Deacon who presided in the absence of President Pinkston, introduced the speaker. Rotarian Bill Morrison thanked him.

Must Use Care In Addressing Mail To Navy Personnel

The importance of mail to personnel of the Navy being always correctly addressed that it may reach its proper destination with the least possible delay is being stressed by postal authorities. They stress that the first source of information as to an individual's address is the officer of rating himself.

For Navy personnel serving in Canada mail should be addressed directly to the shore establishment and place, while mail to personnel serving on ships in Canadian waters should be addressed to the ship, care of Fleet Mail Officer, at the appropriate base, namely Halifax, Cornwallis, Sydney, Vancouver, Esquimalt or Prince Rupert. If there is complete doubt as to the ocean in which the addressee is serving, mail should be addressed to the ship, care of the Fleet Mail Office, Ottawa.

Mail for Canadian Naval personnel serving in the United Kingdom or in H.M. or H.M.C. ships overseas should be addressed (a) c/o Canadian Fleet Mail Office, Great Britain, London, England; (b) c/o Canadian Fleet Mail Office, H.M.C.S. "Niobe", Glasgow, Scotland; (c) c/o Canadian Fleet Mail Office, Londonderry, N. Ireland.

For Canadian naval personnel serving on Newfoundland-based ships mail should be addressed: —Name of Ship, c/o Fleet Mail Officer, St. John's, Newfoundland, while mail for personnel in shore establishments should be addressed, H.M.C.S. "Avalon 1" (or 11) c/o Fleet Mail Office, St. John's, Newfoundland.

—In each case the following information should be given: Rank or rating, Surname, followed by initials. Official number, R.C.N., R.C.N.R., R.C.N.V.R., or attached R.N., name of establishment or ship.

Independent Commission To Be Named by Dept. of Municipal Affairs To Study Gas Utility

Council Rescinds By-Law to Put Question of Disposition of Gas Plant to Ratepayers at Coming Election

After being advised by A. J. B. Gray, Deputy Minister of Municipal Affairs for the Province of Ontario and J. P. Coombs, supervisor of Municipal Affairs, and receiving a recommendation from the Industrial Commission of the Chamber of Commerce, the City Council at their regular meeting on Monday evening rescinded the by-law, that was to be put to the ratepayers at the municipal election respecting the disposition of the gas plant. The council members voted unanimously to rescind the by-law and also unanimously passed a motion "that the Minister of Municipal Affairs be requested to appoint such expert board or committee as he may deem proper or necessary to study the gas problem in Belleville from all angles and aspects and to report to the City Council its findings and recommendations as soon as possible and further that the Belleville Public Utilities be asked to concur in this motion".

Minister Gives Report

Mr. Gray was the only speaker heard and he spoke only after many members of the council had voiced their opinion on the question much of which was a repetition of what had been said at previous meetings on this question. Mr. Gray also listened intently to the brief submitted by Ald. Pringle, who read the report of the meeting of the Industrial Commission of the Chamber of Commerce on a questionnaire, that was proposed by Ald. Allin. Mr. Gray stated he was of the opinion, that only an independent report would straighten the whole matter out and if he were asked by the council he would appoint an independent committee to study the question from all angles and report the findings and also submit the recommendations of the committee as to the ultimate disposition or retention of the gas utility in the city. The members agreed, that this was the best information they had received in many years of squabbling over this question and were unanimous in their approval of the suggestion. Mayor Rollins heartily thanked the speaker and asked him to take back to the Minister of Municipal Affairs the grateful thanks of the council for his interest in the city's behalf.

Acquainted With Situation

Ald. Armstrong stated he was of the opinion the officials were present to acquaint them with the situation and what steps were needed to gain control of the plant. "I am going to speak straight from the shoulder and say that I do not think that the gas utility in the Public Utilities Commission has been given fair consideration in the matter of sales promotion for the utility and this may be the reason why we are in the present position" said Ald. Armstrong. Ald. Butler said the Alderman was substantially correct and went back to the time in 1940, when he was chairman of a gas committee to investigate and bring in a report. At that time we were asked for $12,000 and $8,000 was to be used to line the retorts. The committee met with the Commission and discussed the question and went so far as to introduce an independent man, who wanted to purchase the plant. We asked the Utilities for all the facts and received only a yearly statement. The committee was partly in favor of closing the plant at that time but the question was shelved because of the war. "There were too many industries in the city using the utility", said the Alderman and "the plant had to be continued". "Ald. Pringle then introduced a notice of motion early in the fall and then a recommendation to put it to a vote of the people and I supported the motion hoping to get a true opinion but it has always been my belief, that the council should have an independent report on the question."

Lots of Possibilities

Ald. Clapp maintained, that the gas plant had plenty of possibilities and that there was a large sum to be paid whether the plant operated or not by 1960. He wanted to know if a Private Bill could be prepared to have the Utility returned to the Corporation from the Commission or whether another vote had to be taken. He was informed by Mr. Gray that he thought a vote had to be taken before the utility could be returned. Mayor Rollins told Mr. Gray and Mr. Coombs, that the council at their committee meeting had decided to hold the industries in Belleville and therefore had decided to rescind the by-law. He proposed that the utility come back to the city because he said "the commission would like to be free of it" and then appoint a gas manager and a commission of the council to handle the utility. He asked the Deputy Minister Mr. Gray what procedure was necessary to get the utility back to the corporation. "You must understand", said the Mayor, "that the people voted not so long ago to have the utility remain with the Commission."

Ald. Pringle then read the voluminous report from the Industrial Commission on the question and this herewith follows:

"On the above date and at the above hour the Belleville Industrial Commission held a special meeting at the Chamber of Commerce rooms to give consideration to the problem involved in the present situation in regard to the Belleville gas utility.

"There were present Messrs. R. A. Pringle, Chairman, Industrial Commission, J. O. Herity, Secretary, and Messrs. C. B. Morgan, Lorne McDougall, J. B. Boyce, Bruce Lattimer and H. J. Allin, members of the Commission, and Guests: Messrs. L. E. McLean, General Manager Corbin Lock Co. of Canada Ltd., Arthur Pellow, General Manager Consolidated Optical Co. of Canada Ltd., L. A. Young, General Manager Stewart-Warner Alemite Corp. of Canada Ltd., and Mr. Harold Bateman, Comptroller City of Belleville.

"Mr. Pringle, the chairman, thanked the guests for their presence at the meeting and briefly stated the purpose of the meeting.

"The replies to the questionnaires sent out by the Commission the preceding week were placed on the table. There were 38 replies received from a total of 70 that had been mailed out to the various industries and business places in the city that were regular commercial users of gas. The replies showed that 28 consumers considered gas absolutely essential in manufacturing or other processes carried on in their factories or establishments, while 10 intimated that they could secure a satisfactory substitute or get along without gas entirely.

"30 of the replies indicated that they knew of no efficient substitute for gas in their operations. 8 of the replies stated that substitutes for gas could be found. 4 of the replies indicated that the user considered that the civic gas plant had been efficiently operated by the Public Utilities Commission. 14 expressed the belief that the gas plant had not been efficiently operated. 20 users made no reply to this question.

Suggestions Made.

"Numerous suggestions were made about possible improvements to the gas plant in a physical way or in its operation.

"The Chairman then called upon the three representatives of major industries in Belleville to give the Commission some information in regard to the use of gas in their manufacturing operation.

"Mr. Arthur Pellow, Manager of the Consolidated Optical Co. of Canada Ltd., stated that some years ago his company had been informed that there was a strong probability that the Belleville Gas plant would be closed. They then took steps to substitute electricity for gas wherever that was possible. But there were still certain processes in the optical industry for which he knew of no satisfactory substitute for gas. This was particularly true where the molding of glass was a part of the operations. In Rochester, for instance, where the mammoth Bausch & Lomb optical works were located gas is the only medium used. The same was true of the Standard Optical Co. at Geneva, N.Y. Mr. Pellow went on to say that his company had under contemplation greatly extended manufacturing operations at Belleville. This would mean not only doubling the present output but if the program were carried through it would probably mean a plant three times as large in its output as they had at present. Gas would be absolutely essential in his opinion, in many of the operations to be carried on. There were substitutes that could be used in some of these operations but acetylene, for instance, would be very tedious and dangerous.

Statement Given.

"Mr. L. E. McLean, General Manager of the Corbin Lock Co. of Canada Ltd., then made a statement. He said his company had for a long time been contemplating important extensions to the Belleville plant. The company had quietly been securing land in the vicinity of its present factory to permit of extension to the buildings in various directions. He had just received at the factory blueprints of a proposed extension which would double the capacity of the present plant and give 49,000 additional feet of floor space. The number of employees would be doubled and the annual payroll would well exceed half a million dollars. A meeting of the executive of the American Hardware Corporation, the holding company of Corbins and its other constituents, was to be held at Toronto on December 1st next. At this meeting a decision would almost certainly be reached as to whether the proposed extension at Belleville would be carried out or not. It was his own belief that if the Corporation were not assured of the continuance of the gas service at Belleville that the proposed enlargement would not take place and it was very probable that the Belleville plant might be closed and a new location sought.

"There were several operations in his plant that could not be successfully done through any other medium except gas. These parts he was continually sending away to have manufactured or treated at Dundas, Ontario. This involved long delays and was not satisfactory. There were other parts that were imported from the United States which would be manufactured at Belleville in the proposed new plant if they were assured of a sufficient and satisfactory supply of gas.

Extensions in Mind.

Mr. A. L. Young also stated that the Stewart-Warner Alemite Corporation of Canada Ltd. had in mind very great extensions to their present Canadian plant. He also intimated that a number of their operations could not be carried through in a satisfactory or efficient manner unless by the use of gas. If the gas could not be secured at Belleville Mr. Young gave warning that he believed his company would seek another location which in many respects would be more favorable than the present location at Belleville. Their most important customers were located at a considerable distance from this city and they could better be served if the factory were located elsewhere. Some of their operations could be carried through by the installation of electrical or other equipment but a careful estimate had shown that the capital investment for the installation of electricity would be $42,921. For oil equipment of the same capacity the cost would be $34,419.

"A meeting of the executive of the Stewart-Warner-Alemite Corporation would be held at Chicago on December 11th when the question of continuing at Belleville would be seriously discussed. It was his belief that if a vote were taken by the ratepayers of Belleville and an adverse majority given to the continuance of the gas plant here on December 4th his company would almost certainly seek a new location.

"The members of the Commission looked over the last available annual report of the Department of Municipal Affairs for Ontario. The report showed that there were nine towns and cities in Ontario operating publicly-owned gas plants where artificial gas was used. These were Belleville, Brockville, Guelph, Kingston, Kitchener, Owen Sound, Peterborough, Stratford and Waterloo. Five of these towns and cities operated at a profit while four, including Belleville, showed losses. The city of Guelph, for instance, had 3,261 customers for gas. The total income was $163,000 and they had an operating surplus of $380 and a current surplus of $13,276. The town of Brockville, with a population considerably less than Belleville, had 1,296 customers while Belleville had only 639. The city of Kingston had 3,251 customers and an operating surplus of $5,114 and a current surplus of $40,113. Kitchener had 7,159 customers and a revenue of $184,000, a surplus of $8,671 and a current surplus of $177,000. Peterborough had 2,620 customers, and a revenue of $73,000; an operating surplus of $4,521 and a current surplus of $9,563. Waterloo with a population of only 9,384 had 1,168 customers, a revenue of $30,400, an operating surplus of $1,585 and a current surplus of $22,058.

"Several members of the Commission expressed amazement that so favorable a showing could be made by other municipalities in the Province while the showing of the Belleville Gas Plant was so unfavorable."

MOTION RE GAS UTILITY

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce held on November 16, 1944, the following motion was unanimously carried,-

Moved by I. G. Hefkey
Seconded by E. P. Bernstein and carried: That in view of the gravely unfavorable situation likely to be created by discontinuance of the operation of the Belleville Gas Plant, the City Council be earnestly solicited to take every means in its power to prevent such discontinuance and use every endeavor to make our gas utility an outstanding success the same as has already been done by neighboring towns and cities such as Brockville, Kingston, Peterborough, Guelph, Waterloo and Kitchener.

Mover for Questionnaire

Ald. Allin stated he was the mover in the Industrial Commission to have a questionnaire sent out to the gas users because I thought the motion was premature and after the questionnaire had been completed the Industrial Commission was of one mind to recommend the rescinding of the by-law to be put to the people. Ald. Woodley stated he had voted against the motion because there were letters from the government at the Commission office stating that the Federal Govt. did not want the plant to close during the war period and that $1,500 was given the Utilities Commission for the purchase of coal to keep the plant in operation. The Alderman cited figures to show that average cost to manufacture gas at the plant is $1.37 per 1,000 cubic feet without the debenture cost, while the cost to the domestic consumer is $1.56 per 1,000 cubic feet and to the commercial consumer $1.03 per 1,000 cubic feet, and Mr. Gray remarked, that it would be impossible to show a profit at those figures.

Ald. Armstrong showed that a great debt had been placed on the taxpayer through the gas plant and there had been a loss in operation in 23 years out of 25 and it was the opinion of the council, that the plant could be better operated by an independent commission and that was the reason Mr. Gray and Mr. Coombs had been invited to attend. This concluded the discussion, the recommendation of Mr. Gray was accepted and the by-law was rescinded and Mr. Gray promised that the commission would be appointed immediately upon the letter from the council asking for the appointment being received.

Interim Report Discussed

Another matter of heated discussion was the interim report of the special committee appointed to examine the salaries and wages paid to the civic employees and to decide whether or not the various offices are properly staffed and to report back. The report that was discussed follows.

Belleville, Nov. 16th, 1944.

His Worship Mayor Rollins and Gentlemen of the City Council:.

Your committee appointed to examine into the salaries and wages paid to all Civic Employees with a view to making any advances or reductions in such salaries or wages, and to decide whether or not the various offices are properly staffed, and to report back to you, beg to report as follows:—We have held meetings on October 24th, Nov. 1st and Nov. 15th

We have taken statements from the heads of the following Departments:—City Hall Staff—Comptroller Bateman; Fire Department—Chief Lynch; Public Works — City Engineer Mott, and we have gathered considerable data. At our meeting November 15th it was decided to make an interim report to you, and to make the following recommendations for immediate action, if the recommendations meet with your approval.

Recommendations (1) That Clifford Mathews be appointed Public Works Clerk and Assistant to the Assessor. His hours to be as follows —Each morning to be spent on office work connected with the Public Works Department; each afternoon to be spent on assessment work or other office work under the direction of the Assessor-Comptroller.

(2) That a Working Foreman be appointed in the Public Works Department, and said Foreman to be in charge of all Public Works projects and Employees, and we suggest for this position William Peoples.

(3) That the City Engineer's By-law be amended as follows (a) That there be added to Clause "3" of said by-law—but the Working Foreman is to have full charge of employees in his department, to make recommendations as to engagement and discharge to this Council through the Comptroller. Provided that in an emergency the Foreman shall have authority to engage and dispose of temporary help.

(b) That Clause "6" of said by-law be deleted therefrom since it is covered by the Comptroller's by-law.

(c) That the following be added to 10th clause:—Except on authority from the Comptroller.

(4) That no city official shall leave his office during office hours without first reporting to the Comptroller's office as to where he can be located.

Your Committee ask your authority to continue their work until they have completed the duties for which you appointed them.

All of which is respectively submitted: N. Wilbur, Chairman; W. H. Rollins, Mayor; Chas. L. Hyde; F. G. Chamberlain; H. J. Clarke, Secretary.

Agrees With Report

Ald. McDougall stated he was in full agreement with the report as it would provide supervision in all departments and Ald. Butler agreed. Ald. Clapp was of the opinion, that it was creating a new job. "The comptroller has done certain work free of charge for the government and in the past year he has needed no assistance but suddenly he needs assistance. If he was overworked last year he never told the council," said Ald. Clapp. At this point Ald. Allin moved that the report be sent back to committee but it was defeated and the discussion continued. Mayor Rollins objected to an insinuation, that all the cards had not been laid on the table. "This is the honest consideration of the committee and we ask you to accept the interim report. If you don't have a man with the men working in the Public Works department, the work is not done" said the mayor. "I think it is a step in the right direction."

Only Giving Strength to By-law

Ald. Chamberlain: "We gave the comptroller certain powers under the by-law under which he was hired and now we are giving the teeth to carry out his duties". Ald. Clapp was insistent, that the whole report be tabled but Ald. Clarke explained, that the committee had not completed their work and was asking only that the work accomplished so far be accepted by the council. Ald. Armstrong stated that Mr. Mathews had had 14 years of practical and technical knowledge in the department and he thought the clerical work for the comptroller could be assumed by a person without technical or practical knowledge and leave Mr. Mathews free to carry on the work he was now doing. "I also think that the City Engineer is better qualified to select the material required for a job than the comptroller and I know of one instance of where the material bought by that department was absolutely useless for the job intended," said Ald. Armstrong.

Yeas and Nays Called

On the question of transferring Mr. Mathews from his present job to the one recommended in the report the yeas and nays were called and Aldermen Clapp and Armstrong were against and Mayor Rollins, Aldermen Allin, Woodley, Butler, Pringle, Follwell, Wilbur, McDougall, Chamberlain, Trudeau, Hyde and Clarke were in favor. The council was agreed unanimously, that a foreman of public works was needed if Mr. Mathews was removed from his present job. The report was then adopted.

Amends Dance Hall By-law

Mr. Harold Carruthers and William O. Steer, appeared before the council asking for an amendment of the dance hall by-law permitting the holding of a dance on Monday, New Year's Day, the dance to start at twelve o'clock on New Year's Eve. Under the by-law as now drawn there could be no dancing in the city from midnight on Saturday until three o'clock in the afternoon of the following Monday. Mr. Carruthers explained that elaborate preparations were going forward for dancing on New Years Eve but these would have to be cancelled if the by-law was not amended. Ald. Allin asked if the delegation was not a little late in the request and why they did not write into council about the matter. Mayor Rollins inforced the Alderman, that a letter had been read in committee on this very question. A committee was formed to amend the by-law with power to act but under the heading of motions Ald. Clapp moved that the by-law be amended to read 12.05 A. M. on Mondays when that day is a statutory holiday. The motion was unanimously carried and the dance halls in the city will be able to hold a New Year's dance.

Recommendation Defeated

A recommendation was passed in committee on Thursday night appointing David Peoples at the city garbage disposal grounds for one month at a salary of $18 per week but the recommendation was defeated because Ald. Armstrong argues that his duties were not designated nor the hours of work and Ald. Clapp that the pay was not sufficient. Ald. Armstrong also stated that his employment would not eliminate the expense of the bulldozer. Morley E. Smith was given the contract for the removal of snow from the city streets at a price of $2 per hour actual plowing time. An agreement will be signed to this effect.

Turned Over to Police

A letter was received requesting that dogs be not permitted to run at large to ruin flower beds and gardens in the summer time. The letter was sent on to the Chief of Police and the dog catcher for their action in the matter. The Board of Education asked the council to complete the work of putting a wire netting on the railing on the walk over the overhead bridge on North Front Street. Ald. Armstrong explained, that the netting was impossible to obtain but the council gave the Alderman power to act in the matter so that the children crossing the walk would be given protection.

To Investigate Speeding

Ald. Butler introduced a motion which was passed that would have the police investigate the speeding on Dundas Street, North Front St. and Highland Avenue. The Mayor appointed a committee of Ald. Butler, Allin and Hyde to investigate this matter with the police and report back. A number of inquiries were made by the Aldermen and answered by the respective chairmen. The Mayor read a letter from Dr. A. E. Berry of the Department of Health in Toronto written to Dr. J. B. McKay of this city respecting the condition of the river during the past summer. The letter speaks for itself and is as follows:

"This will acknowledge your communication of the 26th in reference to the above. I have also had a telephone conversation on this with Dr. Cronk, the Medical Officer of Health, and he advises us that this discharge has been stopped for this year. This material is similar to that discharged from another distillery in the province and with which we have been dealing. It is, of course very concentrated waste, and is quite difficult to treat.

"It is our thought, now that the discharge has stopped, that steps will be taken to find out just how this is to be handled in the future. It may be that the company will not have to operate as they have been in the past, but if operation is required, then appropriate steps must be taken to deal with it and to treat it in such a manner that it will not cause offense when discharged into the stream. This, of course, will involve a considerable expense and a real difficulty.

"I doubt if much can be done by making further examinations of this material. There is nothing in it that is toxic I should say to fish other than the fact that it contains a great deal of organic material, and when this decomposes in the stream it uses up the oxygen.

"It is my thought that an investigation of this whole situation will be made shortly, at Belleville, and it may then be possible to advise the company on just what will be required. We are also hoping to take it up with the Dominion as we understand the orders to carry on the operation, come from that source."

A. E. Berry

There being no further business the council adjourned. It was necessary to extend the time one hour in order to complete the business of the evening's agenda.

Allies Reaching the Rhine

With six Allied armies hammering the German lines along the routes of invasion towards Germany and the announcement that the French 1st Army troops have reached the Rhine River and the deepening manoeuvres by the Russians along important routes, the world waits to see the outcome of the double movement in east and west driving forward against Germany. With the armies of the Allies exerting tremendous pressure, the German lines on the west were reported to be sagging.

The time which Hitler dreaded was the time when on two fronts the United Nations would batter at the German citadel. Today the Allies are on territory of the German Fatherland and the full pressure of Allied power is going to be exerted from east and west.

Ruthless and Savage

The ruthlessness of the German military machine is again shown. This time it is in Norway. The Huns cannot hold that country. Already they are retreating in the far north before the Russians. But they do not merely retreat, they burn and lay waste the land in Finmark Province though scores of thousands of dwellers depend upon that land for food. So wantonly have the Germans acted that they have driven thousands to wander over the snows of the north. Crown Prince Olaf stated on Monday that the land may not be habitable for years to come, that invalids and young children are dying by the wayside and that 61,000 inhabitants are brought face to face with the prospect of death by starvation or by cold.

Another sign of the barbaric in the Hitlerite Huns is seen in their forcing whole sections of the population to accompany them in retreat in order to try and save them—the Huns—from bombardment from the sea and from Allied air attack. It was similar deeds that Germans performed in eastern and northern France in the days of the invasion of that country. They drove the people to the highways and careless of their safety drove through them to avoid Allied attack.

All their barbarism in Norway has brought Germany nothing. Her army of occupation has to retreat to the south.

Why Secrecy is Necessary

When the British Prime Minister revealed that V-2 rockets had been landing on Britain for some weeks, many wondered why it had been necessary to keep this information secret for so long.

"The Germans knew they were firing the V-2's. What was the point of secrecy?" has often been asked in the past few days.

It is not widely realized that security has developed a science and, without an expert knowledge of it, it is often difficult or impossible to see why certain things should be kept secret.

In the case of the V-2, the longer total secrecy could be preserved the better, because the Germans had no means of knowing if any or how many of these weapons were falling on the British Isles and were therefore kept in a state of anxiety and uncertainty.

Today they still do not know how many are reaching England and, what is more, they do not know where they are falling. To give them any indication would be the equivalent to spotting for the enemy artillery.

When the flying bombs first fell on England, the uninitiated were puzzled by the delay in publishing the fact that some 'duds' had been found and the secrets of the design discovered. "The Germans know how they work," it was said, "so what is the harm of publishing details?"

The answer was that once the German scientists knew how much we knew, they might deduce the counter-measures. The longer they were unable to do this the more chance of our counter-measures proving effective. Modern scientific warfare is a constant battle of wits, and enemy scientists must be given no advantages.

Another reason for security on many subjects which are well known to the enemy is that if they know how much we know they may discover and eliminate our sources of information.

It is a complicated subject and only those trained in security know how far it is safe to reveal information of various kinds, without risk of the enemy deducing something useful to him or damaging to us.

Security officers, too, know the enemy techniques of piecing together something valuable from a number of unconsidered trifles, which people may reveal without realizing their importance.

As Germany gets nearer and nearer to defeat, there will be a tendency to think that security is not as important as it was. But it will be just as vital as ever—the Japanese have ears, too.

Moving

(Creemore Star Editorial)

We moved into our new home this week and are much disturbed, both mentally and physically. Such confusion we haven't experienced before. We never realized we had accumulated so much in the line of junk and household effects. Our new home is smaller than the one left and the furniture needs a lot of squeezing to get it to fit. The trouble with furniture is it just won't be squeezed. Our better half was O.C. and we a humble private. We had to take a lot of orders. It was a long, hard struggle, but at last we were actually out of one house and into another. The trouble was the carpenters and decorators were making alterations and some of the rooms were not ready. Our front room at present looks like the result of a cyclone. Our present problem is to find what we want for immediate use. This morning we couldn't find our shaving kit. The O.C. lost a strip of milk tickets. We slept last night in an old shirt because we couldn't find the box in which our pyjamas were packed for transit. And to complicate matters we developed a head cold that left us groggy. "The show must go on" is a theatre slogan, and likewise the paper must go to press. Our machine operator is waiting for copy and our thoughts are all mixed up between our mislaid night apparel, a new lock for the front door and many other problems. If this issue seems off flavor, dear readers, please be considerate. If you know qanything about moving, we know you will.

Fireproof Paint

(Des Moines Register)

For some time chemists have been working on fire retardants for such inflammable materials as clothing, lumber, etc. Now they propose that walls, ceiling, doors and window frames be coated with fire extinguishing materials.

Possibly encouraged by the results obtained in wartime fire fighting with dry ice, a new paint mixture includes calcium carbonate and a resin made by treating paraffin wax with chlorine. When exposed to high temperatures, this coating breaks down chemically, giving off carbon dioxide gas which, being heavier than air and incapable of supporting combustion, tends to smother the fire automatically.

If desks, pianos and other furniture are coated with this new compound, it may save wives a lot of agony by silently extinguishing the offending fag.

Power of Science

(Halifax Herald)

Here's a remarkable statement by one of Britain's leading scientists. Speaking of the enormous increase of available mechanical power, he declares:

"All the mechanical power, wind-power, horse-power, water-power used in the England of Queen Elizabeth for a week would not equal that released in one moment by one 8,000-pound bomb."

What a world we would have with the inventions and discoveries of science harnessed to the constructive service of man.

Norway's Busy Merchant Ships

(Norwegian Bulletin)

Norway's greatest contribution to the war is its merchant fleet. Before the war, Norway's merchant fleet of 4,834,000 gross tons was the fourth largest in the world, her tanker fleet third. About five-sixths, or over 4,000,000 gross tons comprising more than 1,000 ships manned by 30,000 seamen, was saved and joined the Allies.

LINES FOR THE OPEN SEASON

I've never learned the way to pluck
The pretty feathers from a duck,
Nor am I one who can abide
The feeling of a duck's inside.
So, friendly nimrod, keep your game,
Or if you give it, clean the same.

I've always lived a sheltered life
And left the kitchen to the wife.
I have no wish for partridge meat
That comes with feathers, bill and feet.
Grouse hunter, here's my solemn word:
I can't dress any sort of bird!

Now, with the season drawing on,
A few brief lines on venison.
I do not like it; have no wish
For deer meat on my dinner dish.
So mark me down as "out of luck,"
Friend hunter, when you pass the buck.

NUGGETS OF KNOWLEDGE

Blue laws were not peculiar to the Puritans of New England in Colonial days. In 1617 Governor Argal of the Jamestown colony in Virginia issued an order that every person must go to church on Sundays, under penalty of slavery during that present week for the first offense, a month for the second week and a year for the third.

In 1620 and 1621 wives in the Jamestown colony sold for 100 pounds of tobacco each, worth three shillings a pound. Within a year or two the price of wives went up to 150 pounds of tobacco.

Captain Isaac Hull of the U. S. navy was the nephew and adopted son of General William Hull of the U. S. army. Captain Hull redeemed the family name by his famous victory over the Guerriere only three days after General Hull surrendered his army at Detroit during the War of 1812.

Vice President Thomas Marshall once declined a nomination to a seat in Congress on the ground that if he accepted he might be elected.

For about 1600 to 1858 the British dealt with India only through the East India company. In the latter year the East India company ceased and control of India was assumed by the British Crown. In 1876, under the leadership of Prime Minister Disraeli, the title "Empress of India" was conferred upon Queen Victoria.

Many writers go wrong on "fulsome." As now used the term does not mean full or complete despite its origin, but gross, disgusting by excess; as, fulsome flattery, fulsome praise.

The boundary between Massachusetts and Connecticut is a straight line with the exception of one jog or notch. This deviation from the straight line is known as the "Southwick jog." When the boundary between these two states was readjusted it was necessary for Massachusetts to cede to her southern neighbor a long, narrow strip of land to make the line straight. In turn Connecticut ceded Massachusetts an equivalent area—the Southwick jog.

Three Leaders Will Discuss House Procedure

Ottawa, Nov. 21 — (CP)—Procedure for one of the most unusual meetings of parliament ever held in Canada is expected to be discussed today with leaders of the opposition parties.

Two of the three opposition groups are holding caucuses in advance of Wednesday's opening of the Commons the sitting to decide their attitude and the third, the Social Credit group, may caucus soon.

Progressive Conservative members will meet today and the national leader, John Bracken, is expected to attend.

Attending the C.C.F. caucus, along with members of the House, will be members of the National Council who are here to complete arrangements for the organization's convention which takes place next week in Montreal.

The session is unusual in that so far as is known the government has no concrete motion or piece of legislation to place before Parliament.

The government is expected to seek a vote of confidence in its policy of the voluntary system to provide overseas reinforcements.

McNaughton Has No Seat

The meeting will be out of the ordinary in that the Minister primarily responsible for carrying out the policy, Defence Minister McNaughton, has no seat in the Commons.

To meet this situation it is expected members of the House and Senate will be asked to meet Thursday in an informal gathering to hear him make a statement.

The procedure is understood to be that when the House meets tomorrow Prime Minister Mackenzie King will report Col. Ralston's resignation and Gen. McNaughton's appointment. He also will table correspondence between himself and the former minister.

Certain other documents possibly including reports on reinforcements and the latest figures on enlistments and numbers and classes of home defence troops may also be tabled.

It is not known whether Mr. King will introduce any argument into his statement on the first day. The first caucus of Liberal members probably will be called Thursday after the House generally has been put in possession of the facts on which the government expects debate to proceed.

At this caucus government supporters will have a chance to argue the case in privacy before they are called to take a public stand.

Pictorial Record Of Canadian Advance Soon on Display

By DON CAMPBELL
(Reuter War Correspondent)

Brussels, Nov. 21 — (CP-Reuter) —A pictorial record of the 1st Canadian Army's advance from Caen in Normandy to Beveland, Holland, soon will be on display in the Dominion. The work of three army artists, it consists of 75 water colors and sketches.

Already, hundreds of civilians and Allied soldiers have seen the exhibition presented here in the Palais Des Beaux Arts.

The three artists — Captains O. N. Fisher, Vancouver, W. A. Ogilvie, Montreal and G. D. Pepper, Toronto — belong to the 2nd Canadian Field Historical section.

The object of their work is to ensure that a graphic record of the Canadian Army in action shall be maintained. Some pictures are a dramatic and accurate reproduction of what thousands of Canadian soldiers have seen.

Capt. Pepper's "Hitler's Youth" is simply a group of Nazi crosses. "Landscape," by Capt. Ogilvie, shows two graves in the immediate foreground with a hospital tent in the background.

After a London exhibition the display will go to Ottawa and other cities in Canada.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

THE CRI NEEDS SUGAR COATING

Sometimes I get pretty depressed about the situation. To be sure, it is an everyday occurrence for correspondents to speak of cri in their letters, but what maddens me is the way nearly all of them interject a parenthetic comment, half explanatory, half humorous, lest I misunderstand. Then, too, once in a long while I see the word cri in print—I mean elsewhere than in this column. Even such precious items are usually spoiled by the use of quotation marks around the word, if not by some misleading inference as to its significance. The earliest proper use of the word I can find in my scrap book is an item published in the Atlanta Constitution on or about May 23, 1927, telling that the mayor was forced to retire to his home on account of a slight indisposition — the mayor was stricken with cri (said the item, and no funny business either).

Then, too, there are so many Wiseacres who get a half-baked notion that I am trying to popularize a new name for the common cold for no particular reason and anyway what difference does it make what you call it?

What I have been trying to do is to teach the truth about Common Respiratory Infections (indispositions, illnesses and complications responsible for three-fourths of the practice of physicians and surgeons), and here are some of the fundamentals which neither layman nor physician nor health authority can evade or gainsay:

1. Neither the victim, nor his customers, employers, parents, teachers, corner druggist, nor even his physician can tell in the early stage what his cri (presumably one of the Common Respiratory Infections) will prove to be.

2. Calling it cri (pronounced kree) in this stage of the indisposition of illness is playing fair. For that is acknowledgment that of course you don't know whether you are coming down with measles, infantile paralysis, simple coryza, pneumonia, influenza, or any one of a dozen more or less communicable diseases whose onset is characterized by similar symptoms.

3. If you are mulish and ignorant and vicious and brazen enough to attempt to palm it off on your associates or the public as a "cold"—well, in that case I hope it kills you before you pass the infection on to any innocent bystander.

4. There is no such specific indisposition, ailment, illness or disease as "the common cold" — and any physician or health officer who prates about "the common cold" is just prating.

5. You can find no description or definition of "the common cold" in scientific medical literature. Of course not. How could even a professional medical textbook writer define or describe a condition without entity?

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Foot Itch

We have tried various preventatives and remedies for foot itch and it is the belief of most of the students here that Whitfield's ointment is most effective—as you told us some years ago. (L.R.D.)

Answer—Your experience is similar to the experience of many others. On request (no clipping will do) I'll send any reader who provides stamped pre-addressed envelope, pamphlet on Foot Itch which tells how to use Whitfield's ointment, powder, liquid and other preventatives and remedies for dermaphytosis, ringworm, athlete's foot.

Please send me your pamphlet on Allergy, instructs a correspondent, on a postcard.

Answer—Ol 'Doc Brady furnished the pamphlet. But he refuses to pay the freight too. So try again, my economical friend, and don't forget to send a stamped envelope bearing your address.

Proud Mother of 12 Children Has Given Five Sons to Cause of Empire

Behind the quiet smile of Mrs. Jenny Fraser, who lives at the corner of South Front and St. Paul Streets lies a story of human interest that bespeaks the determination and success of a woman suddenly faced with the problem of bringing up twelve children alone.

That occurred ten years ago, or fourteen to be exact for the late Irvin Fraser, former Hydro employee, was an invalid for four years prior to his death in 1934.

Mrs. Fraser met and conquered her problem, despite the fact that she underwent five operations during the period immediately following the death of her husband.

Today justifiable pride gleams in her eyes. She gave five sons to the cause of Empire. Alex, a gunner in the artillery is back in civil life after serving at the front. Wounded he lost a toe and suffered other injuries that warranted his discharge.

Don, who has lost an eye and has been severely wounded in the arms, is in an English hospital. Earl is serving with an ammunition column somewhere in France. Mac has just left for overseas and Wilbert is ready to leave for the Great Adventure at any moment. Four other boys and three girls comprise the family.

After she had regained her health following the death of her husband, Mrs. Fraser rolled up her sleeves and "went to work." Naturally, she was given a mothers' allowance which helped to a great extent. But her family pride did not permit the continuance of this when the "boys were old enough to go to work."

She came through with flying colors and a proud family is holding a proud mother in great respect in these days.

Her fondest wish? That all her boys come safely home to her so that once more the thirteen Frasers will meet again under the family roof.

French Wife of Canadian Elected To French Consultative Assembly

By MARGARET ECKER
(CP Staff Writer)

Paris, Nov. 21 —(CP)— The first woman elected to the consultative assembly of the provisional French Government after French women were given political equality with men was the wife of a Canadian — Marthe Simard, wife of Dr. Andre Simard, Quebec city surgeon.

Madame Simard, who was elected in November, 1943, when the assembly met in Algiers, now is one of the 12 women who took their seats in the Luxembourg Palace when the provisional government sat for the first time early this month.

The honor came to the attractive, blond woman — she is a grandmother although she doesn't look it — following her work in organizing Free French committees in Canada after the fall of France in 1940.

"I, took no interest in politics before this time," said Mme. Simard, who has lived in Canada since her marriage in Paris to Dr. Simard. "Even though I lived in Canada I always loved France dearly, so when in 1940 Gen. De Gaulle called on all French people to rise and fight fo rthe freedom of our country, I knew it was my job to work for a Free France in Canada and so prove that the French wouldn't tolerate German domination."

Mme. Simard said she believes the interest of French women in politics will grow and when the new French Government is elected women members will sit in the chamber of deputies. "Most parties will put forward one woman candidate for election," she said. "Otherwise they will be accused of conservatism or anti-feminism."

"It is not in the tradition of older French women to participate in political life. But younger women in the towns are showing a growing interest in the government of France. For many women the important role they played during the resistance was a school for politics also. Through their fearless work they won the respect of the men.

"In fact some say that women were more courageous and worked harder to support Gen. de Gaulle than men. If it hadn't been for the women, much resistance work wouldn't have been possible. The women of France will learn to value the right to vote highly.

"Mothers of the nation have seen two wars and now will use their vote to influence a foreign policy that will maintain peace. None of them want to see their sons or grandsons in another war which they may be able to prevent by intelligent use of the vote."

WEDDINGS

HASLIP—BLACK

A pretty, but quiet wedding was solemnized in Saint James' Rectory, Toronto, on Saturday, November 18, by the Rev. Father Hayden, when Georgina Creage Black, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Black, of 369 Windermere Ave., Toronto, became the bride of Writer Thomas James Haslip, stationed with the R.C.N.VR., at Kingston, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. David Haslip, of Belleville.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was lovely in a gown of Romance blue, complemented with a matching hat of velvet misted with a shoulder length veil. Her accessories were black and her corsage was of Briarcliffe roses and lily-of-the-valley.

Miss Peggie Haggerty, of Toronto, as bridesmaid, was wearing a particularly attractive afternoon ensemble in orchid hue, matching velvet hat dusted with shoulder length veiling, black accessories and corsage of lemon yellow baby 'mums and fern.

The groom was attended by Mr. Cornelius Lynch, of Belleville.

Following the ceremony, a reception for the immediate families was held at the King Edward Hotel. The bride's mother chose a two-tone dress of black and rose crepe, hat to match, black accessories and corsage of Johanna Hill roses and fern. The groom's mother was attired in a turquoise blue gown accented with black accessories and corsage of Talisman roses and fern.

For the wedding trip to Detroit, Michigan, the bride selected a fuchsia wool dress, a fuchsia hat, beige coat and accessories.

On their return, they will take up residence in Kingston, where the groom is attached to the office staff of the R.C.N.V.R.

HILL—BRANT

Mohawk Reserve.—A wedding of considerable local interest took place Nov. 4, in Buffalo, N.Y., when Miss Bessie Brant, youngest daughter, of Mrs. George Frank Brant, Belleville, and the late Mr. Brant, became the bride of Pte. Carl Hill, son of Mrs. Samuel Sawyer and the late Wm. Hill.

The bride wore a white crepe dress and veil of silk net illusion. She was attended by Miss Charlotte Hughes as bridesmaid, and by her little niece, Patsy Brant, as flower girl. The groomsman was Hugh Hill, the groom's brother.

The wedding dinner was served at Tyne's Restaurant, and a reception was held in the evening in the Senaca Street Community Hall.

The young couple will make their home in Buffalo until Pte. Hill goes overseas.

Among the wedding guests were Mrs. Catharine Hill, Mrs. John Maracle and Mrs. Gordon Zachariah, of the Reserve; Mrs. Bessie Hill and Mrs. Blanche Mastin, Rochester; Mrs. Isaac Penn and Joseph Maracle, Toronto.

PASCOE—REID

A very pretty wedding was solemnized in the Melrose United Church, on Thursday, November 16, when Marjorie Ruth Reid, youngest daughter of Mrs. Acile Reid and the late Mr. Reid, of Toronto, became the bride of Vincent Langmark Pascoe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Pascoe, Sr., of Melrose, with Rev. Mr. Lougheed officiating.

The wedding music was played by Mrs. Charlie Bates.

The bride, given in marriage by her mother, was charmingly gowned in a floor length dress of Duchess satin and lace with Queen of Scots headdress. She carried a bouquet of American Beauty roses and her only ornament was a heart-shaped locket given her by her father.

The bride's only attendant was her sister, Mrs. Lloyd Adams, Toronto. She wore a gown of yellow chiffon with matching headdress, and carried a bouquet of yellow roses and fern.

Mr. Morley Pascoe, brother of the groom, acted as best man. The ushers were Messrs. Vernon Pascoe and Eugene Pascoe, also brothers of the groom.

During the signing of the register, Mrs. Bruce Sherman sang "I Love You Truly".

Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was held at the groom's home for the immediate relatives and friends. The bride's mother chose a Queen's blue two-piece dress with black accessories and wore a corsage of yellow roses. Mrs. Pascoe, mother of the groom, wore a plum colored two-piece dress trimmed with sequins and with back accessories and a corsage of yellow roses.

Assisting with the lunch were the Misses Helen McAvoy, Eva Henley, Jean Badgley, and Rose Henley, under the supervision of Mrs. Roy Badgley and Miss Beatrice MacFarlane.

The groom's gift to the bride was a chest of silverware, and to their attendants suitable gifts were given.

Later the bridal couple left for a wedding trip to the United States, the bride travelling in a brown tailored suit and matching accessories. On their return they will reside on the groom's farm near Melrose.

UNIONDALE AND WALLBRIDGE W. I.

A most interesting joint meeting of Uniondale and Wallbridge Women's Institutes was held at the home of Mrs. Ross Dafoe, 6th Con. Sidney, on the afternoon of Nov. 10th.

Mrs. Morley Sine, President of Uniondale W.I. ocupied the chair and opened the meeting.

The speaker of the afternoon was Miss Masters of the Institutes Branch, Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto. She spoke on "Citizenship in the Rural Community." Throughout her address she stressed the fact that woman's greatest task lay in preparing for a post-war world. She must help to think in formulating new ideals upon which our new world is to be built. She urged that more women act as school trustees.

A vote of thanks was moved by Mrs. Bert Bush. Mrs. Alton Sine conducted the Current Events quiz, which was won by Mrs. B. Haman. After the singing of the National Anthem, the Wallbridge women served lunch.

Holloway Street Y.P.U. Meeting

Holloway St. Young People's Union held its regular meeting on Monday evening with the president, Noreen Frederick in the chair. The meeting opend with a song service led by Norma Arkils with Lois Harper at the piano.

Following a short business period the Christian Fellowship group took charge.

The theme of the Worship Service, led by Dorothy Mitts, was "Jesus, The Man." The Scripture lesson and commentary were read by Beverley Goodfellow. Ray Gunsolus led in prayer.

An interesting and challenging message on Jesus, the Man," was brought to the Young People by Marion Daniels who stated that Jesus was the kind of person we ought to be. Miss Daniels showed how Jesus was tempted as we are and had problems as all of us have but was able always to overcome them by standing firmly for the right and drawing His strength from God, the source open to all. She urged the Young People to take Christ as an example and like Him, have a compassionate love for men of every degree, that because of their sympathy, and kindness friends might approach them, as they did Him, confident that they may obtain help. A quotation from Stanley Jones, "The Son of God became the Son of Man that the Sons of Men might become the Sons of God," brought this stirring address to a close.

Miss Ethel Smith delighted all with two vocal solos.

A vote of thanks to Miss Daniels and Miss Smith was moved by Maizie Foster.

The meeting closed with a sing song of spirituals.

Red Cross Assists War Brides On Arrival in City

English war brides with that characteristic shyness of new people seeing a strange land and strange faces for the first time are made to feel at home upon arrival here through the kind offices of the local branch of the Red Cross Society.

Red Cross officials here immediately upon receipt of the identity of war brides and their next of kin in this district, and that includes the north country, notify the latter and make all arrangements for reunions to be held immediately upon arrival.

Plans were completed for the tea and sale to be held at the home of Mrs. J. Forrester. The auxiliary again set aside $25 to furnish Christmas parcels for indigent patients at the hospital. Mr. Barclay, hospital administrator, demonstrated and explained the working of the new oxygen tent, purchased for the hospital by the auxiliary. He said it had been used several times and was a most welcome addition to their equipment. It was decided to hold a dance during December. Mrs. Wray introduced Miss Horton, the new supervisor of nurses, to the members present.

The highlights of the area convention were given by several of the ladies who attended. Mrs. Clifford Ketcheson ably dealt with the topic "This is Our Battlefield" calling attention to the battleground in our own hearts and our work on the home front.

A short Armistice program followed. The poem of 1918 — "In Flander's Fields" by Mrs. Percy Ray and the 1944 version of the same poem by Mrs. Ralph Sills were given followed by silent prayer and the National Anthem.

Several articles of knitting and sewing were handed in, and it was reported 21 quilts had been completed to date this year.

Montreal, Nov. 21 —(CP)— Boston's perennial Bill Cowley and Toronto's young Gus Bodnar were tied atop the National Hockey League scoring race in official figures released by the league today, with Sweeney Schriner of Toronto close behind the leaders.

The official statistics showed Cowley and Bodnar tied with 18 points each, one more than Schriner, who is expected to miss the next few games because of injuries. Tied for fourth spot were Lorne Carr of the Leafs and Syd Howe of Detroit with 16 each.

Canadien's Toe Blake slid into sixth place, with 14 points, one notch lower than he was a week ago. Clint Smith of Chicago and Elmer Lach of Canadiens were tied for seventh spot with 12 each, one ahead of Mud Bruneteau of Detroit.

Schriner was well out in front among the goal-getters with 11, four more than any other player. In a five-way tie for runner-up honors were Carr, Blake, Jud McAtee of Detroit and Maurice Richard and Buddy O'Connor of Canadiens. O'Connor made one of the best showings of the week, collecting five points to shoot up from 24th place to 13th.

I've been secretly practicing with Dunlop and Garibaldi for a week and Mr. Watson is in for the surprise of his life," Katan told Promoter Tunney yesterday as he protested the presence of any coach or adviser in Watson's corner for Wednesday night's championship bout. Tunney says he'll be on hand to personally supervise this big bout.

BOSTON BRUINS BADLY NEED GAME WITH CANADIENS

If Habitants Win They Will be Tied With Leafs for First Place

By ROBERT NIELSEN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Art Ross' staggering Bruins will have the comfort of home surroundings when they take on Montreal Canadiens at the Boston Garden in the only National Hockey League game tonight, but if the records mean anything it's about the only advantage they'll have.

The Bruins' only other home game of the season was a victory, 7-5, over the tail-end Chicago Black Hawks, the only team they have beaten to date. They have a decision over Hawks in Chicago and a draw with New York Rangers to their credit, giving them five points in eight games and an uncertain grasp on fourth place, one point ahead of the New Yorkers.

The powerful Canadiens will be shooting for the two points needed to put them in a first-place tie with Toronto Maple Leafs. In their previous encounters with Bruins this season, the Montrealers scored 3-2 and 6-3 triumphs.

A Boston victory would leave the standings unchanged, with the Bruins still four points off the pace of the third-place Detroit Red Wings.

Kingpin of the Rossmen, as usual, is veteran centre Bill Cowley, proving again this season with Bill Jennings and Herb Cain that he can make a high-scoring forward line with any wingmen available.

Meanwhile, the front-running Maple Leafs lick their wounds in preparation for a Thursday night joust with the Bruins in Boston. High-scoring Sweeney Schriner will be out of action another two weeks with a severe Charley Horse suffered in Saturday's game with Chicago, but centre Gus Bodnar, injured the same night, is expected to be back in action.

Toronto, Nov. 21 — (CP)—Selection of budding hockey players may be placed on a strictly scientific basis in the future if George P. Smith of Westmount, Montreal, can get the bigwigs to adopt his new system of grading, classifying and card-indexing players according to their abilities.

Al (Montreal Herald) Parsley described the new Smith system which the latter has tried out successfully as athletic director of Westmount schools.

To classify a player, Smith gets some spectator with a broad knowledge of the game to watch the youngster and grade his hockey abilities while he skates through a complete game. The judge marks on a card the player's good and bad points — in skating, stickhandling, teamplay or lack of it, shooting form, and so on.

He is given three such tests or examinations, and by that time the coach has a complete and intimate file on every angle of his play. There isn't any guesswork about the thing, because everything is down in black and white.

Then the coach can talk over the player's weaknesses and deficiencies and help him correct them. Numerous hockey men around Montreal, like Paul Haynes, Jimmy Ward, Toe Blake, Wilf Cude and other pro stars, have taken quite an interest in the experiments, and Parsley predicts much more will be heard of the Smith selection system before many years have passed.

Incidentally:

Baz (Montreal Star) O'Meara reports that Billy Gilmour of the old Ottawa Silver Seven and Victorias is in Montreal now . . . There is no dearth of topnotch hockey coaches in northern Ontario, especially in the North Bay district. Of seven outstanding coaches two have had professional experience—Pete Palangio of St. Louis Flyers, Montreal Canadiens and Chicago Black Hawks, and ex-Toronto Leaf Pep Kelly. There is only one fly in the ointment — there aren't enough players to go around, to keep all the North Bay coaches busy . . . the football season was no sooner over for University of Western Ontario Mustangs' coach than he rolled up his sleeves and pitched into the task of forming a basketball squad. Coach Johnny Metras says he has talent enough this year to turn out quite a squad.

Junior Hockey Club Calls Annual Meet

Prospects for Strong Junior O.H.A. Group Favorable; Elect Officers Thursday

The outlook for Junior O. H. A. hockey in the Bay of Quinte and Trent Valley districts looms up as the strongest set-up, with many potentialities towards the increased popularity of the teen-aged game, enjoyed in many years. With this thought in mind President Thos. Flurey, of the Belleville Junior Hockey Club, has called a general meeting and election of officers for 1945 to be held in the Hume Arena Thursday evening. Interested hockey patrons and business men are invited to attend and assist in Belleville's icing of a strong well equipped junior team in 1945. Last week the 1944 executive met at which time Secretary-treasurer Wally Berry reported a goodly bank balance was on hand following last year's operations.

Otherwise throughout the district Tweed, Stirling and Trenton of last year's O.H.A. group are organised and ready to face the 1945 junior O.H.A. barrier. Two newcomers in the ranks are expected this winter as already Campbellford and Hastings have posted their entry fees with Secretary Billie Hewitt of the Ontario Hockey Association and may be included in the local group, bringing its numbers to six junior clubs for district operation. Under these circumstances it is essential that a strong executive be organised to guide the destinies of the Belleville juniors of 1945. A large attendance of local hockey fans is urged for Thursday night's re-organization meeting at the Hume Arena.

What's Doing in Sport

By The Canadian Press

Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis spent his 78th birthday in St. Luke's hospital, Chicago, yesterday, where he had spent the past 49 days for treatment. The diamond's arbiter-in-Chief complained because his release from the hospital had not yet been decided upon, although his condition was reported satisfactory. With him was Mrs. Landis who is recovering from a fractured wrist.

Individual scoring leader in the American Hockey League race yesterday was reported to be Tom Forgie, ace of the Hershey team who had rolled up a total of 20 points on eight goals and 12 assists. His nearest challengers were Bob Gracie, Pittsburgh, and George Patterson and Hector Pozzo, both of Hershey, with 16 points each. Gooden of Hershey was close behind with 15 points.

Although the £300 purse for his last bout in London, Eng., is being held up by the British Boxing Board of Control after it had been declared "no contest," Danny Webb, Montreal Negro featherweight, goes into the ring at the Queensberry Club Dec. 6 for a clash with PO. Ben Duffy of the Royal Navy.

J. Graham Brown's Seven Hearts scored a two-length victory in the 19th running yesterday in the Riggs handicap at Pimlico to take down $21,800 first money, after Twilight Tear had been scratched just prior to race time. Bon Jour was second. Seven Hearts registered his third straight win and boosted his year's earnings to $87,335.

Word From Tweed.

According to Sam Curry, publisher of the Tweed News, Jerry Quinn's Tweed junior O.H.A. squad is not only anxious to play regularly this year, but keen on the subject. It seems the Tweed Kinsmen Club has renovated the Tweed rink, painted the boards of the hockey cushion and generally brightened the place up in preparation for the 1945 hockey season. (And that's what we call real community service club enterprise.)

However, the Tweed kids want no part of a bye into the O.H.A. playdowns, but on the contrary feel they are entitled to a full share in competition along with Stirling, Trenton, Belleville and come what may. No doubt other clubs in the district feel Tweed is ready to take its place as a regular club in O.H.A. competition, which is as it should be.

In Belleville a meeting of interested hockey fans has been called for Thursday evening at the Hume Arena when the annual election of officers will be held and the local junior O.H.A. ship launched.

Regarding the future of junior hockey in Tweed Publisher Curry went at great length to assure his readers a good season of the winter pastime would be assured them in 1945. In part Mr. Curry said—"Coach Quinn has the nucleus for a fair club and most of last year's players are still here. Jack Beatty, Glenn Connor, Earl Curry, Bruce Gehan and Junior Dales along with a number of other fledglings, will be ready for the starting gun. Coach Quinn has lost his good spark-plug "Spike" Meraw and also his two goalers, Cyril Trudeau and Heath Jones, but there should be someone coming along to replace them. Joe Price is also an absentee."

Plane Beats Human.

From somewhere in the South Pacific comes a story by United States Marine Correspondent Theron Rice telling of a race between a man and a medium bomber.

Said Sergeant Theron, formerly of the Washington Evening Star:

"The bomber won, by fractions of a second.

"It all began when Lieut. Chester Ruffin, of Moorehead, Miss., a former track star at Perkinston, Miss., junior college declared he could beat a Ventura medium bomber in a race of no more than 100 yards. Lieut. Commander Elwyn L. Christman of 3724 1-2 Park Boulevard, San Diego, Calif., accepted the challenge.

"Although Lieut. Ruffin led most of the way, the momentum gained by the plane pushed it across the finish line five feet ahead. The bomber's time was 9.7 seconds, Lieutenant Ruffin's 9.95 seconds".

Remember When.

The University of Toronto won their second intercollegiate rugby title at Toronto 11 years ago today when they rode over Queen's for a 10 to 3 victory. The game was played after the regular I.R.U. schedule was completed with Toronto and Queens winding up tied at the top. Halfback Jack Sinclair was the star of the Toronto squad.

Ready to Go.

Promoter Frank Tunney called rink manager Walt Gerow to say he had lined up a complete preliminary card for tomorrow's Empire championship show between Katan and Watson. "We are bringing a new man to Belleville in the person of Alf Smith of New York, a mighty wrestler who meets Tom Collins, of Buffalo. Last week Collins took Al Dunlop over the ring jumps, much to the satisfaction of the Hume Arena fans, so I'm giving him Smith for this week", stated Tunney. The opener sees Dunlop and Gyroffy tangle.

LESSON NO. 537

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Declarer is a careful cat who has a job to do. He sometimes does no more than that and proudly thinks he's through. But dummy is a fussy guy who hurts him to the quick by truculently asking why he muffed an extra trick.

With many declarers, it seems sufficient unto the task to take just enough tricks to fulfill the contract. But a good player is not satisfied with that. He looks for more.

When dummy hand goes down, your better player looks to see the safest way of taking his needed tricks. But if he can do so without jeopardizing his contract, he tries for extra tricks.

Sometimes the chance for an extra trick or more is there in spite of anything opponents might have done. More often, however, such a chance comes only from something an opponent failed to do.

See what happened in this deal:

♠ 3
♥ K J 3
♣ A K 5 4 3

WEST
♠ J 6
♥ 10 9 8 5 4
♦ A Q 10
♣ 9 8 2

EAST
♠ 10 9 4
♥ 7 2
♦ J 7 5 4
♣ Q J 10 7

SOUTH
♠ A K Q 8 7 5 2
♥ A Q 6
♦ 9 6
♣ 6

South was declarer at a six spade contract. West could have had the first trick with the diamond ace. But instead, he led a heart. Given the chance, south planned for 13 tricks.

Seven clubs are known to be with opponents. They are expected to split four and three. If they are so, after four rounds of clubs the fifth dummy club will be good.

Anticipating the need for entries to dummy, the first trick was taken in south with the heart ace instead of queen. Return of a dummy small club was trumped by south. The small south heart was won by dummy heart jack and another small dummy club was trumped.

Dummy heart king overtook the south heart queen. Dummy then led the king and small club. On these, south sluffed both his diamonds.

That's all brother.

ST. CATHARINES WINS SEASON'S SENIOR OPENER

Defeat Staffords 3-2, Concessi Scoring Two of the Goals

By The Canadian Press

St. Catharines drew first blood in the season's opener of the O. H. A. Senior series last night at Toronto with a 3-2 victory over Staffords but had to come from behind twice to turn the trick. With only five seconds to go, it remained for Stuart, on a pass from Blink Bellinger, to slam the payoff counter past goalie Thomas after Concessi had tied it up for his second time in 12:30 of the final frame.

In both the first and third periods Dafoe scored to put Staffords out in front only to have Concessi register the equalizer for the Saints. It was a keen but clean tussle, only five penalties being distributed, of which Grigor of Toronto drew two. St. Catharines offenders were Delmonte, Tottle and Reynolds.

The opening Junior A fixture at Port Colborne resulted in a 3-1 victory by Toronto Young Rangers. Rangers scored a goal in each period, with Dewsbury, Dillon and Ringer each finding the mark. Croft got the lone tally for the losers in the second period. There were 14 penalties, Dillon of Toronto getting three of them and Cox and Savicky two each.

TRENTON

Donald C. Mawson Graduates Pilot At Hagersville

Trenton, Nov. 21 —(Special)— Among those to graduate as pilots at Hagersville on Friday last was Sergeant Pilot Donald C. Mawson, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Mawson, 98 Henry St., Trenton.

Sergeant Mawson, who is just 20 years of age, enlisted at Toronto in July 1943 and trained at Lachine, Que., Toronto, Windsor and Hagersville, where he received his wings.

On the day following his graduation he was married in King Street United Church, Trenton, to Miss Norma Vanner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Vanner, Trenton.

Bicyclist Injured.

Fred Hicks, 17, of 383 Sidney St., received severe injuries on Monday night about 6.15 when his bicycle struck a car owned and driven by Frank Dayman, R. R. No. 2, Brighton, at the east end of the Trent bridge, throwing him through the windshield.

The driver of the car, which was a 1931 coach, reported to police that he was proceeding west on Dundas St. and, travelling at a slow rate of speed, attempted to make a left turn into the Supertest garage on the south side of the highway. He observed a car approaching him from the bridge but was not aware that Hicks was also approaching on his bicycle from the bridge in front of the car and without a light of any kind on the bicycle.

The first the driver of the car knew of the accident was when he heart a shout and felt the bump. Hicks was thrown off his bicycle completely through the windshield of the car, breaking it as well as the headlight of the car. He was taken to the office of Dr. Byrne where it required several stitches to close the wound on his head. He was also suffering greatly from shock and other bruises, but was later taken to his home where he is resting. His bicycle was damaged to a considerable extent.

Sergeant F. J. Taylor of the local police force investigated the accident.

PICTON

Pte. Roy Mack Prisoner of War

Picton, Nov. 21— Pte. Roy Mack is a prisoner of war in Germany, according to a letter received from their son by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Mack. He stated that he was in good health and was being well treated. He had not been wounded and said there was no reason to worry over him. Pte. Mack was serving with the Lincoln and Welland regiment and had been overseas since July 1943. He suggested that his parents get in touch with the Red Cross for information concerning the sending of parcels and letters.

Conservatives Held Annual Meeting

"Our boys overseas are fighting against the things the C. C. F. stands for, namely the regimentation and control of everything which would be involved under the C. C. F. system," declared James Hepburn, M. P. P., at the annual meeting of Picton Progressive Conservative Association.

"The Ottawa government should not be able to retain power at the expense of the lives of our lads fighting and dying in France and Italy, desperately in need of reinforcements, denied them by the Federal Government's policy concerning the zombie army," Mr. Hepburn declared.

George J. Tustin, M. P., stated he understood on good authority, that units were going to the front lacking full strength. He quoted from a letter which stated that a member of the anti-aircraft battery had been taken off and sent to the front line as an infantrymen, without any training being given. This soldier was killed.

Of the C. C. F. Mr. Tustin felt the government control such as that party desires would not be in the best interests of the people.

Officers elected were, president, H. S. Colliver; vice-presidents, C. F. Evans, William Henley; secretary, Arnold Covert; treasurer, J. A. Maher.

Among those who spoke briefly were Reeve William Henley, H. S. Colliver, John Maher, J. K. Welsh, also Wilfred Wilson of Napanee.

GYPSY BLOOD

By MARGARET NORRIS

CHAPTER 14

Mondays to Fridays Anna now attended one of the big city high schools. Saturdays she clerked in a store on what was called a part time basis. Sundays she washed and ironed her clothes in the regular poor working girl fashion and every night she waited on table at the Club Elizabeth.

By following this busy schedule with its many crowded hours, Anna was able to keep up her schooling and eke out a slender living to supplement her fast vanishing roll. The way it melted away was astounding. But she had determined it should see her through a year of school at least.

Anna found the big high school thrilling, though a bit bewildering at first. She felt like a minnow in a school of sharks among those hundreds of boys and girls who seemed so much at home, so aware of what they were doing. But as she watched them more closely she discovered that all were by no means Americans. There were Italians and Russians, Polaks and Greeks, flaxen haired Germans and Danes—representatives from every flag that flies its colors to the encircling sun, and many of them, she was amazed to find, were as ignorant and strange as herself.

At first Anna had been put in a lower grade where everyone was much younger than she was—mere children, in fact, which hurt her pride and made her feel like an overgrown dumbell. But she had had a little schooling in Poland and she was wide awake and alert eager to learn with each of her five senses, so within a few weeks she was transferred to classes where the students were nearer her age. By means of boning a little she was able to hold her own.

Anna attracted no little attention especially among the boys who found her different from most foreign girls and so pretty as to be dubbed a "Queen." They liked her snappy black eyes and her yellow hair and her queer little Slavic accent and the spunky way she answered them when anyone tried to get fresh.

From a stranger forlorn with no "dates" and no "boy friends" she suddenly found herself plunged in a whirl of invitations to petting parties and joy rides from dashing lads with flasks on their hips and flaming youth in their hearts, as well as from others not so dashing but just as devoted.

But Anna's brief experience with parties, the tragedy of Stocky and Ed, the bracelet episode and the week in jail, had made her wise beyond her years. Although desperately ignorant in many ways, yet she could discriminate between the thing that glitters and the thing that is gold better than most girls of 17.

Being a belle, Anna could pick and choose, which she did with amazing fastidiousness, turning down all the undesirables with a blase shrug of the shoulders. Indeed there were few on whom she smiled, for Anna had one fixed ideal and the fact that he was as remote as the stars did not swerve her from her steady purpose.

This policy of magnificent isolation," of cool chilly aloofness, incurred only disgust from Greta, who was still her roommate at the Elizabeth club.

"Idiot!" Greta would say to Anna. "You might as well go back to Poland the way you turn all your chances down. I wish I had some of them."

Greta's fields were for the moment, utterly stripped of game. There remained not even a traveling salesman on whom she could try her wiles. The sight of Anna's well stocked pastures filled her with ill concealed jealousy; it was Anna's duty, she felt, to let down the bars and give her, Greta, free access there.

"Good hunters always hunt in pairs," said Greta. But Anna was obdurate.

There was one lad, Tom, whom Anna liked and he often walked from school with her. One evening he called at the Club after dinner to escort her to the movies. Anna was not at home for the moment, having stepped around the corner on an errand, but Greta caught a glimpse of him waiting there in the mid-Victorian parlor and appointed herself hostess pro-tem until her roommat should return.

Tom wore his clothes with a collegiate ease, had fine dark eyes and what Greta called sex appeal. He filled her requirements of the moment and she was not one to waste time. When Anna returned half hour later there was no sign of Tom in the parlor nor of Greta in their room upstairs. She suspected what had happened.

When Greta returned at midnight her eyes were suspiciously bright and Anna could see by the gleam in them that her conquest had been complete. She asked herself if she really cared and was interested to find that she didn't—not a tuppence—let her have him. But the situation was one that demanded comment and Anna was not one to refrain.

"I see you've enjoyed yourself," Anna observed, an accusing eye on her roommate as she flashed the light for a moment to show her way to bed. Greta smiled knowingly but said nothing. All's fair in love and war.

Then Anna turned over, thought of Harry Baldwin and went to sleep with a smile on her lips.

Saturdays Anna clerked in a store—not the one where she had found the bracelet, but on Fifth Avenue, as the other had been, and one equally beautiful. But now she was no longer a call girl, she sold behind the counter, which gave her an important feeling and proved she was getting on.

Anna's department was cosmetics, on the main floor near the doorway, where the stream of traffic was thickest and restless shoppers surged all day long. She sold lipstick and rouge and all sorts of creams to beautiful pale faced ladies and some who were not so beautiful but ambitious to become that way. They would stand before the counter, purse their lips in the mirror and question the pretty black eyed clerk as to remedies for their facial defects until Anna was so schooled in beauty lore she felt like a plastic surgeon, a mighty demagogue, at whose feet vain women heaped their gold.

Often Anna laughed in her neat little sleeve that she, an untutored immigrant, who had never been rich enough to purchase a pot of rouge in her life, should be advising women who passed their lives in the quest of beauty, suggesting the proper tints for their skins and creams that would efface the wrinkles.

"What type of rouge do you use, my dear?" a handsomely gowned woman would ask her, her eyes attracted to the fine clear color that glowed in Anna's cheeks and lips.

But Anna was too clever to tell her that the sun on the grain fields of Poland had stained her face with the color that does not wash off. Instead she said: "Try this, Madame," in her best selling voice, handing her the most expensive brand of imported rouge in the store.

Anna's reward for being such a good sales girl was three chaste one dollar bills in a slim pay envelope handed her every Saturday night. This was her income for the week.

One noon hour when trade was at its height Anna looked up from her jars and bottles, sensing the presence of someone who was trying to catch her attention. Perhaps it was the sweet, piercing aroma which transcended the odors of cosmetics and recalled something infinitely pleasant, not associated with beauty hints. Perhaps it was woman's intuition or a thought wave winged from a distance that caused her to raise her eye from an insistent customer and glance across the aisle, where stood the beautiful lady of the courtroom — none other than Mrs. Baldwin herself.

A bright smile of recognition lit up her face as she caught Anna's eye, and Anna on her side was so upset she sold blond rouge to a swarthy brunette.

"I just chanced to see you in passing; I'm so glad to see you have such a nice position," Mrs. Baldwin said, moving up to the counter during an hiatus of customers.

Anna, covered by confusion, dropped a $5 jar of cold cream, which only by a miracle did not break, but she managed a very nice smile.

"I want you to meet my son and daughter," said Mrs. Baldwin, indicating two young people who seemed none too anxious to be met, instead chagrined at being detained in the store. Their interest was on the exit instead of the little cosmetic clerk, but being well trained and polite young people, they nodded briefly at their mother's command.

The girl was slight and dark, with bright lips and cheeks and a vivid but rather flower-like beauty, whom Anna recognized immediately as having seen twice before—once in the ball room of the ship dancing with Harry Baldwin and again laughing and chattering with him in the entrance of their Fifth Avenue home.

The young man was more blond, with soft wavy brown hair, and his mother's nice eyes and smile, and a sturdy athletic beauty that spoke of the out of doors. He had an air about him and carried himself with a manner that had sent steadier hearts than a shop girl's into dangerous palpitations.

As for Anna's heart, at sight of him it abandoned its usual function of the pumping and circulating of blood, in its place beneath the fourth left rib, to leap like a startled, fluttering bird into regions of the mouth, where it choked each feeble attempt at sound and threatened to strangle her completely.

"My daughter, Louise, and my son, Harry," Mrs. Baldwin was saying, politely presenting the two restless young people, who were anxious to be off. "This is the young lady I told you of who so kindly returned my bracelet." The pair of them bowed indifferently and then were off, free at last.

"Well good morning, my dear," said Mrs. Baldwin, taking a more dignified leave. And Anna was left to her pots of rouge and her well-nigh unmanageable heart.

"Well, anyway she said to herself, "it's a great relief to discover that that girl is only his sister."

Anna turned to her customers again.

Summer had come. Anna's school was closed; her job at the store was finished, for trade was too light at that season to need the services of "extras;" the last dollar of her slender legacy had passed into history—all the crowded activities of her past six months had stopped, simultaneously with one gesture.

It was as though a fuse had blown, blotting out every light in the house, leaving Anna groping in the darkness wondering which way to turn next. She felt as forlorn and unsettled as when she first landed in New York, an immigrant girl, a year ago. Could it be only a year? Often it seemed like a life time.

Where to go? What should she do? Her mother and the younger children were arriving next month from Poland, and Anna knew well that she would be expected to live with them in the dingy tenement home which would be the best her father could provide—pool her wages with the family funds, help care for the younger children.

"But I won't do that! I won't!" she cried. "Rather than go back to that sort of life I will run away from New York."

Indeed Anna often thought of running away. Summer was calling over the tops of the buildings which cut off the broad horizons. The hum of nature's sweet sounds buzzed in her ears above the jangling noise of the streets. She could close her eyes and see the sun on the fields and feel the moist, cool earth on her feet. Her feet were itching for the road again. The thought of another summer bound in by caverns of steel and cement was almost unbearable to her. Come what may, she must get out of New York.

Anna talked things over with Greta. Greta, too, was tired of shops.

"We might turn tramps," suggested Greta, "and hitch-hike across the country, catching rides with motorists, a pair of flapper tramps. I've heard of girls who did that and got to California and back in one summer."

"But where would we get our money?" asked Anna who was growing wise and mercenary with her wisdom.

"Silly, we won't need any. You can get along without a cent. The poor fish who'll pick you up in his car will also be good for a meal. And if we should get stuck in Chicago, or any wild place like that, we can take a job and work for a week until we get funds to move on."

The idea appealed to Anna whose gypsy instincts would not be stilled. Secretly the two girls laid their plans. They would start the first day of July. They would turn their faces toward the setting sun and follow the gay path of chance. Meanwhile Anna would take a job, any that came to hand, work for a week or until such time as she could clear five dollars, her capital for the cross continental tour. Greta already had that much.

But the best laid plans of mice and men and heart-breaking flappers in their teens "gang aft agley." New York suddenly became very attractive to Greta. A handsome stranger she had met on the top of the bus was whispering sweet nothings in her ear. It was love at first sight for both of them. He offered fields for gold digging of which Greta had often dreamed but never had the chance to explore. To run away at this moment would be madness. She lost her desire to be a flapper tramp. For Greta was not a gypsy at heart.

But even gypsies do not travel alone; they must have a companion along the dusty road and Anna was left desolate again. Life was so dull the clock seemed to stand still; there was no glory or color in the sunrise.

Then one late June morning the clock struck again — peeled out in melodious chimes, the sweeter because their source was so unexpected. Came a summons from Mrs. Wilson, the kind matron at the Service League.

"Anna," she said, "how would you like to spend your summer in the country—a small job for which you would be given some pay—not much, but you would have no expenses so you could lay by all that you earn?"

"Where?" asked Anna.

"Long Island."

The girl gave a little gasp. She was an optimist but she did not believe in fairy tales.

"You remember that nice Mrs. Baldwin whose bracelet you found?"

Did she remember her? Could she forget her?

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking the 2nd half of his first cigar and ma said, Oh dear, the woman at the lybery told me she'd surely have As Sets the Sun for me today, but all she had for me was a lame excuse, and now there's not a thing in the house for me to read. Oh well, you know the old proverbial saying about old friends and old books, I think I'll settle down comfortably with a familiar classic that has stood the test of time, and the next thing I know I'll be lost for hours in the old forgotten scenes, she said.

And she went to the bookcase and started to read the titles, saying, Oliver Twist. Oh my, Dickens—I always swore I'd never stop reading Dickens, but somehow time marches on. The woman at the lyberry had no business to promise if she wasn't positively certain. Pickwick Papers was never one of my favorites, but maybe I'd like it better now, what do you think, William? she said, and pop said, It's worth a try. If you read it aloud I'll be glad to listen in silence, he said.

I cant read aloud, it distracts my attention from the sense, ma said. Thomas Hardy, I used to dote on Thomas Hardy's books. As Sets the Sun was chosen by three different book clubs as their book of the month, drat that woman. Diana of the Crossways by George Meredith, George Meredith was always hard to read but George Eliot was easy, although she really was a woman under a man's name for some reason. Maud Hews told me she couldn't lay down As Sets the Sun till the last word, but she's lent her copy to some slow returner. Little Women, now that's a classic among classics, although it's hardly adult reading, although The Merchant of Venice naturally is. What do you think of The Merchant of Venice, William? she said, and pop said, It's a classic.

The result being ma started to read a little magazine called Highlights from the Monthly Periodicals.

Turns His Wife Into Human Torch

New York, Nov. 21 (CP)—Police said yesterday a 44-year-old house painter, identified as Abraham Gold, had admitted turning his wife into a human torch by pouring a mixture of kerosene and carbolic acid on her clothing, then setting it afire with a match. He was booked on a homicide charge after his wife, Mrs. Bella Gold, 40, mother of four children, died in hospital.

"She nagged me," police quoted Gold as saying. "She said I was beating the children."

Police quoted him as saying he threw a gallon of the fluid on his wife as she stood in the bathroom, set it afire, then held the bathroom door closed until her screams had stopped.

The search is being conducted in the vicinity of Serpentine Lake where Nelson was last seen Saturday while on watch duty. Among the "encouraging signs" was a shot heard yesterday from the direction of Stick lake, north or nearby Apsley.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE

Toronto, Nov. 21 (CP)—Prices were higher for the industrial, gold and western oil stocks in the early session while the base metals were down slightly in the index on Toronto exchange today. Turnover was fairly light at 272,000 shares for the first three hours.

The Yellowknife group led in the advance of the gold stocks. Giant at 860 was up 55 cents. Frobisher at 5.90 was up 40 cents. Bear at 1.68 was up 14, Negus at 1.18 was up 3 and Conwest had a small gain.

Most industrial groups, including the utilities, liquors, foods, steels and papers did better. The 7 per cent pfd. Abitibi gained to 1.22 and the 6 per cent pfd was down a point.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

New York, Nov. 21. (AP)—Selected stocks, paced by rails and industrials, extended their recovery in today's market and favorites hit tops for the year or longer with gains of fractions to better than a point. Short covering here and there, in addition to a mild revival of investment demand based on dividends, earnings and post-war business prospects, served as the principal rising stimulant. Best prices were shaded in most cases near the fourth hour.

At peaks for 1944 were Southern Pacific, Union Pacific and General Steel Castings Pfd. In front the greater part of the proceedings were U. S. Steel, Chrysler, Montgomery Ward, Kennecott and Standard Oil (N.J.) Occasional losers were American Can, Du Pont, Philip Morris and Cerro de Pasco. Canadian issues were firm, posting fractional gains.

Letter From Eire

By J. H. MURDOCH
Canadian Press Correspondent

Dublin, Nov. 21 — (CP)—Recommendations for improvement in post-war years of the great Eire cattle-rearing and dairying industries have been presented to the government by a government committee of experts.

The importance of these industries to Eire could hardly be overemphasized and to some extent they affect Canadian, Danish, Australian, New Zealand and Argentine competitors in the British market.

Eire's dairying industry is admittedly at low ebb and it will take several years to put it right. The committee's report notes that cattle and dairy produce represented 36 per cent of the total value of Eire's agricultural exports in 1940-41.

Breeding stations for cattle will be established if the committee's recommendations are accepted. In these stations the best possible pedigree cows and bulls with a high milk inheritance will be made available for breeding purposes to the ordinary farmer.

To improve the standard of milk production a comprehensive scheme of milk testing will be started. At present only 6.6 per cent of the country's cows are tested for milk yield.

Dublin, whose turbid manners are a part of her tradition, has acquired a sense of discipline. She has accepted the queue system.

"Does this change of heart betoken a simple sullen acquiescence with 'emergency' conditions, or does it represent a genuine change of heart on the part of the populace at large?" asks a writer in the Irish Times. "What will happen when and if the 'emergency' restrictions are removed — when there will be, in addition to bacon and fresh bread, trains and buses enough to spare?

"Will Dublin return to her old tradition of every man for himself, or will the new practice of orderliness have taken such a grip of her as to have become second nature?"

LT.-GEN. CRERAR PROMOTED TO RANK OF FULL GENERAL

Charles Foulkes Lieutenant-General and A. B. Matthews, Major-General

London, Nov. 21 —(CP Cable)— Announcement came today from Canadian Military headquarters in London that Lt.-Gen. H. D. G. Crerar, 56-year-old commander of the 1st Canadian Army, has been raised to the rank of acting General and that two other high-ranking officers also have been promoted.

(In Ottawa, National Defence Headquarters announced that the Army commander was given the permanent rank of General.)

Gen. Crerar thus becomes the first Canadian to attain the rank of General in the field. Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton, formerly commander of the 1st Canadian Army and now Defence Minister in the government of Prime Minister Mackenzie King, was promoted from Lieutenant-General recently on his retirement from the Army. Sir Arthur Currie, who commanded the Canadian corps during the final stages of the First Great War, was made a general after the war ended.

In the other promotions, Maj.-Gen. Charles Foulkes of London, Ont., commander of the 2nd Canadian Division, was made acting Lieutenant-General, and Brig. A. B. Matthews, D. S. O. of London, Ont., commander of the Royal Artillery of the 1st Canadian Division, was made acting Major-General.

C. M. H. Q. said the promotions were considered particular marks of distinction for the outstanding successes of the Canadian Army in the European campaigns in the west and in Italy.

Skilful Leadership.

The announcement of the promotions said Gen. Crerar's "skilful leadership of the 1st Canadian Army in the campaign through Northern France, Belgium and Holland has contributed greatly to the successes achieved by the armies of the Allied nations."

Gen. Crerar became army commander last March, taking over from Lt.-Gen. Kenneth Stuart who himself succeeded Gen. McNaughton in December, 1943.

It has been widely stated that the present offensive in the west was possible largely because the Canadians succeeded in clearing the coast of France, Belgium and Southern Holland, thus opening up vital ports and clearing a way for the use of Antwerp, the most valuable port.

Given Outstanding Job.

Reviewing the Canadian army campaign in Western Europe, C.M.H.Q. said that from the assault beaches in Normandy, the Canadians advanced to the Caen sector where the Germans decided to put up a desperate stand. As the Canadians ground ahead, using novel tactics, the British 2nd Army and Lt.-Gen. Omar Bradley's American forces used Caen as a hinge for the trap which was fashioned for the German 7th Army in the Caen-Falaise pocket.

Gen. Crerar then ordered a new attack to help liquidate this pocket and open the way to the lower Seine.

Then the Canadian army was given a new outstanding job—winning the channel ports so that men and materials could be hastened to the front. They pushed along the coast, rolling up the West Wall as they went.

They captured Le Havre, Dieppe, Boulogne, Calais and the entire Pas de Calais area, liberating southeast England from long-range gunfire and from robot bombs, excepting the few fired from aircraft.

Finally Gen. Crerar's troops, including British, Polish, Netherlands, Belgian, Czech and American units, were ordered to take control of the Scheldt estuary, which developed into a dirty month-long nightmare battle in bad weather and over flooded terrain. Casualties were heavy but finally the German 64th and 70th divisions were smashed and the estuary was in Allied hands.

ALL CLAIM SHARE

Brussels, Nov. 20 — (CP-Reuter) —Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg have all claimed a share in the military occupation of Germany, the Belgian Foreign Office has disclosed. The claims were made in a common memorandum drawn up by the three governments in reply to questions raised by the European Commission in London as to armistice conditions.

CORRESPONDENT MISSING

New York, Nov. 20 (AP)—John J. Andrew, 24, United Press War Correspondent in the China-Burma-India theatre, has been reported missing in action since Nov. 5, the United Press said yesterday. The War Department said Andrew was missing after an air operation in the Asiatic theatre.

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

With the R.C.A.F. Overseas, Nov. 21 — (CP) — FO. John Louis Grande, air gunner from Montreal, has been mentioned in Hellenic Air Force dispatches for participation in successful operations with a Greek squadron which recently joined the Balkan Air Force.

He is one of 15 British and Dominion air gunners who more than a year ago entered the light bomber squadron because the Greeks lacked aircrew of this category.

Sgt. R. H. Wates, flight engineer from Victoria, is a member of one of the most cosmopolitan crews in the R.A.F. Bomber Command. Many parts of the Empire are represented in the crew of the big Halifax.

The Skipper comes from South Africa, bomb aimer and navigator from New Zealand, wireless operator from Australia, mid-upper gunner from England and the rear gunner from Wales.

It's open season on the abundant wild life around the Nighthawk squadron airfield.

Flt. Lt. Jack Young of (11116 88th. Ave.) Edmonton, squadron medico teamed up with local farmers in a shoot and brought back two pheasants, three partridge and a woodcock. FO. Tony Talevi of (186 Belanger Ave.) Montreal, bagged two partridge with a 25 rifle.

PO. E. R. Partridge of Toronto is probably the only grandfather flying with an operational squadron in the R.C.A.F.

Married at 16, he now is 34. His 17-year-old step-daughter, Joyce, recently presented her husband with a baby girl.

Partridge is "grandpappy" to the boys on his station now.

Flt. Lt. E. S. Smith of Toronto has been appointed a flight commander in the R.C.A.F.'s Red Indian Spitfire squadron operating from a forward base in The Netherlands. He has two enemy aircraft to his credit.

Smith took over from Flt. Lt. Roger C. Wilson of Toronto who has completed an operations tour and been posted to non-operational duties.

The Leaside Squadron's fitters, riggers, armorers, instrument men, electricians, wireless mechanics, radio mechanics and photo section — the men who maintain the unit's Halifaxes — can take a bow.

During September the squadron set a Canadian bomber group record in the all-important matter of non-starters and early returners from bombing missions because of mechanical trouble. Well over 200 aircraft were sent out with never a mechanical failure.

Additional Fags Needed Overseas

With the approach of the Christmas and the New Year's festive seasons the demand for Canadian cigarettes for Canada's fighting forces reaches its annual peak. With this thought in mind the Kinsmen "Fag Fund" has already shipped additional fags to every Belleville boy serving overseas and on the high seas who are included on the fund list. However, additional smokes must be provided for New Years, as well as all other months of the calendar.

Each and every reply received by Chairman Buster LaBarr indicates just how much Canadian cigarettes are appreciated in Italy, Holland, Belgium or wherever Canadian troops are engaged in active fighting against the common enemy. As long as cigarettes are available it is the duty of those remaining at home to provide smokes for the boys who are risking their lives daily that we at home may enjoy a cigarette in pleasure. Contributions to the fund may be given to Chairman LaBarr or any Kinsmen.

In last week's account of the Kinsmen Fag Fund operations it was stated the Recreation Alley bowlers had contributed one hundred dollars to the fund. This figure is only for the period since the current bowling season opened in October. Since the inception of the fund the Recreation Alley bowlers have contributed upward to $1,200 towards sending smokes overseas.

The list of Belleville boys sent 300 cigarettes each through the Kinsmen Fag Fund this week include:

Hon. C. D. Howe - Minister

WONDERING WHEN you can get a telephone?

That's a hard one to answer . . .

You see, it depends on a number of things beyond our control.:

—on how many present telephone users may give up their service;

—on how much of the equipment thus released may still be needed for war purposes;

—on how much new equipment the manufacturers, still busy on war work, can send us; —on the local situation in your particular neighbourhood (conditions vary greatly between localities).

So the only answer we can honestly give to all those whose names are on our waiting list for telephone service is that we are trying to be fair to everybody, and that all will get telephones, in order of application, just as quickly as they become available.

On Active Service Giving Wings to Words

Buy War Savings Stamps and Certificates Regularly.

G. W. Proctor Manager.

We Can Buy Our Way Into a Breadline!

History is a meek little word that covers a multitude of suffering. And only through profiting by past mistakes...will we suffer less! Remember how in the last war folks "blew" their money. Needless spending caused prices to rise .... so that by 1918, the you buy today for 89c cost $1.85 then; while baby's coat was compared to a similar coat at today. This was inflation and all too soon it was followed by the inevitable depression! That's why our government is determined to prevent inflation now.....why there are price ceilings and other anti-inflationary measures to hold the cost of living down and keep our dollar value high. And YOU help prevent a future depression and keep your dollars high in value... every time you pass up a needless luxury ... invest your money wisely ... and avoid black market spending.

Make This Pledge Today!

I promise to give my support to keeping the cost of living down. I will buy only what I need. I will observe the ceiling whether buying or selling goods or services. I will pay off old debts, save for the future, invest in Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates. And I will support taxes which help lower the cost of living.

Keep Your Dollar Value High!

FRENCH CAPTURE MULHOUSE

American Forces Within 26 Miles Of Strasbourg

Great Tank Battles Rage From Aachen Southward

By WILLIAM FRYE
(AP Staff Writer)

London, Nov. 22 — (AP)—French troops captured the Maginot Line fortress city of Mulhouse today and part of the staff of the imperilled German 19th Army while Americans to the north punched within 22 miles of the greater stronghold of Strasbourg on the Rhine.

The break-through of the U. S. 7th and the French 1st Armies on the southern end of the western front erased a definite German front along the northern slope of the difficult Vosges mountains, encrusted in snow.

The last German resistance dissolved in Metz and the official fall of that fortress city was announced while troops of four American divisions of the 3rd Army were cleaning their guns. Metz, a city of 83,119, is 30 miles northwest of threatened Strasbourg and was ringed by 40 or so forts which made it one of the strongest positions in the world.

1,000 Prisoners

More than 1,000 prisoners surrendered with the staff officers at Mulhouse, normally a humming industrial city of 96,697, 61 miles southwest of Strasbourg. Once a free city of Alsace, it lies nine miles from the German frontier on a tributary of the Rhine.

The drive on Strasbourg carried through German defences before the Savenne Gap and 10 miles beyond the French communications centre of Sarrebourg, where three railroads and 11 highways converge.

Slow and painful progress was reported in the Aachen sector in the north. British 2nd Army troops northeast of captured Geilenkirchen, 12 miles north of Aachen, slowly were eliminating Germans fighting in Siegfried Line pillboxes while American troops fought nearly a half-mile into industrial Eschweiler, six miles northeast of Aachen.

In southeast Holland also the British 2nd Army was making progress.

Melancholy German broadcasts said great tank battles were being fought all the way from Aachen to the Swiss border and "exceed in violence anything hitherto known since the invasion of Europe."

"Von Rundstedt's armies have to cope with a task of the greatest magnitude but notwithstanding some local successes of the Allies, the positions of the German forces in the west are still very strong," Berlin said.

Violent street fighting continued in the southern part of Belfort and a French communique said "The fall of the citadel is imminent."

Heavy Counter-Attacks.

Its left flank collapsed, the endangered German 19th army hurled what strength it could into a counter-attack against French units moving northward along the west bank of the Rhine.

There were no immediate details at Allied supreme headquarters on the strength, exact focal point or initial gains, if any, of the enemy counter-attack. First reports indicated that it was thrown in from the direction of Colmar southwestward past Mulhouse against the flank of the French 1st army armored drive out of the Belfort Pass area.

The enemy thrust apparently was aimed in the general direction of Suarce and Delle—the thinnest spot in the reinforcement line where every road is jammed with more men and supplies moving to the Rhine.

Farther north along the sprawling 400-mile western front, the British 2nd army and three other American armies reported gains as they brought increasing pressure against crumbling German positions.

433 Settlements Freed.

The U.S. 7th and French 1st armies, operating as the 6th army group under command of Lt.-Gen. Devers, have freed approximately 1,800 square miles of French soil containing 433 towns and villages in the first week of their offensive. Since Nov. 19 the two armies have taken approximately 10,000 prisoners.

North of the 6th army group, the U.S. 3rd army merged its holdings inside Germany to a continuous 11-mile front running southeast from near Besch on the Luxembourg border. Lt.-Gen. Patton's men thus solidified their hold on some 25 square miles of enemy soil.

At Metz, Fort Queleu on the southwest surrendered with its garrison of 200 Nazis, but two island pockets and six other forts around that pierced fortress city of France continued to hold out.

The battle inside Germany on the sector east and northeast of Aachen continued. There were indications that the Germans were about to lose Eschweiler. U. S. 1st army troops fought a house-to-house battle there yesterday while other units closed in toward the stronghold from both the north and south.

Close to Rhine.

A front dispatch said the U. S. 9th Army had rolled forward to within 25 miles of the Rhine.

The 9th enveloped nine towns in 24 hours in an advance of 2½ miles and was a little more than a mile from the Roer River. There were some signs of a German withdrawal on the 8th's southern flank but enemy resistance on the northern flank was furious.

North of the 9th's sector the British 2nd Army ground slowly ahead in the Geilenkirchen area where the Germans were putting up a powerful fight.

British troops also chopped deeper into the Thingerman-held sector west of the Maas River in Southeastern Holland.

From north to south, the front looked like this:

The British 2nd Army captured Maasbree and moved to a point four miles west of Venlo. It reached the outskirts of Baarlo, four miles southeast of the Dutch border town of 27,000 and reached the edge of Sevenum, six miles northwest to Venlo.

The U. S. 9th Army gained up to two miles, overrunning nine towns yesterday, and then kept on overnight, adding two mores miles. The 9th battled its way into Fronhoven, three miles northeast of Eschweiler. High ground overlooking both Linnich and Julich, fortified towns on the Roer River barrier, was captured and the Americans moved within sight of the river itself.

The U. S. 1st Army was fighting a hard battle in Eschweiler, strongpoint six miles northeast of Aachen.

Many Obstacles.

The U. S. 3rd Army was running into a harder crust of German defences inside Germany — minefields, road blocks, anti-tank barriers and a curtain of artillery in the forefield of the Siegfried Line. The 3rd has an 11-mile line inside Germany. Some points held are three miles inside enemy territory from Luxembourg.

In Metz, the last Germans except 800 to 900 on Saulcy Island were mopped up and negotiations were in progress for the surrender of five outlying forts. About 1,500 prisoners were caged yesterday, including Maj.-Gen. Kittel, a divisional commander and the highest-ranking enemy officer in Metz.

Lunging on east of Metz, the 12th corps of the 3rd Army battered the Germans back to within 10 miles of their frontier, just west of Saarbrucken, and still was surging ahead.

Between the two flanks of the 75-mile southern front, the Germans pulled back toward the Rhine as the Allied offensive tore through the snowy valleys of the Vosges. The Rilies were 10 miles beyond the communications centre of Sarrebourg and past enemy defences in front of the Saverne gap, a northern corridor to the Rhine plain.

Stories of Machine-Gunning And Hangings Filter Out of Cologne

London, Nov. 22 (CP)—A Reuter News Agency Correspondent with the United States 1st army reported today that a prisoner taken in the German town of Eschweiler, about 35 miles southeast of Cologne, said seven women and a child had been hanged in Cologne, charged with shooting an S. S. trooper, and their bodies were left dangling from the gallows for a week.

The correspondent reported that the prisoner said the hanging, work of the Gestapo, was typical of growing resentment shown by Cologne civilians against German troops.

The prisoner added: "As a matter of fact, the troops themselves are far from keen to go on fighting."

A dispatch in the newspaper Basler Arbeiter attributed to an "extremely reliable source" said today that Gestapo agents and S. S. men machine-gunned Cologne workers during October uprisings and killed 220 of them. Some S. S. men also were reported killed.

The dispatch said the disturbance started when the people shouted: "We have had enough of this dog's life. Peace at any price."

DEVELOPMENTS AT MEETING HINGE LARGELY ON 2 MEN

Prime Minister And Hon. J. L. Ralston Will Likely Lead Debate On Reinforcements

By FRANK FLAHERTY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Nov. 22 — (CP) — As the hour approaches for the opening of what may be an historic meeting of the Canadian Parliament it became evident that developments during the meeting will hinge largely on the words and action of two men, Prime Minister Mackenzie King and Hon. J. L. Ralston.

On the eve of the meeting both kept their own counsel. Neither disclosed what he intended to say or do during the few days of intensive and perhaps bitter debate ahead.

The former Defence Minister, who resigned after Mr. King and the Cabinet declined to act on his advice that home defence troops be sent overseas as reinforcements, was in the capital but not available for questioning.

Mr. King had a busy day yesterday, largely devoted to preparations for proceeding today. At noon he met Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, and M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. leader. The meeting lasted two hours and he then presided over a cabinet meeting which lasted more than three hours.

Some Won't Support Gov't.

In advance of the meeting it was taken for granted among arriving members that some English-speaking Liberals would not support the government on its voluntary system for overseas service.

Just how many will leave the ranks of the Liberal party and on what terms, it is believed, will depend on what they hear from Col. Ralston and Mr. King.

It is considered certain that Mr. King will not, at this stage, change his policy. It is not known what additional arguments he and Defence Minister McNaughton may advance in support of it.

On his part, Col. Ralston may confine himself to a statement of his own position or may take the offensive with what amounts to an attack on his former leader and cabinet colleagues.

Marshal Voroshilov Now in Eclipse

Moscow, Nov. 22 —(AP)—Marshal Klementi Y. Voroshilov, once the brightest star among Russian commanders "has been released from his duties as member of the State Committee of Defence," a five-line item on the back page of Izvestia announced today.

Gen. Nikolai Bulganin, recently Soviet representative to the Polish Committee of National Liberation, succeeded Voroshilov. He was elevated to the rank of General of the Army Sunday and appointed People's Vice-Commissar of Defence yesterday.

Voroshilov was last mentioned as a front commander Jan. 18, 1943, when his forces captured Schuesselburg and partly lifted the long siege of Leningrad.

At the start of the war, he was one of three marshals commanding army groups which the Germans smashed back to the approaches of Moscow and into Stalingrad. The others, Budenny and Timoshenko, also are in eclipse.

P. G. WODEHOUSE, WIFE, ARRESTED BY FR. OFFICIALS

Questions of Extradition and Trial Being Considered by British Govt.

London, Nov. 22 —(CP Reuter)— P. G. Wodehouse, famed British humorist and author, and his wife, have been arrested by the French authorities, it was confirmed in London today.

Details of the charge were not known here.

It was stated here that the creator of "Jeeves" was arrested in Paris.

Procedure to be followed by French authorities and questions of extradition and trial, are being considered in consultation with the British government, it was learned.

The world-renowned author made the five English-language broadcasts from Berlin in 1941. Because of the content of the broadcasts, many said he was collaborating with the Germans.

"The broadcasts were on five phases of my concentration camp experiences and were addressed to my American readers, from whom while living with 65 other men in the dormitory of a lunatic asylum in Upper Silesia, I received nearly 100 letters," Mr. Wodehouse said in Paris in October.

"I didn't think for a moment that my talks would be interpreted at home as pro-German propaganda," he told a Reuter correspondent.

The creater of "Bertie Wooster" added these broadcasts were "a great mistake."

Mr. Wodehouse was captured in France in 1940 by the German army as it swept through that country. He was taken to Berlin.

His captors are said to have allowed him to return to Paris before its liberation this year by the Allies.

LaFleche Offers To Go Overseas

Petawawa Camp, Ont., Nov. 22 —(CP)—War Services Minister LaFleche, 56 years old and a veteran of the last war, asked Prime Minister Mackenzie King if he could go "back to the front line" when he found that the situation regarding reinforcements for the Canadian forces overseas was serious, he said yesterday.

Speaking before 2,000 French-speaking home defence troops here, Gen. LaFleche said:

"When I found out that the situation was serious, I asked the Prime Minister if I could go back to the front line, I offered as a guarantee of the good faith of my compatriots, my life, my sword and my portfolio."

RUHR OIL PLANTS, RAILWAY TARGETS HEAVILY POUNDED

Night Assault Follows Daylight Attack by 2,350 Aircraft

London, Nov. 22 (CP)—The German radio indicated today that Allied planes from Italy were striking into Germany from the south, following up last night's attacks by upwards of 1,000 R.A.F. bombers from Britain on Ruhr oil plants and Nazi rail targets.

An estimated 7,000 tons of explosives were dropped in last night's assault, the second large-scale Allied blow against Germany's war vital oil reserves within 12 hours.

The oil plants were at Sterkrade and Castrop-Rauxel in the Ruhr area and Canadian bombers were in the force that hit Castrop-Rauxel.

It was the fourth attack since D-Day on the Sterkrade works which resumed after being put out of production.

A new target, Aschaffenburg, a rail town 25 miles southeast of Frankfurt, also was visited by the heavy bombers. This attack was made in support of the advancing French army.

The night assault followed a daylight attack by 1,250 American heavy bombers escorted by a record fleet of more than 1,100 fighters. Forty bombers and 17 fighters failed to return from the American operation, but some were believed to have landed away from their home bases.

In addition to the Ruhr oil plants, the R.A.F. bombers hit Aschaffenburg, railway junction 25 miles southeast of Frankfurt.

The American daylight force met fierce opposition from the German air force in battering refineries at Hamburg and Harburg and the large Leuna synthetic oil plant at Merseburg with 4,000 tons of bombs.

The Americans blasted 73 German fighters out of the sky and destroyed six more on the ground.

Churchill Leader And 'Glorious Fighter' Admiration of French

London, Nov. 22 —(CP-Reuter)— Terming his recent visit to Paris a "happy augury" for that "continued friendship between France and Britain essential to the safety and to the future peace of Europe," Prime Minister Churchill has sent a message of thanks to Gen. Charles de Gaulle on his return from the French capital.

Gen. de Gaulle replied that "France, its capital and its army were happy to greet in your person not only the Prime Minister of a great country which is dear to them, but also the glorious fighter who has maintained the wartime coalition during the darkest days as well as during victory."

BRIG. O. M. MARTIN NEW MAGISTRATE IN YORK COUNTY

First Full-Blooded Indian To Be Named To Such Office—Has Fine War Record

Toronto, Nov. 22 —(CP)— Attorney-General Blackwell today announced the appointment of Brig. Oliver Milton Martin, 51, as a magistrate for York County where he will sit in the place of Magistrate William Keith. Brig. Martin is the first full-blooded Indian to be appointed to such a position in Ontario.

Born at Ohsweken on the six nations reserve near Brantford, Brig. Martin enlisted in the First Great War in 1916, serving in France and Belgium and later transferring to the Royal Flying Corps. He continued his activity in military circles in peacetime and for a time commanded the Halfimand Rifles and later the Dufferin and Haldimand Rifles. He is a former commander of the 13th Infantry Brigade of the Sixth Division and of an Infantry Brigade in the Seventh Division. He has been on active service in the present war since 1940.

Before returning to active service in 1940 he was principal of the Danforth Park Public School in York County.

Jap Commander In China Changed

San Francisco, Nov. 22 —(AP)— A Japanese War Ministry announcement recorded today by the Federal Communications Commission said Field Marshal Gen. Shunroku Hata has been removed as commander-in-chief of all Japanese forces in China and has been replaced by Gen. Yasuji Okamura.

Okamura has been in command of the Japanese army in north China.

The announcement, broadcast by the Tokyo radio to Japanese areas, said Gen. Hata would become inspector-general of military education.

Less than a week ago a Japanese domestic broadcast said Hata had taken over personal command of the Japanese operations in Kwangsi Province as of Sunday, Nov. 12.

The War Ministry announcement said Gen. Okamura would be replaced as north China commander by Lt.-Gen. Sadashi Shimorura, commander of the western defence district on the Japanese mainland since last March.

Hata was given the rank of field marshal last June when he was appointed to Emperor Hirohito's highest advisory body on military and naval affairs.

CWAC ACTRESS DISAPPEARS THROUGH FLOOR OF STAGE

Windsor, Nov. 20 (CP) — A letter received by her parents here tells how Pte. Mary Gilchrist, CWAC, successfully performed one of the best disappearing acts ever witnessed while doing a show for Canadian troops in Italy. Completing a dance number on an outdoor stage, Pte. Gilchrist said her foot slipped as she was leaving the stage and disappeared through a hole in the flooring. She reappeared moments later coated with mud from head to foot.

Red Army Edges Closer to Miskolc And Hatvan Cities

Berlin Reports Fresh Red Push in Czechoslovakia

London, Nov. 22 (CP) —The Red Army drive for control of northeastern Hungary's rail network has captured Verpelet, eight miles southwest of Eger Anfis edging closer to the strategic rail junctions of Miskolc and Hatvan, Moscow advices said today.

Still another threat to the Germans in that theatre was seen in a Berlin announcement that the Russians had uncorked a fresh push in Czechoslovakia southwest of Ungvar, 75 miles northeast of Miskolc. The Nazis said seven to eight Soviet divisions had ripped several holes in German defences between the Ung and Latorica Rivers.

A Moscow communique said German forces pocketed in southwest Latvia had made 40 vain counterattacks in a single day south of Jelgava, losing 13 tanks, but the announcement still did not confirm assertions that the Russians had begun a major offensive Sunday.

The Russians, however, did announce the virtual clearance of the Baltic Island of Saare (Osel) guarding the entrance ot the Gulf of Riga.

In addition to Verpelet the Red Army seized four strongly-defended villages in Hungary. Russian troops have been reported in the outskirts of both Eger and Miskolc. Rains have hindered the Russian advance, Moscow said.

Six hundred Germans and Hungarians were reported killed at Vepelet. From Nov. 14 through Nov. 20 the Russians captured 4,220 German and Hungarian soldiers, bringing the total since Nov. 8 to 11,920, the Russians announced.

There was no new word on the continuing siege of Budapest from points south and southeast of the capital.

Welsh Troops Back With Unit After Skirmish

Kandy, Ceylon, Nov. 22 —(CP Reuter)—Welsh troops of the British 36th Division in north Burma have won a fierce skirmish with the Japanese after they had been cut off for two days in dense jungle, it was announced today.

From Myitkyina it was reported today that Japanese troops well dug-in near Pinwe Station in the so-called railway corridor, succeeded in setting up a road block which cut off the Welshmen from a British Eastern Counties battalion.

While the Counties men were clearing the block the driver of a ration lorry ran the gauntlet with supplies. He overran the Welsh positions and found himself among the Japanese.

The Japanese rushed the lorry and the Welshmen, catching them in the open, killed 58.

A Japanese attack on Allied positions four miles northeast of Kalemyo in northwest Burma was repulsed.

On the Chindwin front an attack was repulsed. In a clash east of the Chindwin some Japanese were killed.

In northern Burma, operations in the Bhamo area were confined yesterday to patrol activity.

Defence Minister Asks Full Investigation of Officers' Interview

Ottawa, Nov. 22—(CP)—A letter has been sent by Defence Minister McNaughton to Pacific Coast army commanders asking that a full investigation be made of a press conference at which officers were quoted as saying the voluntary system of overseas enlistment would not work, it was understood here.

Gen. McNaughton is known to hold the view that press interviews by officers on matters of policy are a breach of military discipline and can be made subject to court martial.

However, it was understood the letter did not call for disciplinary action which, in normal military procedure, would not be asked until a full report of the interviews were available.

It was recalled that when Maj. Connie Smythe of Toronto criticized quality of overseas reinforcements there were reports in military circles that he would be disciplined. No such action, however, has ever been reported.

Meanwhile, it was reliably learned if any disciplinary action were taken as result of the Vancouver press interviews it would be applied by commanding officers on the spot and Gen. McNaughton and Defence Headquarters here would merely be kept informed of proceedings.

Two Fine Deer Shot at Bonarlaw

Bonarlaw, Ont., Nov. 22—Sandy Rombough and Bert Anderson do not believe in all this fuss and flurry during hunting season, dogs, equipment, going far afield etc. They believe that "everything comes to those who wait." On Saturday morning last two beautiful deer were feeding in the field near Sandy's home, noticed by Bert as he was going to work. This was of course the morning Bert forgot to pack a gun. With great presence of mind he ran to Sandy's door and pounded until Sandy appeared with the necessary artillery. The result was a fine doe for Sandy and a nice buck for Bert. Bert has been heard to say that Sandy did some of the nicest shooting he ever saw.

New Dancing Spot Club Vanity Fair To Open Thurs.

In the course of undergoing complete renovations during the past six weeks, the "Club, Vanity Fair", Belleville's newest and most modern dancing spot will open its doors to the public for the first time Thursday evening with "Buff" Estes and his thirteen-piece orchestra providing the dance music.

Formerly known as the Moose Auditorium, "Club, Vanity Fair", now under new management, offers something entirely new and different to Belleville dance lovers. The dance floor, long known as possibly the best in the city, remains the same, but the surroundings have been so changed as to be unrecognized.

Featuring an orchestra stand done in pale peach with a decided tropical motif, "Club, Vanity Fair" offers indirect drop ceiling lighting effects with wall coloring done in turquoise and pale rose effect. In place of the alcoves familiar with dancing clientele on this floor has been added a new refreshment and sandwich bar and check room, while on the opposite side of the floor is a spacious rest room equipped with tables and chairs.

Safety of the dance crowd has been adequately taken care of by the addition of an extra fire escape, there now being three emergency fire escapes in addition to the main entrance.

Well-known in the Bay of Quinte district, "Buff" Estes and his thirteen-piece dance orchestra have been engaged by "Club, Vanity Fair" management. "Buff" Estes has played with such name bands as Ossie Nelson, Freddy Martin, Fitch Band Wagon and as saxaphonist with Benny Goodman's orchestra. After leaving Benny Goodman's orchestra he enlisted with the R.C.A.F.

No expense has been spared in providing a novel and delightful orchestra setting with music stands being of glass panel construction, having varied and colorful lighting effects.

Hastings County Ready for Snow

A brand new four-wheel-drive, six-ton truck equipped with a new heavy snowplow; a crawler tractor with plow and two heavy graders will comprise the defence equipment of Hastings County against the expected invasion of heavy snowfalls this winter, County Engineer W. L. Langlois said today.

"In addition to this," he said, "trucks for hire will be available."

"This equipment will be ready," he added, "providing the crawler tractor which has been on order since the early part of the year, is delivered in time. We are expecting it any day and hope it will be here in time for the first heavy fall of snow."

The county has also purchased 10,000 feet of snowfence some of which has been erected already. Operations in this respect, however, are being held up due to the lack of frost in the ground. Metal posts, erected to support the fence, if placed in soft ground are liable to give way in the event of heavy winds.

Commenting on other Roads and Bridges operations, Mr. Langlois stated that stringers which gave way in the Glen Miller bridge this month have been replaced.

Crushed gravel, purchased from the Township of Marmora has been used to re-surface the Marmora-Cordova road. Re-surfacing of the Minto road with gravel obtained from Rawdon Township is now in the process of operation.

Maj. K.M. Brown Describes War In Mediterranean and the West

Graphic Picture Given of Events of Past Five Years —Mentality of Nazi Soldier Analyzed

Veteran of El Alemein, Tunisia, Sicily and Italy, Major Kenneth Maxwell Brown told in graphic terms the highlights of his career as an English soldier during those particular campaigns to the members of the Women's Canadian Club in St. Andrew's Church Hall on Tuesday evening. Coming straight from the war front in Europe, Major Brown has been on a lecture tour through the United States and Canada for the past two months. He can proudly boast of the fact that he was with Montgomery's Eighth Army all the way from El Alemein into Italy and was also in the landing on Normandy on D-Day and in the bitter fighting around Caen.

"We in England have come to know and understand the American and Canadian armies and regard them as our own", said Major Brown. "The people over here, however, are not as well acquainted with the English army. 'Know your Allies and know your enemies'. I have come to the American continent as a sort of museum piece to tell you more about the English army. A place is often judged according to the good or bad time one has had there. The American and Canadian chaps in your armies have come to England in the worst times. Conditions there now are nothing like they are in peacetime.

German Navy Not Strong Enough.

"In September 1939, I went to France. Five divisions of the British Army had been sent to France which comprised 50,000 men. We knew that the odds were against us. The Germans had pitted 250 divisions against us, not less than five million men when France fell in 1940, we returned to England waiting for an attack which never came. In order for the Germans to successfully attack England by land, they would have had to have the superiority of the air. This they never gained. The Germans had the men, the ships into which to put them, but not a strong enough navy to protect them on the way. The Royal Navy was the largest afloat at that time. For those two reasons England was not invaded in 1940.

Britain to Aid of Greece.

When the Italians attacked the Greeks, we went to the aid of Greece. From England, there went a total of 100,000 troops to reinforce the troops which had been sent from the African campaign. When we arrived on the coast of Greece, the first troops were being evacuated which proved the old war cry "Too few and too late". We at once thought, of course, that we would be sent back to England, but we were wrong, because a new and formidable enemy appeared in the person of Field Marshal Rommel and his African Corps. We were sent to Africa to pit our strength against him. Germany's idea was for the German army in Africa to join the German army from the Ukraine and together march towards India and join the Japanese. The Nazi divisions were divided into four corps; fit for service in the African campaign, fit for service in the Russian war, fit for service for the European front and fit for service for the home front only.

German Arrogance.

"The officers taken as prisoners in the African battle were a difficult bunch", said Major Brown. The morale of the German soldiers never varies, just his arrogance. For three years, we competed with that type of German in conditions that were anything but pleasant. There were no civilians or towns with which to contend, just a straightforward battle. The water situation was terrible. One's water ration for a day consisted of three tumblers. The temperature was 100-125 degrees in the shade. We chased up and down the coast of Africa for three years. On that coast there were only three places capable of military defence and it we lost one we had to go back to the other.

Arrival of Montgomery.

In the year of 1942, General Montgomery arrived, a great man and a great soldier, and with that unique assembly of troops, he defeated the Germans at El Alemein. We were then invited to invade Sicily, a campaign which lasted only six weeks. From there, we went to Italy and in December of last year we were shipped back to England. We went to France for the European campaign on D-Day. The Germans had 25 divisions in France for it. "If we had not attacked Italy", stated Major Brown, "they would have had 52 divisions in France instead of only 25.

Dieppe and D-Day

The Germans had planned to line the northern coast of France with troops and inland have another armored force which could be moved up if an invasion came. The Canadian attack on Dieppe, followed a few months later by a commando attack on another French port made the Germans think that when the Allied invasion came it would be against one or two ports of France. Germany, therefore, fortified all the ports along the northern coast of France with the best troops they could spare. "We knew that", said Major Brown, "so we took two ports with us which we sank on arriving, and which were able to handle all the traffic we desired."

The Germans used other precautionary means to protect the coastline. All along the coast on the beaches, railway lines six feet in length and welded together at the top to form a V were sunk all except the V which was left pointing out. These were put between the high and low level marks, and dynamite was placed on them. The Germans realized that we would have to come in in full tide and so would not be able to see these dangerous projections. The German plan was to have the craft sail in and be blown up. These objects were overcome by our men, however.

When we first landed on the coastline of France, we were sniped at by some French women. This was probably because many French girls had married a large number of the German soldiers who were protecting the French ports during the German occupation. Another reason why the French people did not welcome us at first was because they wanted to be sure that we were going to stay this time. In the Dieppe attack and the following commando raid on another French port the French had come out to help the allies and when the allies left the country the French people who had volunteered to help were shot by the Germans. When we really arrived inland, the French people gave us a great welcome.

Typical German Soldier

The German soldier only gives up when he is told to do so. In Africa in three years of fighting, we took one deserter and in France in only three days of fighting on a small part of the front, we took 300 deserters. When Hitler quarreled with his generals, the deserters stopped.

The German soldier is a man without morals or scruples. "There is no hope for a collapse of the German army without a complete military victory," said Major Brown. The Germans had two armies on the European front, the 7th and the 15th. The 7th was in Normandy but the 15th was kept back instead of being used to reinforce the 7th. At the present time the Allies are fighting the 15th. When it is beaten, the Germans are beaten. The advantage we have over the Germans is mobility.

What Is To Be Done With Germany?

What are we going to do with the Germans after the war? In three quarters of a century, they have made war three times. They have been responsible for the deaths of not less than twenty million people, not to forget the destruction of homes, property, etc. If that is the record of the Germans, under no circumstances can they be treated as ordinary human beings. For our own protection, we must make sure that they are completely neutralized so as never to make war again.

Turriff Hunter Collects Bounty On Four Wolves

Eight grey timber wolves, raiding sheep and cattle in various sections of the northern part of the county have fallen victim to the aim of irate hunter-farmers thus far during the current month.

Albert Saulay, of Turriff accounted for four of the raiders and collected $140 in bounties. Harry Minnie dropped another pair in their tracks while Fred Chalk and William O'Brien all of different municipalities, got one each.

The pelts, indicative of the large size of the wolves, were brought to the office of County Treasurer James Haggerty where county bounties of $10 each were paid. The Ontario Government pays an additional $25 for each wolfskin.

The animals showed little fear of the hunters and were easily shot. Ravages of the wolves have caused serious damage to livestock in several parts of the northern district.

Blood Bank Established At the Hospital

Centralization unit of future supplies of plasma for the Belleville General Hospital, a metal blood bank now gleams in its white newness in a laboratory in the institution.

This latest addition to the modern medical and surgical equipment of the hospital was purchased about ten days ago with funds raised by the Women's Hospital Auxiliary, and a private donation. The cost was $550.

With its special refrigeration facilities which includes a special quick-freezing compartment, the new equipment marks the beginning of the development of a special blood supply which will be used, with the exception of emergency, exclusively for patients from the districts which the hospital serves.

Supplies of blood and blood plasma will now be centralized and under closer supervision than heretofore, hospital authorities said today.

The bank has three compartments. The largest is the low temperature compartment equipped with rotating circular shelves holding in all 34 pints of blood. The plasma compartment has four oblong containers with a total capacity of 60 bottles. In addition is the quick-freezing compartment already mentioned.

No blood plasma has been obtained yet as the bank has only been in operation a few days, not sufficiently long enough for the necessary period of respiration.

All types of blood will be kept in the bank. Efforts will be made to have relatives of patients who have been treated with plasma give donotions to the bank thus affording a continuous supply of the plasma for hospital uses. Thus, plasma will be available at a moment's notice for any patient or emergency.

The War Today—
Terrific Pressure To Increase On West Until Germans Crushed

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
(AP War Analyst)

This column preached a sermon yesterday against over-optimism about when the European war will end.

Nazi propagandists are telling their people that the Allies are going all-out for victory by Yule Tide —and that is true. Germans, although not broken in morale, already have accepted the inevitability of defeat.

The 450-mile German battle-line in Western Europe is stretched as taut as a bow-string — so taut that strands of it are snapping. The Nazis have no way of repairing this damage.

Terrific Allied Pressure Growing

This terrific Allied pressure is growing. Eisenhower says his plan is to increase pressure steadily all along the front until the Germans are crushed. He didn't add what we know to be true — that he has unrevealed striking-power up his sleeve. The Nazis can't strengthen their resistance as a whole. They can only increase it on one sector by taking strength from another, and this lays the weakened area open to fresh attack.

Can the enemy take it? Thus far he's been fighting with fanaticism, impelled partly by loyalty and partly by fear of being shot in the back by Himmler's picked killers. There's no doubt that, as Eisenhower says, "To get peace, we have got to fight like hell for it." In this connection there's another thought which General (now Field Marshal) Montgomery gave me in Africa during his campaign against Rommel:

Once German Down He Cracks Up

"The German is a good soldier and will fight, although I believe it is true that once you get him down he cracks up."

If that's a correct estimate — and history bears it out — it's up to the Allies to "get him down." Two of the most important factors in this task most certainly are:

1. The state of Allied war supplies on the fighting front.

2. Whether the weather is favorable for all-out attacks.

The weather is on the knees of the gods. The matter of supplies is on the doorstep of the home front. Gen. Eisenhower warns that he wants more supplies than he's getting now.

If Eisenhower gets those supplies and if the weather is favorable, I believe it's militarily possible—I say "possible"—for the Allies to achieve victory by Christmas. However, that's not a prediction. And the war will run into 1945 if the Allies don't get the breaks."

French-Canadians Asked To Enlist By Col. LaFleche

Petawawa Camp, Ont. Nov. 22. (CP) — War Services Minister LaFleche said yesterday that 4,000 French-speaking volunteers were needed overseas as reinforcements for "our regiments presently fighting in Italy and Holland", and added, "I know my compatriots, and I know that their heart is beating in the right place. Your friends over there need help, and this help must come from us and not from others".

In an address to 2,000 French-speaking home defence troops at this camp, Gen. LaFleche said:—

"If reinforcements are required we will find them. And we will find them by our own means, and not by insult. The word 'zombie' is insulting, and it is why I strongly condemn this word. The French-Canadian is proud, and is right in being so. I call upon you to act accordingly and to enlist in the active army so you can be as proud of your compatriots overseas".

After the war every country will "make its inventory", Gen. LaFleche said. Canada will see many years of prosperity, and he would like to see French-Canadians enjoy these advantages "as much as their compatriots".

"I then put in your hands our future and our honor. Be sure, however, that it will probably be the last call that you will have in regard to military enlistment. Maybe you have some reasons not to enlist, but compare yours with the reasons I just explained to you. I tell you that with 4,000 volunteers the conditions will be quite different. It all depends on your answer. We must find the solution between ourselves".

59,002 Home Defence Troops Now on Strength

Ottawa, Nov. 22 — (CP)—Defence Minister McNaughton last night issued a statement showing that of 59,002 home defence troops on strength Oct. 11, 39,756 came from Canadian cities and towns while 19,246 were from counties and rural areas.

The statement followed an announcement last week that more than 7,000 draftees "went active" between the June 6 — D-Day—and Oct. 31. At the same time it was disclosed that 6,200 of the 31,500 men called up in 1941 still were in the home defence army.

Starting a campaign to create local competition in recruiting home defence soldiers for the overseas reinforcement pool, Gen. Mc[illegible] last night listed the draftee strength by cities, towns and counties. It is understood he shortly will start to issue regular conversion reports based on the distribution figures. The reports would show the progress of his voluntary recruiting drive.

The latest figures disclosed that in Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia — big industrial provinces—a majority were listed from the cities and towns. In the other seven provinces with big rural populations the majority were from counties.

Quebec showed the largest provincial total — 22,847 — and the largest city total — Montreal 9,524. There were 18,735 draftees coming from cities and towns while the remainder — 4,112 — were enrolled from the counties.

The Ontario total of 15,726 draftees was made up of 12,777 from cities and towns and 2,949 from the counties. There were 3,225 listed from Toronto — second highest city total.

Other cities with large draftee strength were Hamilton, 1,071, Windsor, 864, Kitchener, 423.

Regina, Nov. 22 (CP)—Venereal disease is the biggest communicable disease problem in Canada at the present time with 105 cases in every 100,000 persons, said Maj. J. A. Leroux, Ottawa, Director of V.D. control for Ontario, in an address here last night.

Speaking to the third Western Canada V.D. conference, Maj. Leroux urged legislation calling for pre-marital and pre-natal blood tests for syphilis.

In Ontario this year 136 babies were born with syphilis, he said, adding the province had 175 cases for every 100,000 persons and Toronto had 308 per 100,000.

Russia Is Needed In Pacific War Says Sir B. Pares

Toronto, Nov. 22 — (CP) — Sir Bernard Pares, authority on Russian history and member of the University of Toronto Faculty, said last night Russia must enter the Pacific war since it was imperative that she be in the council chamber when the Pacific question is settled. Speaking to the Young Business Women's Canadian Club he said Russia's communication in the Pacific depends upon a free and independent China.

"There can't be any world peace without Russia" he said. "Last time the attempt was made it was a failure and the fact that Russia was not a participant in the last peace treaties did a lot to cause the present war."

4 Canadians Down 2 Focke-Wulf 190s And Damage Third

London, Nov. 22 (CP Cable)—Four Canadian Spitfire pilots shot down two Focke-Wulf 190s and damaged a third yesterday when the Germans reacted in "some strength" to R.C.A.F. fighter-bomber operations, it was announced today. More than 100 sorties were flown yesterday by R.C.A.F. fighters and fighter-bombers based on the continent. A number of successful railway cuts were made in the Kempen, Koesfeld and Gladbach areas of Germany behind the German forces facing the British 2nd army push from southeast Holland.

Typhons destroyed or damaged six locomotives and more than 30 freight cars.

R.C.A.F. heavy bombers last night attacked the synthetic oil plants at Castrop-Rauxel, northwest of Dortmund, and laid mines in enemy waters.

SUPERFORTRESSES IN GREATEST RAID

Lose Two and Possibly Three, While 20 Japanese Are Downed

Washington, Nov. 22— (AP) — Superfortresses, plunging into probably their greatest air battle over the Japanese homeland yesterday lost two, and possibly three, of their number to enemy fighter planes.

A communique said today it was the first time Japanese airmen had succeeded in bagging a B-29 since inauguration of the 20th Bomber Command last June 15.

Twenty Japanese fighters were shot down, 19 probably lost and 22 others damaged in the three-pronged strike by a large force of B-29's from China, aiming principally at the Omura aircraft plant on Kyushu, the southernmost home island of the Japanese archipelago.

(Tokyo radio broadcasts claimed that 63 of the B-29's were shot down or damaged over Kyushu and China.)

Exceedingly Wise Tax Measures Will Be Necessary

Toronto, Nov. 22 —(CP)— Tax measures "of an exceedingly wise nature" are necessary if Canadian industry is to have the finance to equip itself for post-war employment and competition, Hugh Lawson, president of the Canadian Woollen and Knit Goods Manufacturers Association, said in a speech prepared for delivery today to the 22nd annual meeting of the association.

High taxation necessary to finance the war had taken much of the money necessary for replacement and rehabilitation and the industry was "increasingly concerned that because of these high rates we may conclude these war-time operations with insufficient monies available for the purpose." New tax measures should be instituted by the taxing authorities to enable Canadian industry to enter the post-war field on at least an even footing with other countries.

Mr. Lawson spoke of the difficulties of supplying civilian demand under the handicaps of war production, labor shortages and high buying power. As long as these handicaps were present all civilian demand could not be met. At present labor shortages were more acute than at any time during the war, "as a result of which we face shortages in the production of essential civilian goods."

Haakon Considers Partial Return Of Norse Government

London, Nov. 22 — (CP) — King Haakon is considering partial transfer of the exiled Norwegian government back to Norway soon, possibly within the next four weeks, it was learned today.

King Haakon and the majority of the cabinet, however will remain in London until most if not all the country has been liberated, a government spokesman explained.

Drives 1,000 Miles On Deer-Hunt, Uses Coal-Burning Car

Stockholm, N.J., Nov. 22 (AP)—Anton Schuck, local garageman who recently motored 1,000 miles into northern Canada on a deer hunt without using a gallon of gasoline, explains his accomplishment thus:

He drove a 1922 model Stanley Steamer, which he had converted to burn coal. His fuel bin carried 500 pounds of anthracite—good for about 300 miles travel, punctuated at 10-mile intervals with stops to stoke the furnace.

Tire rationing, Schuck says, didn't bother him. His coal-burning auto has outsize wheels, for which tires are not rationed.

FOUR FATALLY BURNED

Denison, Pa., Nov. 22 —(AP)— Four persons were fatally burned and 30 others injured when an explosion swept through a block of this city yesterday following collision of a gasoline truck with a motorcar. Police speculated the blast was set off by a passing train or by the exhaust of an automobile after the collision had freed the gas from the truck.

The Call of Humanity

Fifty thousand more blood donors in Ontario are wanted, Health Minister Vivian of this province has pointed out in a broadcast. The campaign for that number is the assurance and proof of the need.

Use of blood plasma is not old but it is already one of the marvels of this age. It has been proven as one of the most necessary items for the immediate treatment of wounded men overseas. Advances in the medical world have made possible this great contribution towards the saving of human life and many a man who has bled for his country and civilization in this war, many a one who would have died but for the administration of plasma has been restored to health by its prompt use immediately it was possible to get it to the wounded.

If plasma has proven a boon and the salvation of so many when wounded, then there is placed upon every eligible person the duty to give of his and her blood and thereby accept the responsibility which calls to everyone.

What is asked is not going to be so heavy an undertaking for Ontario. Fifty thousand more donors in Ontario cannot be considered a very great number. But fifty thousand by their donations can give blood to this cause and the result will be just what will give the satisfaction to the doers of a good deed and will satisfy the demand.

It has been pointed out by Hon. Dr. Vivian that since September the demand for plasma has been greater than the supply. That is a fact that can only be met by more and more donations of blood. This presents to each and every person now enlisted in this worthy cause of contributing blood to do so for the safety of the men who are fighting on the fields of Europe, in the skies and on the seas.

Had other ages known the value of blood plasma what might not have been achieved. But it has been given to this age to make this discovery and to give without hurt the life-giving fluid to save others. It is a product of this humanitarian era and the people of this age will make every use of it.

To give blood, not knowing whom it will benefit, except that the one who needs the plasma is a brother within the meaning of human brotherhood is the opportunity that awaits all. It is another sign of the forward movement of humanity and an added proof of the truth that everyone is his brother's keeper.

At this great moment in history with the most momentous battles sweeping the war in Europe to the climax it must not be said that there was not enough plasma to save every man who has dared all for his country and for the liberty of mankind. The serviceman risks his life and limb. The blood donor runs no risk but his and hers is the satisfaction of giving to some unknown brother that which will restore him to health and bring him back home to the land he has fought to save.

Still Picturesque

Figures of travel by the Royal Canadian Northwest Mounted Police in the year ending March last in the patrol of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon show that the Mounties travelled all but 51 miles of a quarter of a million miles or a little over ten times the circumference of the earth.

Color still sticks to the organization for 49,812 miles were covered with dog teams, which certainly gives a hint at the out-of-the-way places. So efficiently do these police serve and link up their territory that they travelled only 566 miles on foot. The rest of the distance was covered by boat, airplane, automobile and rail.

For many methods and ways of travel the Mounties have variety, the time-honored and the up-to-the-minute means of transportation jostling one another on their investigations.

The annual report of the R.C.M.P. was made public on Monday.

More Supplies, Heavier Blows

General Eisenhower drew a picture of steadily increasing pressure of Allied power all along the front until Germany is crushed. There will be no rest for the enemy.

Germany is to see freedom-loving nations greater in power than the Axis ever was and this great Allied power is going to crush German militarism.

He wants greater supplies than he is getting and added that he thought "the soldier wants more than he is getting both now and in the future."

He sees in the French capture of Belfort and their advance to the Rhine a great French victory, full of the best import for the future.

Anyone who was dallying with the thoughts of relaxing and of complacency will have his attention focused on the task of the utmost effort. This effort he told newspapermen must mount and mount and reach its greatest effectiveness on the very day when Germany has to surrender. There is no relaxing for General Eisenhower or the armies.

His view that there is no sign of crack in German morale is one to steady anyone who has at all relaxed in the effort of beating the Hun. He made no predictions of the time of the surrender of the Germans and rather he called for an all-out smashing effort both at the front and at home as "the prescription for victory."

The Supreme Commander has his view of the German will to fight. The German leaders he said had nothing to lose by continuing the war after the defeats of the past summer and had in the Gestapo so powerful a weapon that they could compel the German people to fight on as they are doing.

One of the ways he sees to cause the enemy to yield will be to hurl defeat after defeat at the enemy, make the Hun realize his failures and then there would be the inevitable crack in the morale of the enemy.

As a proof of the ground for optimism he pointed out that no one could have believed that the Allies in November would be ranged against the Siegfried Line.

Flying Census

(Christian Science Monitor)

Life after the war is going to be a strange and wonderful thing, barren of annoyance. The streets will no longer reek of gasoline exhaust fumes, butter will not get hard as a brick in a refrigerator, the crease will no longer come out of your trousers, and if you happen to like shooting "clay pigeons" you can get a gun that throws out its own targets.

We can detect no flaw in this. It sounds fine. The only question is: Will post-war ingenuity know when it has gone far enough?

We learn, for instance, that on January 1, 1945, the Farm Bureau Federation will begin using aerial photographs to help census takers to locate remote farmhouses and study agricultural production. We are inclinde to raise an eyebrow at this.

Imagine lying on your back on the side of a grassy hill, with maybe a stalk of timothy in your mouth, and seeing an airplane droning by overhead. Don't bother to let your fancy play with the far lands to which it may be winging. It's probably just taking the census—and your picture.

Already we sigh for the good old days when we could go find a lonely spot and Get Away From It All.

To restore a commonplace truth to its first uncommon lustre you need only to translate it into action. But to do this you must have reflected on its truth.—Coleridge.

Tyranny and anarchy are never far asunder.—Bentham.

JUST FOLKS

UNCHANGEABLE

In that very different world which they tell us is to be,
When the changes are all made, and the little nations free;
When the statemen's work is done, and the borders rearranged.
There are certain joys I've known which I hope will not be changed.
Let them better what they can, but I'd keep Thanksgiving Day
And the glorious Christmas time in the good old-fashioned way.

It may be when peace is made we'll establish brotherhood,
And the armaments of war will be put away for good.
We may give to one and all, by agreement, ampler life,
And relieve the human heart from the bitterness of strife,
But two customs still I'd keep, hold the future what it may,
And Thanksgiving time is one, and the other Christmas Day.

I am sure if we should ask those who fight to keep us free—
All at battle posts today of the land and sky and sea—
They would say: "Although it's plain there is much we ought to change,
We're not fighting to return to a different land and strange.
It's the home we hope to find which now seems so far away,
And the Christmas as it was, and the same Thanksgiving Day."

DEAD AND LIVE WEIGHT

There is an odd popular belief that the human body "increases" in weight immediately after death. "Dead weight," meaning the unrelieved weight of an inert object, may have been suggested by this belief.

The question is often asked whether the human body weighs the same immediately after death as it did immediately before death.

So far as scientists have been able to ascertain, there is no appreciable decrease or increase in the weight of the human body at the instant death occurs.

If a body is weighed immediately before and immediately after death the scales, no matter how delicate they may be, register the same in each case.

Charles II of England, who was an amateur anatomist, attempted to determine whether the human soul had weight by having the body of a condemned man weighed before and after execution. Those in charge of the experiment reported that the body actually weighed less after the departure of the spirit. The experiment, of course, is merely a curiosity without scientific value.

"One reason that a dead body is thought to be heavier than a living one," wrote Dr. J. B. Harrison, a British surgeon, "is probably this, that in carrying a living person we have the centre of gravity adapted by the person carried to suit the convenience of the carrier and maintained in a position as far as possible to fall within the base of his body. Again, the elasticity of the structures of the body, especially the cartilages, though not in reality diminishing in weight, gives an appearance of lightness, as we see in the beautiful movements of the stag, and this would seem to corroborate the notion of living creatures being lighter than dead ones."

Make Position Known.

Many private sessions and caucuses will precede any open show of position by most of the Liberal members. The Progressive Conservatives made their position known in a statement following a caucus yesterday. They are in favor of making home defence troops available for speedy reinforcement of the overseas army.

Liberal members meet in provincial caucus groups today and the liveliest discussions are expected to be in the Ontario and Western Province caucuses. They are expected to meet in a full party caucus Thursday after they have before them the correspondence and other documents to be tabled at the brief sitting of the House today.

In the Progressive Conservative group there is some opposition to one point in the line of procedure understood to have been put before other party leaders by Mr. King.

That is the scheduled joint meeting of the Senate and House of Commons at which Gen. McNaughton, not yet a member of parliament would state his position.

It is not yet settled whether objection will be taken to hearing a speech by a minister not in parliament, but the matter will be settled at another meeting of the Progressive Conservative caucus after all members have arrived in the capital. There was something under a full attendance yesterday but two party executives not in the House, John Bracken, National Leader, and C. P. McTague, National Chairman, were there.

No Secret Session.

The statement issued by Mr. Graydon on yesterday's caucus left the way open for such a point to be raised when it said:-

"The caucus came out strongly against the suggestion of a secret session as the facts sufficient for parliament to form its own judgment are fully known now."

In Liberal circles the view was expressed that Gen. McNaughton should be heard whether or not the Progressive Conservatives choose to attend the meeting. From the C.C.F. group the opinion was expressed that parliament should get all the information available and should not stand on precedent.

Meanwhile, rumors persisted that further resignations from the cabinet were not yet beyond the range of possibility. The rumors were that there were differences among the ministers on other questions besides conscription for overseas service. The name of resources Minister Crerar was mentioned as one of the dissenters.

DECLINES TO CALL SPECIAL MEETING

BULLET 'MOST BENIGN FOREIGN BODY'

London, Nov. 22 — (CP)—Lancet, journal of the British Medical Association, says a bullet is the "most benign foreign body" which a human can harbor. Reason: 'It is heat-sterilised during its flight, smooth, and does not disrupt soft tissues outside its path or carry in such pieces of the outside world as manured earth or clothing."

PORKER WITHOUT HIND FEET

Kitchener, Nov. 22 — (CP) — One little pig born in a recent litter on Harry Sheriffs' farm outside nearby Conestogo has no hind feet, but that won't stop his conversion into pork chops when he comes of age. Healthy and normal otherwise, his haunches are fully developed, and he gets around fairly well despite the handicap.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

GRANDMA ROLLS

I am 80 years old. You have cured me of Cri. I follow your instructions faithfully, even the somersaults. I weigh 205 pounds but I can roll 'em backwards as well as forwards. I have a lot of fun, winning bets from my friends. I have two granddaughters, aged 13 and 14. We have somersault races out on the lawn—I usually win. I want to stay this way as long as possible. Please send me your pamphlet "Young Folks and Old Folks."

(Mrs. S. J. C.)

Any reader who asks for it in writing (no clipping, please) and provides pre-addressed stamped envelope, may have the pamphlet "Young Folks and Old Folks," which tells how to be the former. Nothing about somersaults in it. If you are not too antiquated to wonder what the—what somersaults can do for you, ask for "Invitation to the Somersaultauqua" and you will receive it along with the pamphlet.

I began turning somersaults 34 years ago. I am now 74. I turned 8 every day, making a grand total of 87,600 (I hope you are not spoofing us, sir, but I refuse to get all out of sorts trying to check the accuracy of your figures). For the last 4 years I have been supplementing my diet with six tablets of vitamins D and B-complex, as you recommended. (T. E. J.)

Thirty-four years ago? Well, then you began rolling somersaults entirely on your own responsibility—at any rate it could not have been by my suggestion or advice. And another thing, how in Sam Hill do you arrive at the grand total of 87,600? I had four goes at it and my answers were all different, none within thousands of that figure. But then, I seldom get the same result if I work a simple arithmetic problem over more than once.

Readers who are not well educated are likely to think this somersaulting is silly. Readers who are not already too old (physiologically) to learn had better send a pre-addressed stamped envelope and ask for (a clipping will not suffice) the Pink Slip—"Invitation to the Somersaultauqua"—which tells what rolls are for and how to do 'em.

It takes less than half a minute to do one doz. rolls—I just timed myself on the floor in front of my desk—and in my judgment this is the best substitute for exercise any one can take, when there isn't time to devote to more formal calisthenic exercise or to play.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

So They Still Have Croup?

At first we thought you were joking about croup having gone out of fashion. But our children seem to have periodic attacks of what we have called croup. Our doctor is now far away (in the army) and when we wrote him he told us to ask your advice. (Mrs. E. A. W.)

Answer—If croup is not entirely out of fashion it is certainly much less fashionable today than it was when I practiced in Penn Yan. However, since I commented on the relative scarcity of spasmodic or "catarrhal" croup, several readers have assured me their children still have it. I suspect they coddle their children too much. Send stamped envelope bearing your address, and ask for the pamphlet on "Croup."

French, English or Irish

I am 55, have pyorrhea. French doctor in Montreal advised me to have teeth extracted. English doctor in Boston advised against extraction of teeth. I am in good health, have given 12 donations of blood to Red Cross. One of the teeth is loose. What do you say? (J. D. C.)

Answer—Irish doctor in Paradise advises you to consult a competent dentist—and a competent dentist will not sanction the sacrifice of a tooth except after consultation with your physician. If the French doctor or the English doctor failed to consult with your dentist about your condition, they were just quacking it. I have a pamphlet giving general information and advice about pyorrhea—for copy and stamped envelope bearing your address and ask for it. No clipping, please.

Unbidden Guests

All summer we are plagued with mosquitoes, ants, chiggers...and now we have bedbugs. (J. F.)

Answer—Send ten cents and stamped addressed envelope for booklet "Unbidden Guests"—about these and a dozen other pests.

PICTON

Pte. W. Morris Woundedin Action

Picton, Nov. 22—Pte. William Morris has been wounded in action in Holland, according to word received by his mother, Mrs. W. Morris. The date was given as Nov. 9 but there were no details as to the nature or extent of his injuries.

Word has been received here that Warrant Officer Allan Sharpe, R.C.A.F., who was officially reported missing after air operations late in October, is now a prisoner of war. He was completing his tour of operations of 38 trips when the plane failed to return. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Sharpe reside in Orangeville, going there from Picton where Mr. Sharpe was a bank manager. WO. Sharpe attended school here and earlier was a banker at Brighton.

Golden Wedding.

The fiftieth anniversary of their wedding was marked on Monday by Mr. and Mrs. James L. Shepard and on this occasion they were the recipients of many messages of congratulations and gifts. Both continue active. They are life-long residents of Prince Edward County and moved from the farm to Picton in 1913. Mr. Shepard was market clerk for twenty years. They have three children, Sgt. Raymond Shepard in the army, Arthur of Picton and Mrs. Clayton Denike, Picton.

Record Shipping Season.

The shipping season closed here yesterday, when the CSL freighter Beaverton took all canned goods that remained in the warehouses, for points west. This has been a record shipping season from this port with more than a million cases of canned goods handled. This represents some 24 million cans, more than two cans for every person in Canada. All the goods shipped this year were for the Canadian markets, about half going east and the other half west. Agent Arnold Covert has praise for members of the air force who had been of great assistance in loading the boats. There was no difficulty in securing sufficient help. Canned goods from as far west as Bowmanville and from Frankford district was brought here for shipment.

Discuss Purchase.

The town would exercise the option to purchase as set forth in the will and codicil, if the town were paid the insurance monies of $4,000, but the town would not exercise the option if the insurance monies were directed to be applied in the rebuilding of the house, was the resolution passed at the last meeting of town council.

This motion refers to the purchase of the estate of the late Anne B. Owens, which was offered the town for $5,000. However fire damaged the house and also claimed the life of Mrs. Owens. The insurance has been paid the estate and purchase of the property as it is at present would mean expenditures for repairs. The matter is still under consideration by the lawyers concerned, as to whether the town should receive the insurance monies. If this is done, then the town would have to pay an additional thousand dollars for the purchase and also that needed for repairs.

The estate consists of an ideally located lot, with a large brick building, which has been suggested as an ideal recreational centre.

At its meeting, council granted a perit to Allan Jarvis to erect a packing house at an estimated cost of $3000. Clerk F. L. Ward was instructed to express council's appreciation to Mrs. E. Haggart, who recently resigned as Public Health nurse here.

Soviet-Yugoslav Pact Negotiated

By ALFRED GEIRINGER
Reuter Staff Writer

London, Nov. 22 —(CP-Reuter)— A Russian-Yugoslav pact similar to the Russian-Czecho-Slovak pact is being negotiated in Moscow between Vyacheslav Molotov, Soviet Commissar for Foreign Affairs, and Dr. Ivan Subasic, Yugoslav Premier and Foreign Minister, a good authority said today.

This is regarded as the most important item on the agenda in the talks between the Yugoslav delegation, whose arrival in Moscow was announced yesterday, and the Russian authorities. It can be taken for granted that the Russians will also be informed about the proposed composition of the new joint government, agreed upon by Dr. Subasic and Marshal Tito, and of the regency council to be formed to guarantee legal continuity until a popular vote has decided what form of constitution Yugoslavia will have after the war.

Although nothing definite will be known agout the opposition of the cabinet and the regency council until Premier Subasic returns to London, Edward Kardel, vice-president of the National Liberation Committee, is regarded as the most likely choice for the premiership by informed people here.

M. Kardel who is with Dr. Subasic in Moscow, is the young secretary general of the Communist Party of Slovenia.

Dr. Subasic and Marshal Tito, in addition to one representative each of the six autonomous countries to form the new Yugoslav federation, are expected to be members of the Regency Council.

Remarkable Record Set by Ontario Regt. in 3 Months Continuous Action

By ROSS MUNRO
(AP War Correspondent)

With the Canadians in Holland, Nov. 22 —(CP)— Across Northern France, Belgium and into Holland to the lower Rhine, the Lincoln and Welland Regiment from the Niagara Peninsula, has been in one action after another during the past three months. It's record has been remarkable.

This infantry regiment had its first fight at the little town of Tilly la Campagne, south of Caen. It fought in the Falaise battle, was right up in the front row for the massacre of the seventh army in the Trun gap, was the first Canadian outfit over the Seine. It marched on to the Somme and through the Pas de Calais; it fought along the Leopold canal in preparatory actions to the big assault on the Schelde pocket; it was in the spearhead of the Canadian armored and infantry attack northwest of Antwerp and it shared in the capture of Esschen. The "Lincs and Wellands" with western tanks captured Bergen op Zoom and were in the advance on Steenbergen and the lower Rhine.

Battle Tested.

Those are the highlights. The regiment now is as battle tested a unit as any in the Canadian Army here. It has been in battle in every type of country, bar mountains, and wound up in the soggy Dutch polders fighting over the most terrible territory of all. But the unit came through with flying colors.

A Lieutenant Colonel from Edmonton who fought with the Loyal Edmonton Regiment in Sicily and Italy commands the regiment and he has unstinted praise for his officers and men in this long, difficult advance across Northern Europe.

Present company commanders are Maj. Jim Swayze and Maj. Mervin McCutcheon, both of Niagara Falls, Ont., Maj. Jim Dandy of Sudbury, Ont., Capt. Owen Lambert, an American from La Jolla, Calif., Capt. Hank Gow of Port Colborne, Ont., and Capt. Hugh Ross of Welland, Ont.

On Aug. 8, when the First Canadian Army struck its big blow down the Caen-Falaise highway, the Lincoln and Wellands were among units which exploited the break through the German defence line made initially by the 2nd division.

Fought at Falaise.

Lincs fought through several towns on the road to Falaise and shared too in the second Canadian Army attack which went in on Aug. 14 and resulted in the capture of Falaise. The regiment was with other infantry units which poured over the Laison River in the wake of the biggest tanks assault of the Normandy campaign. It shattered a German gun screen and overran high ground northeast of Falaise. The Lincs had the honor to capture the important town of Olendon. On the day of this attack General Von Kluge, commander of the Seventh Army, sent this report to Berlin: "a break-through south of Caen has occurred the like of which we have never seen." The Niagara Peninsula Regiment had a full share in this job.

After Falaise the focal point of operations was Trun and it was the Lincoln and Wellands with a squadron of tanks from the South Alberta Regiment who broke through to Trun first, running German artillery fire all the way. When they got to Trun, the Germans were milling around the streets in the wildest confusion.

This was Aug. 19 and the regiment spent all day shooting up Germans trying to flee through the gap. From dawn to dusk, the Lincs fired every weapon they had. They did not suffer a single casualty themselves and inflicted tremendous casualties on the enemy. They also took 1,500 prisoners in that one day.

Reached the Seine.

Leaving Trun, the regiment turned east to the Seine and reached the river at Criquebeuf, south of Rouen. The Lincs found a skiff on the river bank and under covering fire from tanks and machine-guns ferried the entire company, commanded at the time by Maj. Keith Crummer of Chatham, Ont., over the broad Seine. Other companies, including one then commanded by Maj. J. A. Baldwin of London, Ont., followed them over and a firm bridgehead was established into which the Royal Canadian Engineers built a bridge.

The Germans were holding Hill 88, on the north side of the Seine, and Lincs stormed and captured this hill. Without any rest, they kept moving forward, clearing the road to Rouen.

Then the regiment struck out for the Somme, 70 miles away. On the heels of the retreating 15th Army, the Lincs pushed east with the other Canadians and made an unopposed crossing of the Somme near Abbeville. On to St. Omer they went and into Belgium to Bruges.

Lincs crossed Bruges canal and entered Eecloo, last big town in Belgium to be liberated. From there, they pushed along the south side of the Leopold canal. For three days they fought flooded land in water to their knees to take a couple of obscure but militarily important towns on the Dutch-Belgian border.

At Leopold Canal.

For three weeks, the regiment was on the Leopold canal, feeling out the German positions across the canal with frequent raids. This was in preparation for the full-scale attack on the Schelde which began with the crossing of the Leopold by Western battalions on Oct. 6.

The regiment went from the Leopold canal to positions northwest of Antwerp. On Oct. 20, it shared in the attack towards Esschen. Lincs had to fight through a thick forest, infested with mines and booby traps as well as Germans and then they made a spectacular night attack across country to Esschen.

On Oct. 22, Esschen was captured by the Lincs and another Ontario battalion. The daring night attack had paid off.

Maj. Dandy and his company did a fine job beyond Esschen clearing a wood and relieving pressure on another Canadian regiment.

From Esschen, the Lincs struck off to Bergen op Zoom, with tanks supporting them. Up a trail, littered with mines and felled trees, they fought for nearly every yard of ground over a distance of five miles. Germans finally could not take any more of a beating and they fell back, leaving Bergen unoccupied. Lincs and the tanks seized this opportunity and Maj. Dandy and Maj. Swayze led the first two infantry companies into the town to receive a terrific welcome from the Dutch people.

Fought Crack Troops.

The regiment was next ordered north to Steenbergen, last town in the Canadians' path before the lower Rhine.

In this attack, Lincs fought Herman Goering troops and men of the sixth parachute regiment, it was heavy going but the German defence was broken by the Lincs and other Ontario battalions and a Central Ontario Unit captured Steenbergen.

A German prisoner captured on this push paid the Lincs a back-handed compliment when he said: "The Lincoln and Welland Regiment has no sentiment, no mercy, no discipline." The Lincs themselves liked that.

Japanese Fight Fiercely To Hold Limon Defences

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Nov. 22 — (AP) — American infantrymen hacked away at Limon's defences today in the face of an evident Japanese intention to hold its positions at almost any cost.

The 32nd Division was subjecting Limon, Japanese stronghold, to steady pressure and enemy installations were being put out of commission one by one.

General MacArthur's communique said "The enemy has committed his 1st Division in a desperate effort" to hold its bastion at Limon, and the belief was the Japs were prepared to sacrifice the whole division if need be.

The Americans have occupied all strategic positions in the north except Limon itself. What appeared as an intended Japanese counter-attack to retake positions on the north coast of Leyte was frustrated by an American movement south along the highway to Limon.

The 96th Division smashed an isolated Japanese strongpoint west of Dagami, and on the south end of the American line the 7th Division repelled the fourth Jap counter-attack in approximately 10 days.

American heavy bombers are now operating from Leyte bases, the communique disclosed.

Report Nazi Party Has Hitler's Will— All Left to Party

London, Nov. 21 — (CP) — The Daily Sketch said Tuesday that "according to information received by two diplomatic sources here the Nazi party now is in possession of Hitler's will — and this indicates Hitler is dead."

The will, the Sketch added, leaves all Hitler's property and business assets to the Nazi party and disinherits his relatives.

"Hitler's main estate is his interest in the Eher Verlag, the publishing firm which made a vast fortune out of 'Mein Kampf.' His only property in land, which is Berchtesgaden, also goes to the party," said the paper.

Mailing Mystery Createdin Ottawa Says the Globe

Toronto, Nov. 22. (CP)—The Toronto Globe and Mail in a special dispatch from Ottawa today said a "major mailing mystery" had been created by letters asking consideration for Home Defence troops which have been sent to members of parliament in "free" government envelopes.

The dispatch said the letters were signed "The Zombies" and mimeographed on paper similar to that used by defence branches in reporting casualties. They were contained in brown envelopes commonly used in government service which bore "O.H.M.S." and "Free" on their exterior, it added.

The letters pictured the typical Home Defence soldier as a man of foreign-born parents who had suffered discrimination and said that if he were assured equal rights and opportunities, "there will be no need of coercion nor compulsion", the dispatch said.

It added there was no information as to how the persons responsible for the letters obtained official stationery, envelopes and the privilege of franking them.

A woman who shot and wounded an American officer was shot and killed by him.

The playing of games followed by delicious refreshments afforded everyone a really good time. WEDDINGS

BARBER—ELDER

The Full Gospel Tabernacle, Frankford, was the scene of a lovely evening wedding ceremony on Friday, November 17, at seven-thirty o'clock, when Jessie Violette Elder, 6 R.D. Trenton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Elder, of Slocan City, B.C., became the bride of Paul Alexander Barber, R.C.A.F. Trenton main station, son of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Barber, of Owen Sound. Padre Flt. Lieut. Patton and Rev. J. G. McElhoes officiated 'neath a white lattice arch entwined with sprigs of pine and cedar and banked on each side with large ferns and standards of Winter White and lemon yellow 'mums. The wedding music was played by Mrs. J. G. McElhoes.

The bride was particularly lovely in her gown of white sheer and embroidered fingertip veil of tulle illusion caught to her hair with a coronet of flowers. She carried a dainty white muff of veiling which was accentuated with her bouquet of pink roses and maidenhair fern.

Miss Betty Haines, of Toronto, as bridesmaid, was charmingly attired in a blue taffeta dress and elegant pink headdress. She carried a bouquet of salmon pink roses and maidenhair fern.

Rev. H. Barber, brother of the groom, from Elmira, Ont., was groomsman. The ushers were Sgt. William Ketles and Sgt. A. Davidson of the R.C.A.F., Trenton.

A reception followed at the home of Rev. and Mrs. J. G. McElhoes when a buffet luncheon was served. The groom's mother chose a teal blue crepe ensemble with corsage of baby 'mums for the occasion. The bride and groom stood under a bower of pink and white streamers and white wedding bells to receive the guests. Pink, white and silver were used as color decorations throughout the house.

For the wedding trip to Niagara Falls and Buffalo, N.Y., the bride donned a two-piece dress of robin's egg blue wool crepe complemented with chocolate brown accessories.

On their return they will take up residence in Frankford.

Mrs. Mikel Speaks On Red Cross Work At Aikens Church

3rd Sidney—The Women's Association of Aiken's United Church and the local Red Cross Unit which is affiliated with the W.A., met at the home of Mrs. Selburn Westover on Nov. 15th with a record attendance.

A pot-luck dinner was served at noon, to over thirty members and visitors.

The President, Mrs. Lee Grills was in charge of the afternoon meeting, which was opened with the theme song, a hymn and prayer by Mrs. Harley Hubble. The Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. Perry Hamilton and the reading on the Scripture given by Mrs. Everett Hubble. Prayer was offered for the boys and girls serving overseas, by Rev. H. H. Hillis.

A solo was rendered by Mrs. Earl Bush and readings were given by Mrs. Hillis, Mrs. C. McMullen and S. Spafford.

During the business session a letter of appreciation was read from Mrs. George Parry, for cards sent, and kindness shown during the past weeks that she has been confined to her home.

The "Thankful" bags that had been made and distributed by the President, Mrs. Grills, early in the year, were handed in at this meeting. The Treasurer, Mrs. Murney Jeffrey reported the contents of the bags as being forty-dollars, with almost a third of the bags yet to be sent in. This amount was very gratifying to Mrs. Grills who thanked the members for their co-operation and assistance.

The highlight of the day was the presence of Mrs. W. C. Mikel, President of the Belleville Red Cross who gave an interesting talk, and demonstration of the work accomplished in the Red Cross work rooms. Special interest was shown in the leather jackets and the more complicated articles made, as well as the sewing and knitting done by the out-post units throughout the surrounding district. A strong appeal was made for more Red Cross workers everywhere, as the need is very urgent.

In a report from the National Headquarters, grave concern was felt, as the quotas for the past nine months have been below average. Where 55,000 long-sleeved sweaters were asked for, only 13,000 had been shipped to date. Similiar figures were given in other articles.

In her talk, Mrs. Mikel explained the origin of the Red Cross Society. The American Red Cross Society was formed in the years 1863-4 and the Canadian in 1885. The Belleville Branch was chartered in 1918, although work was done throughout the Great War of 1914-18.

The Belleville Branch has been active, throughout the years of peace. Milk and Cod Liver Oil were provided the needy children, and many needed cases received help.

As the need has arisen, the activities of the Society have been increased, especially during the years of the present war. The Blood Donors Clinic has been a branch of Red Cross work, as has the Dental Clinic, the Highway First Aid, the Junior Red Cross, the Hospital First Aid, Nutrition classes. There are four Red Cross out-post hospitals in Hastings County.

Words of appreciation were extended to Mrs. Mikel by Mrs. Grills, President of the W. A. and Mrs. S. Westover, Red Cross Convener for the highly-informative and interesting address which has stimulated an increasing interest "the long last mile" as quoted by the National Headquarters in the need for comforts for service men overseas.

A piano solo by Mrs. Harleigh Hamilton was enjoyed by all, and the meeting was closed with the Mizpah Benediction.

The Dinner collection was $6.35 and the Red Cross collection $3.25.

The Experts Say

(By The Canadian Press)

Ottawa (CP)—BRAISED BRISKET: A delicious and substantial one-dish main course is the dream of every housewife who is short on time and help but long on family appetite.

Braised short ribs or brisket makes the dream come true, says Laura C. Pepper, Agriculture Department Consumer Section. It's a flavorful, satisfying dish that means a minimum of after-dinner washing up and a maximum of nourishment for a hungry flock.

Use 1½ pounds boneless or 3½ pounds of meat with bone. Trim off excess fat and melt it in the frying pan. Dredge meat with seasoned flour and brown it with two slices onions in the hot fat. Add 1½ cups of liquid (water, canned tomatoes or juice, vegetable water.) Cover lightly and simmer on top of the stove or in a moderately slow oven, 325 degrees Fahrenheit, until the meat is tender, about 2½ to three hours. Raw vegetables, potatoes, carrots, turnips, parsnips, celery, may be added during the last hour of cooking. Use liquid in pan as base for gravy.

Other dishes may be baked in the oven during the 2½ to three hours cooking of the main dish. The temperature of the oven is somewhat limited but some of the other items that may be baked in 325 degrees Fahrenheit oven include puddings or custard, baked apples or sauce and some cookies.

TRICKY IRON: Foods that rate in iron by chemical analysis are not always the best sources of iron in the diet, says the Nutrition Division.

This is because iron in some foods is not readily assimilated by the body. But liver is a rich source of iron that can be easily utilized by the body. For this reason and because it has valuable amounts of thiamin (vitamin B1), Canada official food rules recommend the serving of liver at least once a week.

Kidney and heart are also good sources of iron. The food value of these "organ" meats, as with other meats, bears no relation to price and the less expensive "organ" meats can be made into deliciously appetizing dishes.

IN THE BAG: It makes the daily tasks easier if you pin a paper bag to the belt of your housedress and use it to collect the part of the jig-saw puzzle you'll find in the hall or the ties that must go to the kitchen for pressing .. all the small items that have to be moved from one place to another every day. (A paper bag is useful too, when you go through the house dumping ash trays and picking up apple cores.)

And how about designating a special drawer as a Lost and Found Department. It helps teach children to be more careful about picking up their toys if there is a small ceremony about getting lost articles out of the drawer.

MEMORY JOG: Butter coupons 88 and 89, normally valid on December 7 may not be used before December 14 .. until these two coupons have been used, consumers should retain ration book four, even though all sugar and preserves coupons have previously been surrendered.

Although a year has passed since the atoll fell to the marines, kindly nuns of the order visit the graves and pray for the liberators. Sister Raphael, a native of Australia, was questioned by Japs several times during their occupation of Tarawa, believing she was harboring the crew of an American bomber, wrecked near the island before the invasion. During one interrogation a Jap soldier held a bayonet against her back as she stood facing a machine-gun. Sister Raphael's brother is an Australian commando.

40TH ANNIVERSARY IS CELEBRATED

Past Presidents' Night is Held by Ladies' Auxiliary to Locomotive Engineers

The Ladies' Auxiliary to the Locomotive Engineers celebrated their fortieth birthday recently in the Engineers' Hall, Pine Street, with a good attendance. This also took the form of a past presidents' night the principal chairs being taken by the past presidents of other years, those participating seemingly enjoyed the privilege of filling the various stations and initiating two members. Mrs. W. A. Morgan, president, welcomed the past presidents and members and turned the meeting over to the officers chosen for the work.

Letters of congratulations were received from the Grand President, Mrs. Ella D. Turner, of St. Louis, Mo; Ladies' Auxiliary to B. of R.T.; the Grand Organizer, and many others.

A delicious banquet was arranged by Mrs. Orne, past president, and a very capable committee, the tables being arranged in the form of a "T."

A beautiful birthday cake occupied the centre of the head table, decorated with the colors of the Order. Autumn flowers and red candles in crystal candelabra, were also used in decoration, the gift of Mrs. Orne who invited the members to the table. The Auxiliary was happy to have Mrs. W. R. Taylor, the only Charter member and a president in the years 1916 and 1917. Then as now, war was in progress, and then as now, the Society took an active interest in all branches of the war effort. Mrs. Taylor cut the birthday day.

The Toast to The King, was responded to by singing "God Save The King". Many other toasts followed.

Thus ended a happy birthday in which every member enjoyed meeting again and which will be long remembered, to those who took part, and especially to the president, who kindly gave the past officers the privilege of helping.

Red Cross Workers Slackening Despite Great Need for Material

The regular monthly meeting of the executive of the Belleville Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society was held on November 16 with the president, Mr. M. P. Duff in the chair.

Several communications were dealt with. They related to (1) I. O. D. E. co-operation with war brides; (2) Blood Donor Campaign for more donors; (3) Instructions concerning Prisoner of War Mail.

An appeal from headquarters for more workers, was read especially for civilian clothing and knitted comforts. At present the response, both locally and generally, is discouraging. The need is increasing as the allied armies enter occupied countries and yet the workers are slackening.

A letter of thanks for the jam and honey sent in was read. This was very satisfactory as the quantity was greater than last year.

The treasurer, Mr. Zeran, reported for October:

Receipts $372.36
Bills 581.63

As Mrs. J. A. Kerr has resigned from the convenership of the Welfare Committee. Miss Barbara Graham was appointed to this position and her name adde to the executive committee.

Concerning possible night accommodation for war brides it was reported that the Y. W. C. A. Service Rest Room was not suitable and it was decided to try to procure accommodation at a tourist home when necessary.

War Work Committee

Mrs. Mikel reported for the Women's War Work Committee for October as follows:

"There were 9 cartons of Red Cross supplies sent to Headquarters in Toronto during October containing different articles of clothing, quilts for British Civilian Relief, hospital supplies and knitted comforts for the armed forces. Contained in these cartons were 960 articles consisting of 208 for British Civilian Relief, 400 hospital supplies, 32 quilts and afghans, 93 seamen's comforts, 115 for air force and army, 97 knitted articles for civilians and women's auxiliaries and 15 liaison knitted articles.

A communication received this week from Mrs. Fraser, chairman of the Ontario Division of the Women's War Work Committee, has left us very much discouraged as to the amount of work being accomplished by the women of Ontario. While the Belleville Branch is doing fairly well, we are only sending one-half the supplies that we did a year ago. Some groups have gone out of existence and some others are decreased in numbers. A few groups have held together wonderfully well but their efforts are not enough to make up for the shortage of other groups.

We received a request for 700 articles for the British Civilian Relief in June which was supposed to be finished and sent by September—three months—but only one-half of it has been sent to Headquarters. It is pleasing to note that quotas of knitting have been fairly well kept up to date. We find one of the difficulties is that some people want to do only what they like to do—not what we are requested to make by Headquarters. They know the needs better than we for they get their requests from England. These requests are diveded by the Canadian Red Cross among the different provincial divisions."

Respectfully submitted,
Lillian E. Mikel,
Chairman, Women's War Work Committee, Belleville Branch.

Slimming the Bulky Figure

Leslie Brooks has a trim, lovely figure

By HELEN FOLLETT

IT IS ONLY the brave friend who talks to you about your figure, especially if the talk is in the nature of criticism. She may tell you frankly that you are getting bulky and ought to do something about it. You may have noticed that there is a strain on dress seams and that belts are being let out a notch but unless you have had a frequent conference with the bath room scales, you may not realise what changes have gone on in your shape. Every woman who is inclined to take on tonnage should have a full length mirror; otherwise she will not realise that bumps are bumpier, the youthful lines broadening out.

It isn't necessary to eat less food to reduce weight or to experience the pangs of semi-starvation. One can, in fact, eat even more groceries, if they are the kind that do not create adipose tissue.

Reducing Diet.

If, instead of eating bread, butter, cereals, fat meats, candy and pastries one ate more green salads, leafy vegetables, lean meat, tomatoes cucumbers, string beans, fruit and clear soups there would be a noticeable drop of weight in two weeks time. Buttermilk and unsweetened lemonade should be included in the diet.

It isn't how much you eat but what you eat that determines proportions. An egg a day will supply vitamin A. You will get vitamin B and C from fruits and vegetables. Lean meat will provide the necessary protein. A small amount of starchy food will give one all the carbohydrates one needs.

Helpful Exercise.

Butter is fattening, but a small allowance is permitted by reducing specialists—not more than one half a pat a day.

Exercise helps but is not absolutely necessary as reducing is possible by diet alone.

Calesthenics that bring into motion the interlacing muscles from ribs to hips are not exhausting, and they tighten up the sagging abdomen, lessen expansion at the waistline.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Acknowledge All Good Wishes

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

I would like to have you tell me whether in your opinion it is a definite breach of etiquette not to acknowledge a card of congratulation for a fourth wedding anniversary. I was under the impression that it is proper to acknowledge gifts, and to acknowledge cards of sympathy, but that it is not really bad manners not to acknowledge greeting cards sent for one's birthday or wedding anniversaries. I was called "ignorant" because I did not acknowledge the wedding anniversary cards sent to me.

T. S.

In my opinion, yes, it is discourteous not to acknowledge congratulatory cards sent on one's wedding anniversary or birthday. Let's figure out why. You do, you say, write a thank-you note for a gift, but you don't write a note of thanks for a card of congratulation. In other words, you thank for a thing of some value, large or small, but you don't thank for the kindness and devoted remembrance of a thought.

The Bible says, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee." Let's say your friend Mrs. Rich sends you a silver tray for your wedding anniversary. You write her a note of thanks. But your friend Mrs. Poor, perhaps really more devoted to you than Mrs. Rich, sends you a loving thought on a congratulatory card . . "Twas all she gave, 'twas all she had to give." Mrs. Poor's thoughtfulness you don't take the trouble to acknowledge. In other words, it's the gift you thank for, not the generous spirit that prompts the thought.

Now, dear lady, I know you're going to like yourself better, and you're certainly going to endear yourselves to your friends, if you make it your charming habit to thank for the gifts of the spirit as well as for material gifts.

A Simpler Plan

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

Next month my fiance will be on leave, and we are to be married. I have made all my plans for our church wedding . . . I'm to wear a white wedding dress and bridal veil, have a maid of honor and two bridesmaids. But I do wish you would suggest what kind of wedding reception I should have. I am thinking about having a dinner in a hotel for the members of our immediate families, and then have relatives and friends come to my house for simple refreshments, and have the dinner party join them later. Would this be proper?

S. T.

This plan seems unnecessarily complicated to me, for it means that the reception guests must wait until after the dinner. Why not choose, if possible, say a four or four-thirty hour for the ceremony, then have your informal reception at your house, then go on to the dinner at the hotel. The dinner hour to be chosen according to your going-away plans.

There are some other alternatives too, if you'd like to consider them, perhaps in the interest of more convenience. (1) You might have the family dinner the evening before your wedding. (2) You might, at your reception, have a table set in the dining-room, at which would be seated you and the bridegroom, your attendants, and the members of the immediate families. The other guests to be served buffet fashion. This is a very charming type of reception, and would mean not so much rush to get to a dinner in a hotel. And of course it is less expensive, if this is an item to be considered.

BEAUTY

Massage Exercises Facial Fibers

Time was when women had touch-me-not complexions. They protected their faces from everything that they thought might injure them—even soap, which is the queen of cosmetics. They carried parasols so Mr. Sol could not get in any of his mean licks. On cold or windy days they wore thick veils through which they could scarcely breathe. If Mary Jane so much as put powder on her nose she was considered fast. Mutton tallow was used on the sly to keep the skin smooth, was carefully hidden so Pa would never see it.

In those days there were hairdressing parlors, but only a few, even in large cities. The bride had her hair styled on her wedding day and all the rest of her life she wrestled with curling irons or crimping pins. But pulchritude progresses. The hairdressing parlors originated the idea of giving facial treatments, which were immediately under suspicion. "If you have even a few of them, you must keep right on or your face will go all to pieces," proclaimed Aunt Emily. So the old girls tell us, anyway.

We know now that massage, properly given, is invigorating and helpful. It speeds up the circulatory streams. Good circulation means firm tissues, is an insurance against premature wrinkles.

Don't treat your skin as if it were a delicate fabric. When washing your face, fluff up a rich lather, friction it in with your fingertips before using the washcloth. And do, please, use a fresh wash cloth every day. Rinse all the soap away — with warm water if you are going to use a cream, with cold water if you about to apply an astringent. When drying, fold the towel around your hands, start patting at the neck, go skipping up over the chin, cheeks and forehead with brisk smacks. Every washing then will be a fibre toning treatment. The plan works. Those who have tried it out have been delightfully surprised at the results — coloring better, tissues firmer.

To your cosmetic equipment, add a muscle oil or a heavy massage emollient. The cream permits heavier friction; the fingers don't slide and slip as they do when a liquid is used.

Spread it on lightly, starting at the collar bones, working upward. With flattened fingers, apply it from chin to ear lobes, along the line of the jaws. Do wide circles in the centre of the cheeks, but don't push the flesh up around the eyes. Do small circles over the forehead. Force the cream into the creases at the wings of the nostrils; that area is a favorite habitat for blackheads.

Then give your face a good spanking. Tilt your chin and slap your neck briskly; necks often age before faces. Smooth up and down with flattened fingers, one hand following the other. Let the cream remain on over night; your skin will feast upon it.

The Marry Go Round

Young Love ——or a Career?

A career-girl writes to ask me to settle her problem for her. Shall she marry now (at twenty-two) or put it off until she has made good at her career?

Nearly every girl, in these days, has to answer that question for herself. She alone can guess which will mean more to her—professional success or a happy marriage—and whether she can manage to wangle them both.

The time to make good at a career is while you're young and full of life and enthusiasm and high hopes. But also the ideal time to marry is while you are young and ardent and adaptable. This doesn't mean leaping straight from the bassinet to the altar nor cutting your teeth on a wedding-ring.

Yet the girl who insists on putting off marriage until she has tried her wings or seen a little more of life may be preparing herself for a diet of dead-sea fruit in the future.

Marriage is for just one purpose—and that is the purpose of making a life TOGETHER, whether it's a home-life, a gypsy life, an adventure or a career. And when you have already made your own life and found your place in the scheme of things all by your lonesome, a husband is apt to spoil the ensemble or disrupt everything.

Taking a brand new man into your life after it is "all set" and after you have fixed ideas about the temperature of a room or the way a steak should be cooked is as risky as bringing a brand new piece of furniture into a room that has already been artistically completed by an interior decorator.

If he fits into the arrangement, doesn't crowd out everything else and seems just the finishing touch necessary to give your life charm and balance, you are lucky and wise to marry him no matter what your age. But if he is too young or too old, too brilliant or too dull—if he doesn't blend with the tempo and arrangement of your life, your experiment will end in failure and disillusionment.

Two young things in the twenties can adjust themselves to each other's ways and temperaments—and even each other's careers—so that they GROW together like two bunches of iris planted in the same garden. They can start life on a shoe-string and get used to eating spaghetti and meatballs and sleeping on hard studio couches—and can dream sweetly of their golden future instead of lying awake and nagging each other about the bills. But after two people's lives have jelled it's different.

Congenial companionship is the sweetest and most precious thing in the world. Every man needs it and every woman longs for it. And the best time to find it is in the springtime of life, at the beginning of your career.

So if this column ever gave advice, I'd say obey that impulse—marry the boy! There is no career, however dazzling, that can take the place of young love.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

There's Hope as Long as She's Interested in the Beauty Parlor

Dear Miss Fairfax:

"Three and a half years ago, my husband and I discovered that our daughter in her twenties was in love with, and seeing a married man, father of a couple of children. He was many years her senior, and a person of importance. We had a terrific scene at home, and we forbade her seeing this man again.

"Since then she has changed from a happy carefree girl to a moody and depressed person. She used to belong to several clubs and played the piano extremely well. She has given up these interests.

"She has hosts of friends and plenty of dates. Now she ignores men entirely. She is intelligent, has a fine secretarial position and members of her firm praise her efficiency. She dresses beautifully, and spends much time in beauty parlors. Her Mother."

Don't give up hope as long as your daughter goes to a beauty parlor regularly and dresses beautifully. Her general interests in life may seem numbed for a while, but the fact that she keeps up appearances is proof positive she has not lost interest in happiness. If she let herself become shabby and neglected her personal appearance, you would have more reason to worry, my dear lady.

The tried and true remedy for such a case as you describe is — the counter-irritant in the shape of another man. If your daughter could only be made to take an interest in another man, even as a cure, and resume her activities in music, etc., it's more than likely that in no time at all this older man would fall into the limbo of past experiences.

In spite of the fine position she holds, it would be a good thing if she would join the women's reserve of one of the services. If she became a CWAC she would have a chance of going places, possibly overseas where everything would be so different that there would be no time for vain repinings. Hearts don't break easily in the twenties.

Soldier Discovers There Are Worse Places Than Home

This soldier's letter might be written by any man — soldier or civilian. This boy, he's hardly more than that though in uniform, has discovered home is a pretty good place. But he hadn't bothered to keep the home fires burning while he was gone.

He's 22, has seen service in this country and in the tropics. Left a charming wife at home, took his fun where he found it, expected to find his wife waiting and adoring. There was no other man in her case but she had got her young husband's number.

His background was — spoiled son of well-to-do parents. They made it possible for him to marry the prettiest girl in town when he was 19. But after a few months he got tired of his wife and domesticity, just as he tired of kites, electric trains and even his bicycle when he grew older.

He welcomed the draft; real adventure, war was what he was after. His home, the adoration of his wife, the devotion of his parents had begun to seem sissy stuff — hark to the bugle call. At a post in the Middle West he felt he had experienced real love for the first time, and urged his wife to get a divorce. She didn't answer that letter.

Then across the Pacific into the tropics where everything seemed stagnant, which proved to be the beginning of malaria. The girl for whom he wanted his wife to divorce him married someone else. She didn't even write to tell him, or break their tentative engagement. He heard about it through some of the guys at his old post.

He had been pretty liberal to this girl, as his parents had sent him money and his wife never accepted her allowance. The marriage of this girl started all sorts of growing pains, and when he was invalidid home, he expected to find things as he had left them. His parents were still delighted to see him, but the young wife had changed. She was employed in an arsenal, and during her spare time helped at the Red Cross.

She told him he might have his divorce (but he didn't want one then). "There is no other man in her life, but she is through with me. I want more than anything for her to love me again. How shall I go about a reconciliation? (signed) Malcolm."

The answer is simple. You've got to prove to your wife you've changed, and perhaps it may take a long, long time. You've got to show her you've grown up, that there's something better in life than having a good time. But it's up to her whether she will believe you or not. I hope she will. lvexvl: bTbe:ee syeh ,m ewtb

Fashion Flashes

A SURE-FIRE HIT is the dress cut on simple shirtwaist lines in rich fabric. This formula is used for a frock of blue and plaid taffeta, the plaid dramatized with colored sequins. Careless, shirtwaist top, but skirt has puffed drapery at hemline.

YOU'LL BE THINKING you're in the zoo when you step into the yard-goods section of your favorite store. New Spring prints include dogs, leaping fawns, fishes, birds, horses and elephants, to name but a few. We liked the colorful print made up of proud roosters, little brown hens and fluffy yellow chicks. It is amusing and colorful.

NICE TOUCH with an untrimmed coat is a fur bag and matching hat, belt, or scarf. A good-looking bag is in mink-dyed muskrat or leopard with enormous bracelet handles of simulated shell or amber.

VERY NICE for late afternoon or with evening things is a collarless, 36-inch, casual, raglan style coat of fine black woollen lined with snowy white lapin.

NOT SO TOUGH LEATHER

Warm, dry air takes the life of more than your potted plants. . . it is lingering death for any prized leather possessions, from Great Uncle Henry's leather topped desk to the youngest's ski boots. Leather needs a preservation treatment every so often to keep it in good health. Saddle soap is one of the best known of these. Remember. . . . once it is allowed to get really shabby leather cannot be made to look like new. . . .but its looks can be improved. A good way to clean suede is to rub it with hot bran and a special brush for the job. Skeptical? Try it and see.

Old Refrain

"Don't scrub the vegetables Mrs. Kaye

Unless you use them right away".

Too true. If you like to buy potatoes and carrots and other root vegetables that have been washed clean and bright buy only in small quantities and use them up quickly—they don't keep as well as the unwashed ones.

More Kitchen Life Lines.

It's the acid touch that keeps aluminum pots and pans all aglitter inside as well as out. Give them a doing out with boiling water plus a little vinegar. Let it bubble on the stove for a few minutes.

If food burns while you're on the telephone with the friend who always calls when you're in the midst of preparing dinner don't scream. Salvage what food you can and put some water in the pan to boil. This will loosen the black mass so you can scrape it off (with a wooden spoon please).

Enamel saucepans that have been burned take well to a pinch of soda in the water.

Don't Feed the Drain

Out of the saucepan and down the drain go up to half of the minerals and vitamins from home or commercially canned vegetables. Oh yes they do! That is unless you save the liquid in the can. Make up your mind to use it in gravies, sauces or in tomato juice cocktail. Go on. . the sink can get along without vitamins but you can't.

NICE GOING in the fur-trimmed suit bracket. We liked a suit with skirt or brown wool topped by a lumberjack's coat of gold wool buttoned at the snug waistband with two brown Persian lamb buttons. Narrow flat collar, and pointed notched revers of the fur, also double-breasted buttons.

VERY CLEVER is the idea of the suit jacket that looks just as good when worn over frocks. Gold wool is used for a skirt and matching topper, the latter cut on short, very boxy lines and dramatized with huge, muff-like cuffs of black fox.

OSHAWA 'GENS' BEAT MARLBOROS BY 4-3 COUNT

Junior Champions Setting Pace With Two Wins in Two Starts

By The Canadian Press

In the brace of O.H.A. junior "A" engagements last night, the Falcons handed a stiff 10-4 setback to the Galt Red Wings at St. Catharines, while at Toronto the Oshawa Generals, Memorial Cup defenders, scored their second victory of the campaign, 4-3, with Marlboros as their opposition.

There were no less than 35 penalties in the St. Catharines encounter, with 11 offenders being benched in the lively last period. The Falcons led 2-1 in the first stanza, 4-2 in the second and ran in six counters to two in the final frame to make the totals 10-4. Peterson paced the barrage with four goals and one assist while McMurdy extended a helping hand with no less than five assists during the fray. Other Falcon scorers were Edwards and Unger, two each, and T. Smellie and Dawdy, one apiece. Scores were well divided for the Red Wings, the sharpshooters being Mousseau, Bahando, Adamo and Krompotic.

Once more Shewchuk started the ball rolling for Generals at Toronto with the initial counter and Leachman equalized for Marlboros in the first period but Gallagher and Denny salted the game away for the champions with a tally each in the second frame, followed by McNabney early in the third period. Kane and Naylor for Marlboros concluded the scoring.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

The proposal has been put forward in London, Eng., to stage an Allied army Olympiad at Paris, following the cessation of hostilities in Europe, for all former athletes, including women, now with the Allied troops overseas. The army-sponsored plan, which would be similar to the Allied military championship meet at Paris at the close of the First Great War, has already received the support of many sport officials, coaches and players now serving in the European theatre.

Staff Sgt. Joe DiMaggio, who will be 30 years of age next Saturday, is spending a 21-day leave from the U.S. army air force in New York City. Asked yesterday if he were headed for medical discharge because of a stomach ailment, Joe declared he was in the army and would go where he was sent.

Word was received at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., yesterday that Pte. Millard (Dixie) Howell, former pitcher for Syracuse Chiefs in the International League, is a prisoner of war in Germany. His wife and two daughters live at Wilkes-Barre.

Georgia Tech and Tulsa University have been signed again for the Orange Bowl football fixture New Year's Day, it was announced at Miami, Fla., last night. Last Jan. 1 Georgia whipped Tulsa 20-18 in a sensational finish.

Possibility that three puck-chasers would return to their N.H.L. clubs shortly under demobilization plans of the R.C.A.F. was intimated at Winnipeg yesterday. The three are Wally Stanowski, property of the Toronto Leafs; Neil Colville of the New York Rangers and Jack Stewart of Detroit Red Wings.

At Winnipeg the Kelvin Clippers defeated Daniel McIntyre Maroons 11-9 to retain their Winnipeg inter-high school rugby league championship. The victory also automatically gave them the scholastic championship of Manitoba because St. John's College of Winnipeg, which won the Manitoba schools rugby league title, declined to enter a provincial playoff owing to the lateness of the season.

New York, Nov. 22 — (AP) — Everybody who knows anything about baseball remembers Fred Merkle and his famous "boner" but who recalls Warren Gill? . . . Toronto, Nov. 22 — (CP) — The good burghers of the west, who always have maintained that Eastern Canada couldn't get along without players from the sunset side of the Great Lakes, are chuckling audibly now. They are waiting hopefully to see how hard hit the Easterners will be by the Manitoba Amateur Hockey Association edict banning the export of junior hockey goods from the province . . . First indication of its effect came when the Hamilton, Ont., junior team announced its withdrawal from the junior "A" setup. Three Winnipeg players were counted on to make the club a contender, but they just aren't available now.

No Full House?

Two bouncing boys and an equal number of girls make up King Clancy's family now, and the old favorite of the icelanes is quoted as saying: "Two of each now, a pair of kings and a pair of queens. That's all there is — there won't be any more."

New Job for Coach:

Bob (Calgary Herald) Manini comes up with a novel suggestion to give football coaches a more active part master-minding their charges during the game. His idea is to take off the flying wing and throw the coach in as twelfth man. Then the prexy could give the players the strategy in the huddle, afterward retiring out of range while the boys carried out the play. It probably wouldn't appeal too much to coaches of losing teams, though — they couldn't blame the quarterback for calling the dumb play that lost the game.

Incidentally:

The Peden bicycling team was reunited in Calgary the other day, but on a strictly non-professional basis. Torchy, now in the R.C.A.F., and brother Doug of the Army spent a short leave in Calgary discussing old times on the six-day bike trails . . . Who wants to take patent medicine when he can play in the N.H.L.? J. P. Fitzgerald of the Toronto Telegram commenting on Bill Ezinicki's acceptance for Army service after playing a few games with Toronto Leafs, says it "has a touch of those cure-alls so prominent in print years ago." Bill previously was discharged from the R.C.A.F. and rejected by the Army doctors . . . Coach Percy Page of the old Edmonton Grads pays tribute to the late E. E. (Cappy) Kidd, one of the staunchest supporters of the classy girls' basketball team. Page says Cappy's "Come on, the Grads" often provided the spark that set off a winning rally . . .

Sport Shorts From Britain

By ALLAN NICKLESON

Newmarket, England, Nov. 22 — (CP)—A couple of country chaps came up from Somerset to Newmarket to watch the fall yearling sales — and returned home as a syndicate of race horse owners.

"Just for fun" they started the bidding for one of the brown daughters of Orwell, famous winner of the 2,000 Guineas classic race.

It was noon and the crowd had thinned out. In a corner, Clifford Cox, who runs a garage in Bishopsworth village, near Bristol, sat with his pal, Harold Patch, a farmer of the same district. They whispered together, then Clifford crossed his fingers and bid 25 guineas ($117.50). A woman, eating a sandwich on the other side of the ring, upped the bid by five guineas, and then it went to 40.

The Somerset chums exchanged glances, then the farmer nodded to the auctioneer.

"Forty-five guineas bid," said the auctioneer. "Come along, please. Remember this filly's sire won the 2,000 Guineas."

But there was no reply — and to amazement of the two Somerset men, the proud daughter of Orwell was knocked down to them for 45 guineas.

Only a few minutes previously, Trainer J. L. Lawson paid the equivalent of $12,200 for a filly by classic winner Blue Peter — and the two chums had gazed wide-eyed in wonder.

"Harold and I and another chap —Bob Smith, a dock hand — will go shares in the filly," Clifford said later. "Harold will keep her on his farm and Bob, who was brought up among horses and has ridden in races, will train her.

"Harold and I often dreamed of having a race-horse of our own. But we never dreamed of getting one of first-class blood — and for 45 guineas."

Frank H. Bowcher is a farmer with 800 acres near Colchester, Essex, and "one or two horses." Mr. Bowcher also is a character.

At the Newmarket bloodstock sales he looked out of place, this amiable, beaming bachelor of 74, without a collar, and a rough tweed cap over his head.

Around this red-cheeked man with the white moustache were millionaires, ready to bid for the nameless colt swishing around the ring.

When the bidding began at 500 guineas, Mr. Bowcher nodded. The bidding reached 1,500 guineas. Mr. Bowcher nodded again. He kept on nodding until the hammer fell and the colt was his for 2,400 guineas (approximately $11,400).

Then Mr. Bowcher trotted off to see his colt — the horse that may never see a racecourse.

Because Mr. Bowcher doesn't buy horses to race them. Some he buys are not even trained. They are put out to grass, to a life or leisure.

"He loves horses," a friend explained. "They are his life and he doesn't buy them to go pot-hunting."

MEETS GYROFFY

Last week "Bunny Al" Dunlop bit off a little more than he could chew in the matter of wrestling when he tangled with Tom Collins. However, "burly Al" survived long enough to take on Johnny Gyroffy to start off tonight's grunt and groan show at the Market St. sports palace. This will be followed by a meeting of Collins and Al Smith, a pudgy New Yorker, but what the fans are interested in is the return British Empire title match between John Katan and "Whipper Billie" Watson. Some people are referring to this scrap as "Katan's last stand, or what became of Custer"?

CANADIENS TIED WITH THE LEAFS FOR FIRST PLACE

Habitants Defeat Boston Bruins 4-1 With Losing Goalie Starring

Montreal Canadiens did what was expected of them when they defeated Art Ross' Boston Bruins 4-1 last night and as a result now are tied with Toronto Maple Leafs for first place in the National Hockey League.

Before 12,000 spectators at Boston Gardens, the 1943-44 Stanley Cup champions worried rookie goalie Harvey Bennett throughout the entire game but it wasn't until the second period that they were able to breach his cage.

Bruins, on the other hand, were literally handcuffed by the flying Frenchmen. Goalie Bill Durnan of Montreal was robbed of the first shutout of the 1944-45 season when, with less than seven minutes to go, Armand Gaudreault, former member of Quebec Aces, last year's Canadian Senior Amateur champions, flipped in a screened shot. Veterans Art Jackson and Aubrey (Dit) Clapper assisted.

A slashing penalty to Gaudreault midway through the second period paved the way for Montreal's first goal. Toe Blake hooked a Boston clearing shot and fired directly at Bennett and three minutes later he set up the play for Maurice Richard who countered with a 12-foot angle shot.

Fern Gauthier made it 3-0 for Canadiens when his hard drive at Bennett bounced after the latter got his stick on the puck and angled back into the cage. Wilf Field scored as he sprang from the penalty box where he had served a minor for tripping.

Canadiens clash with the third-place Detroit Red Wings at Detroit tomorrow night while Toronto takes on the Bruins at Boston. Rangers take on Paul Thomson's cellar-dwelling Black Hawks at Chicago.

Chinese Brothers Return Home

Port Colborne, Ont., Nov. 22 — (CP)—The Chinese hockey-playing brothers from Lucknow — George, Albert and William Chin — have returned to their homes without taking part in any games with the Port Colborne entry in the Ontario Hockey Association Junior A series.

This was made known last night by officials of the Port Colborne Club who linked their departure with a notice of motion presented at the annual meeting of the Ontario Minor Hockey Association last year. Under the motion, players participating in a Junior game are barred from playing in the O. M. H. A. Juvenile series.

Officials here said they were unable to learn whether the regulation is actually in force but the Chins and other lesser known juveniles were advised not to play with the Ports even in one game in case it is.

The Chins had a tryout this season with Toronto Maple Leafs.

BUFFALO BISONS BEAT ST. LOUIS

Buffalo Bisons, taking an easy 4-2 win from St. Louis Flyers last night, rolled into first place in the eastern division of the American Hockey League by a one-point margin over the idle Hershey Bears.

Centre player Len Halderson sparked an early four-goal lead for the visiting Bisons with one goal and two assists, while his linemate Doug Lewis upped his scoring average with three smart assists. Davidson, Webster and Jones registered a goal apiece for the winners.

Rookie Nick Evanshen halted the one-way scoring in the final minute of the middle frame by notching one for the Flyers in a combination play with Hudson and Nakina Smith. Blake made it two for St. Louis early in the third period.

The Flyers suffered a casualty in the second stanza when regular defenceman Red Doran was retired with a sprained ankle.

Tonight Cleveland visit Pittsburgh Hornets in the only A. H. L. game scheduled.

University of Toronto To Have Hockey Team

Toronto, Nov. 22 — (CP) — The University of Toronto will have a senior hockey team this winter for the first time since 1940, it was made known last night, although its activities will be confined to exhibition games.

Ace Bailey, one-time star with the Toronto Maple Leafs in the National Hockey League, will coach the team which has its first practices scheduled for today and Thursday.

Reorganization of the team is regarded as a preparatory move for the return of intercollegiate competition with the University of Western Ontario, McGill University and Queen's University.

FINALS IN TORONTO

Toronto, Nov. 22 —(CP)— The football championship of the Central Ontario Secondary Schools Association will be settled in Toronto Saturday in a game between Niagara Falls and Peterborough Collegiate Institute teams. The two teams are reputed to be the strongest ever to enter the association finals. The game is scheduled to start at 10 a.m.

And Still They Come.

The latest hockey gossip along the main stem includes a Frankford-Batawa junior team in the offing. If the local district junior O. H. A. rumors are anywhere near correct there'll be more junior squads in No. 2 loop than in any other hockey collection in the business.

Looking over the list of reported starters there is Campbellford and Hastings already with entry fees paid. A Stirling-Madoc combination, Tweed, Trenton and Belleville. And now along comes a Frankford-Batawa report bringing the number up to seven. Looks like a pretty heavy grouping for junior "B" hockey, notwithstanding the old saying "the more the merrier".

If an eighth club should be procured a better idea would be to split the octette into two quartettes, with no time out for singing.

Remember When.

Frank Calder, secretary of the old National Hockey Association, was elected president of the newly-organized National Hockey League 27 years ago today. Montreal Canadiens and Wanderers, Ottawa Senators and the Toronto Arenas were the original entries in the circuit. Later Quebec was included before Hamilton took a whirl at matters and later had its franchise moved to New York. Calder died in February, 1943 and no permanent president has been named in his stead.

Last Roundup.

Unless John "Fingers" Katan dethrones Billie Watson tonight he might just as well hibernate on his Palermo farm for the winter and most of next spring as far as that goes. On the other hand "crowd-pleaser" Watson doesn't intend to relinquish that money-providing Empire crown without a struggle so it will be every man for himself and let the referee look after his own scalp. Two prelims should warm the patrons up for the main affair tonight.

Henry Not Only One.

Along present-day cauliflower row Henry Armstrong is generally accepted as the only fighter ever to win three world's championships. But this is in error. Bob Fitzsimmons also won three world's titles. However, Hammerin' Henry is the first boxer ever to hold three crowns simultaneously.

Armstrong won the featherweight title from Petey Sarron, October 29, 1937; annexed the welterweight crown from Barney Ross, May 31, 1938, and then added the lightweight crown from Lou Ambers, August 27, 1938.

Finding it difficult to keep down his weight, Armstrong relinquished the featherweigh title in 1938, and lost the lightweight crown to Ambers in a return bout, August 22, 1939. He was dethroned as welterweight king by Fritzie Zivic, October 4, 1940.

Fitzsimmons first held the middleweight title, defeating Nonpareil Jack Dempsey, January 14, 1891; then the heavyweight crown, from James J. Corbett, March 17, 1897, and finally the light-heavyweight championship, from George Gardner, November 25, 1903. Fitz, however, won the light-heavy honors after losing the heavyweight throne.

Hamilton Wildcats In Good Condition

Hamilton, Nov. 22 — (CP)—Hamilton Wildcats are in good condition after Saturday's rugged encounter with Toronto Balmy Beach and coach Eddie McLean expects to have all but Joe Soyka ready to start against the H.M.C.S. Donnacona - St. Hyacinthe Combine in the Eastern Canada championship here on Saturday.

Soyka was injured by a tackle in the Toronto game, and examination showed the speedy back had suffered a torn chest cartilage that would probably keep him out of action for more than a week.

The Wildcats went through a light workout last night and will complete their preparation for the contest with a scrimmage on Thursday.

Advance sale of tickets is brisk and a large crowd is expected for the game, which will also decide the Grey Cup winner, emblematic of Dominion championship, as no western Canada team has challenged.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 538

By SAM GORDON

The Kibitzer

You should live so long before the same hands come up again in your bridge games. And yet all the rules you need for all the hands you will get could be said in a few minutes.

Perhaps you have already read thousands of words of mine about the four opening suit bids: one, two, three, four. And no doubt you have forgotten most of them. But think nothing of it. I can bring the most of them back to you in the following sentence:

One shows five tricks, four high two shows nine tricks; three shows eight tricks, a sure outside, a long-strong suit; four shows a long suit and nothing more.

There you have it. Add nothing to it. Subtract nothing from it. Anything else with it is just ex- cards, two sure, a biddable suit; planation. Anything different from it is merely opinion, judgment, guesswork, or what have you.

A trick is a high card (ace or king or queen) or a short card. A sure trick is an ace, or KQ, or AK (two). A better-than-average suit is biddable. A long-strong suit is seven cards with one loser.

Notice that a one bid or a two bid shows only a biddable suit. The main difference between them is that a one bid shows as few as five tricks; a two bid shows at least nine tricks.

Notice that a three bid or a four bid shows a long suit. The main difference between them is that a three bid shows strength on the outside; a four bid does not.

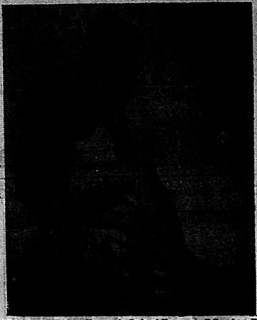
♠Q
♥A K J 8 7 4 3 2
♦9 7 6 4
♣None

This hand has not enough high cards for a one bid. Nor enough tricks for a two bid. Nor an outside sure trick for a three bid. If it is any opening, it is a four heart bid.

To take all opening suit bids in one gulp seems too much to swallow. But remember, Horse Sense is bridge in pill form.



AT THE CAPITOL — Yvonne de Carlo of Vancouver, B.C., whom Walter Wanger, Hollywood film producer, says is "the most beautiful girl in the world," appears in James Fenimore Cooper's "Deerslayer," starting next at the Capitol. The added hit "Riders of the Rio Grande," features the Three Mesquiteers.

AT THE BELLE — Charles Boyer and Ingrid Bergman in a romantic interlude from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Gaslight." Joseph Cotten is co-starred with them in the fascinating story of a stronge love.

AT THE McCARTHY — The pretty young woman registering such great surprise is Louise Allbritton, starred with Robert Paige (L) in "Her Primitive Man," now at the McCarthy Theatre. Edward Everett Horton has featured role. The second feature stars Mickey Rooney and Freddie Bartholomew in "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

68 NOMINATED FOR86THRENEWAL OF KING'S PLATE

Uttermost, Top Money-Winning Two-Year-Old, Will be Starter

Toronto, Nov. 22. (CP)—A field of 68, including Uttermost, top money-winner as a two-year-old in Ontario this year, have been nominated for the 86th renewal of the King's Plate, major Canadian Turf Classic, over Woodbine race track here next May 26, it was announced today by Secretary Palmer Wright of the Ontario Jockey Club.

The nominations this year closed for the first time while the horses were two-year-olds and it also was the first time in the history of the race, the oldest fixture run continuously in North America, that nominations closed in the winter. Previously, candidates for the race were not revealed until the Spring, when the horses were three-year-olds.

The King's plate, which next year will have an estimated value of $14,000 is confined to Canadian-bred three-year-olds, the property of a British subject resident in Canada, which have never won a race other than a race exclusively for two-year-olds or the plate trial as offered by the Ontario Jockey Club for three-year-olds on the opening day of the Ontario racing season.

Last year 56 three-year-olds were nominated for the Classic won by H. C. Hatch's Acara.

Rules Changed.

Rules were changed for the 86th running to allow horses which trained and ran in the United States during the winter months an opportunity to compete. It will be the second year in which three-year-olds foaled anywhere in Canada are eligible to compete. Until last year, only Ontario-bred three-year-olds were allowed to enter.

Of the 68 nominees, 19 are colts, 20 are geldings and 29 are fillies.

H. C. Hatch of Toronto, owner of Uttermost, led the list of nominators with five. The Garden City Stables of St. Catharines have four—Smoky Joe, Shootin' Joe, Pattergal and Baypyprus. Medway Stable of London, has nominated Lowermost and Floral Gift. The J. E. P. Seagram establishment of Waterloo, has nominated Pat Fuller and Pattoy.

Uttermost, top nominee from the Hatch Stable, earned $12,870 for his owner last season. He won five races and finished second once in eight starts. Among his victories were the Coronation Stakes, Mrs. Orpen's Cup and Saucer, the Clarendon Plate and the Winnipeg Futurity.

Four women have nominated five horses. They are Edna Fair of Cainsville, Ont., with two; Mrs. B. Hulse and Mrs. G. H. Irwin, of Toronto, with one each, and Mrs. Ryland H. New of Oakville, Ont., with one.

THOUGHT THERE SHOULD BE SPARE MATERIAL ENOUGH

Seattle, Nov. 20 (AP) — An irate woman telephoned Eddy Hiller, Post-Intelligencer city editor, to complain her alarm clock had stopped and shop after shop had advised her they could not fix it. Hiller explained the springs used in alarm clocks were vitally needed for war goods. "Well," snapped the woman, "I just read in your paper that they are getting a new cabinet in the White House, and if they can spare material for that, they can let up on enough to fix my clock."

CHAPTER 15

"She was asking about you recently. She has a large place in the country with very beautiful gardens. She needs someone to help the gardener with the flowers. Do you understand work of this kind?"

"I'm as good as any man on outdoor work. Flowers — pooh! that's easy! Anna would have sworn she understood engineering or piloting an aeroplane or translating Sanskrit—any technical work that would get her a summer of that kind and at the Baldwins especially.

"I told her I thought you were her girl. Can you be ready Monday if she sends the car for you?"

"I can be ready in five minutes!" shouted Anna trying to hit the ceiling in her joy.

Anna sped along in the golden light of the June afternoon. The road ahead was a broad white ribbon and the great car ate it up as a giant ticker swallows tape and is always hungry for more.

She lowered the windows that the wind might blow through her hair and, leaning back on the cushions, drank in the luxury of it all. Save for the liveried chauffeur ahead, Anna was the only passenger, and there he sat, alert to carry out any orders she might whistle through the tube. His name was James, as should be the name of every good chauffeur, and when he had asked her solicitiously,

"Any other errands, Miss?" she had answered merely, "Home, James," with all the hauteur of an heiress.

Then the great car had shot forward, its big nose hugging the road like some strangely intelligent animal, unerring to scent the way home. And home, it chanced in this instance through some blessed miracle, was none other than the Long Island estate of the Baldwins, long imagined but thus far unseen.

It was not strange Anna felt like an heiress, heiress to youth and romance and a summer of glorious adventure which was only now beginning. Heiress also to beauty, it occured to her as she caught her reflection in the mirror that hung in one corner of the car. It showed a face as saucy as a pansy with eyes as black as sloes and hair the color of corn silk — a startling combination, the more beautiful because so rare. On her cheeks was a downy freshness like fruit that is ripened in the sun and her whole face was lit up with the eagerness of adventure that is to come.

Anna was going as gardener—but what of it? Her experiences need not end with the flowers, and she would not change places with a millionaire guest, less pretty and more blase', sated with the adventures which to her were fresh and unexplored. If her contact with luxury should be brief, it must be enjoyed the more.

It was the first time Anna had glimpsed the country since she left her native land and the sight of the open spaces was more welcome than food and drink. It was not like the landscape of Poland, this Long Island with its quaint little towns and glimpses of beautiful driveways leading to spacious estates. The difference was so bewildering that Anna did not try to analyse it, merely drank in the beauty of green grass in the sun and was utterly content.

Then came blue waters on a sandy shore with the gleam of white sails in the distance and groups of bathers sunning themselves on the beach or plunging in the water. The picture was so utterly entrancing that she felt she must talk it over with someone, for she was sociable by nature, could not enjoy things alone. Her only available companion was the chauffeur up ahead so she knocked on the window of his compartment and as he slowed down said.

"Would you mind if I sit there in front with you?"

The chauffeur trained not to pass comment, however unusual things were, opened the door and helped her to clamber to the seat beside him.

"Have the Baldwins a beautiful home?" she asked.

"Very fine, Miss. None finer."

"And lots of visitors and parties and things like you read about?"

"It's very gay, for the young folks, Miss."

"Do you think I'll have a good summer?"

"I'm sure you'll enjoy yourself, Miss."

"I'm looking forward to it. Do you think they'll be kind to me? Of course you understand I'm to be there—well not exactly as a guest."

The ideal chauffeur like the spider has eyes in all sides of his head; he can see in all directions at once and without taking his eyes from the road James had already noted details of his strange young passenger — her rather startling physical beauty and the shabbiness of her clothes—the cheap little frock and the flimsy hose with the run climbing up the shin bone. But he was a well trained servant and only gossiped with those of his kind.

"You're a friend of Miss Louise, perhaps?"

"I've met her and her brother, Harry. I'm not exactly a friend as yet, I hope some day to be, but for the present I'm to help with the flowers—to be assistant gardener."

If the chauffeur was startled he didn't show it.

"Are Miss Louise and Mr. Harry at home now?" Anna asked.

"I haven't seen Mr. Harry about lately."

"He isn't there?" Anna was worried.

"Oh, he's away a great deal, Mr. Harry—always on the go."

"I suppose he has lots of girls, then?"

"Plenty, Miss, as you might say—plenty."

Anna frowned. The summer looked suddenly not so pleasant after all.

The Baldwins lived in a great white house at the end of a tree bordered driveway, with velvety lawns on either side, dotted with gay flower gardens like bright colored buttons on a green velvet coat.

Only a stone's throw away was the sea, booming out its eternal message. This was why they called it "Casa del Mar," which in good English means House by the Sea.

It was a big overgrown mushroom sort of a house, which rambled in all directions, as though there were always room for one more, which made it pleasant looking and fiendly. It was banked with vines and flowering shrubs until it seemed to rise out of a bower, like an enormous white peony, the green blinds at the windows its leaves.

A verandah wide as the deck of a ship ran around three sides of the house. It had couches and chairs of light rattan upholstered in gay cretonne patterns, and tables on which stood tall glasses of delicious iced drinks. There were always plenty of gay people about to drink the drinks and read the books and chat away the long summer hours. It was a very sociable house.

Anna did not live in the main house; she had a room in the gardener's cottage, from which she could glimpse the sea by day and go to sleep to the singing of its waves. She was fed and cared for by the gardener's wife, who took more interest in her welfare than her own tired mother had ever had time to take—or anyone else, for that matter. Her quarters were so much more spacious than her stuffy little room in New York that it never occurred to her to be jealous of anyone who lived in the big house.

Mornings Anna rose at half past five, dressed herself just like a boy (blue shirt, overalls, big straw hat over her eyes) and worked with the gardener among the flowers. She pruned them, weeded them, loosened the dirt at their roots, pulled off the faded blossoms and cut the bouquets for the House by the Sea.

The gardener marvelled at her handy way.

"Where did you learn it? he would ask her.

"Plowing corn and making hay in Poland; after that flowers are easy."

In this way Anna fulfilled her promise that in outdoor work she was as good as a man.

Noon time when it had grown too hot to work, Anna would change to a bathing costume, a cast-off from Louise Baldwin's wardrobe, and run down to the beach. Because she was sturdy and beautifully built, with a natural aptitude for athletics, she took to the water like a web-footed fowl and soon was swimming with the best of them. So she grew bright eyed and lissom and tanned and pretty as the flowers she tended.

Mrs. Baldwin was very kind to her. She often spoke to her in the garden, saying: "You are happy here, child, I hope?"

And Anna would answer: "Oh, yes, very happy, thank you."

But when she asked herself that question: "Am I really happy here?" her heart would give a little negative thump, as though to say "Not quite."

For Harry Baldwin was not yet at home. He was away on a college house-party and in the three weeks she had been here she had not had a glimpse of him. So all the excitement was lacking. For sunshine and flowers and beautiful surroundings and moonlight on the sea only whet the urge for romance in the heart of 17.

Once again Anna mustered courage to ask the gardener about her employer's son.

"Mr. Harry—where is he?"

"Oh, he's a gay dog," said the gardener, "always dashing from one party to another, with more girls than he has time for. Don't set your cap for him. But there will be plenty of young fellows to smile on you; Now if I were a little younger myself—"

Then Anna would chide herself for being a fool to hitch her wagon to so high a star and run down and plunge in the sea, swim far out until she was tired, then turn on her back and float until she was rested again.

One morning Anna was alone in the garden. The sun was very hot. she had pulled off the big straw farmboy hat which usually hid her fine eyes and was using it for a fan. The course blue shirt was open at the throat, the sleeves rolled to her shoulders, her face was flushed, her eyes were bright and her hair shone like spun gold. She was so absorbed in the process of trying to cool off a bit that she was quite unaware of the fact that she looked pretty enough to inspire the artist who painted the Song of the Lark—to disturb his rest in his heavenly home and make one more earthly picture—for which she should pose, just this way.

Anna had no idea anyone was watching her. She heard no footfall on the grass. The first thing she heard was a friendly, "Hello!" Harry Baldwin stood before her.

"Hello!" said Harry Baldwin again.

"Hello yourself!" said Anna.

It sounded fresh, but Anna felt fresh this morning—not at all ill at ease or embarrassed as on other times when she stood before him.

"I've been watching you from the verandah," the son of the house said. "I couldn't believe you weren't really a boy. Do you always wear clothes like that?"

"I do when I work in the garden."

"You're a funny sort of gardener." Harry Baldwin's eyes crinkled up in a smile.

"Why am I? Anna feigned to be piqued.

"I don't mean to be uncomplimentary, but you're so frightfully pretty as a boy—How do you look as a girl?"

Anna blushed through the sunburn and tan. "About the same, I suppose. But that's a funny question."

"I say let's get out of the sun. You shouldn't work in the heat like this; you'll get a sunstroke, you know."

"Not I!" said Anna. "I'm used to it."

But Harry had taken the spade from her hand and was leading her—very politely—toward the shade of a mammoth tree.

"Mother told me she had brought you from the city to help with the flowers."

"And is that so strange?" asked Anna, a dangerous look in her eyes.

"Please don't be offended—I'm just interested. Do you mind if we talk for a minute?"

Did she mind? Anna prayed to her heart to be still—at least not to thump so loudly that her companion should hear it and guess her secret.

"Let's sit here where it's cooler," Harry was saying. "There's something I must get off my chest. This is it: where have I seen you before? You look so strangely familiar and yet—"

Anna wrinkled her nose; it was a cute little nose, one of the cutest he had ever seen, thought Harry, watching the gesture. "It's not very flattering you shouldn't remember only a few months ago when your mother introduced us. I was—selling things—in a store." Anna swallowed hard to get that out, that damaging admission that she was first a clerk, then a gardener, always working, always poor, while he was heir to all this magnificence—

"Oh, I remember that, all right. What I mean dates further back; something I can't quite identify, not in New York at all, as though I had known you a long time ago under very different circumstances."

"When you were a king in Babylon, and I was your Christian slave," quoted Anna mockingly. She wouldn't tell him—she wouldn't. It was much more fun to make him guess. If he dreamed how well she remembered—

"You're a funny little thing," Harry laughed. "How long have you been in America?"

"What makes you think I haven't always been here? Why, I'm an American girl." Wasn't it nice, she could even be saucy.

"Oh, no you're not. You're quite different, that's what I like so much, your manner, your cute little accent, your looks—though as for looks you're prettier than most of the girls I know, American or anything else. When did you come here—no joking."

"About a year ago. Late July, it was."

"What ship?"

"How can I remember? I could scarcely speak English then."

"I crossed myself last summer. Did you chance to sail from Hamburg?"

"I believe so. I came from Poland and we have no port of own. But I travelled steerage, an immigrant girl. You wouldn't have noticed me."

"Oh, wouldn't I? A face like yours? It would take more than steerage to hide it. But did you remain down in steerage? Didn't you come to the upper deck once?" Anna's companion was thinking out loud, as if trying to force one fact from the general confusion—from the kaleidoscopic maze of a young man's memories of ship board.

Then suddenly Harry Baldwin saw the picture. It was silhouetted in the flare of a match—a girl in a shawl and clumsy shoes looking strangely out of place on the fashionable promenade deck, with bright, wind-blown hair and little nose flattened against the ballroom of the ship.

"Could that have been you?" he said aloud.

Then another picture rose sharply and clear. Landing time — New York harbor — the immigrants herded together for their Ellis Island ordeal and this same girl, a bit apart from the rest, her arms flung wide in greeting to the new and unknown land. Himself on the upper deck looking down, tossing a pencilled note. What in the dickens had he written in it? He'd give a great deal to remember.

"So you were that girl? Well, I'll be darned! And you never let me know—"

But Anna just laughed at him impishly. There was really nothing to say.

Facing Facts Subject of Talk At Kiwanis Club

"Facing Facts" was the subject of an interesting address given by Flt.-Lt. F. Nimmo of Trenton R.C.A.F. Station to members of the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon on Tuesday at the Quinte Hotel. The speaker was most forceful in his talk and stressed that Christianity would have to be preached to the nations of the world in order that another war would not occur in succeeding generations. Jack McVeigh presided at luncheon with Vic White as song leader, Bill Wonnacott as sergeant at arms and Bill Navin at the piano.

Jack White, recovered from his illness, gave a report on the chicken bingo recently held and reviewed the poultry project for the past season and in conclusion advocated that the project be dropped next year because of the terrific loss in chickens by foxes and other wild animals in their growing stages. He also stated that the calves donated to the club would likely be kept until spring and sold at the Holstein sale as the cattle market at the present time was not good. Announcement was made of the forthcoming bingos to be held at Kiwanis Centre each Monday night with a $50 bond to be drawn for each fifth Bingo. The money raised will be used to improve the Roblin Lake project. Incidentally a $20 donation was received from William Watson the architect of the project to assist in the work. Cliff Baragar gave a detailed plan for the canvass of the city for civilian blood donors and the public is asked to give these men their hearty co-operation because blood plasma is urgently needed due to heavy casualties overseas. The club will hold another social evening on December 5th at Kiwanis Centre with Mark Vanner and Mrs. Russell Smith as chairmen.

The speaker, introduced by Ray Grant, stated that all of us must face facts regarding this war and used his own experience as an example. "I faced the fact that I should join the forces to help some boy or girl over the rough spots even though it was a sacrifice on my part," said the speaker. We must all face the fact that these boys and girls in the services sometimes fall and it is up to us to lend a helping hand not kick them further down. We must also realize that many will come back without an arm or leg and possibly both but they do not want sympathy they want understanding. Some will come back all taut and nerves strained to the uttermost and it is our duty to help them unwind and get back to a normal civilian life. We must also face the fact that V.D. is one of the war's worst diseases and we must do everything possible to eradicate it. One thing would be a great preventative and that is premarriage examination.

"We must also face the fact of the responsibility of war," said the speaker. "We are not wholly clean in this respect because we knew that Hitler was killing the Jews and imprisoning others and also using foods to make bullets yet we did little about it and finally the dreadful thing happened. In closing the speaker stated the state must recognize the church for the church holds the key to peace. "If we had to spend 1/100 of the money that has been spent on destruction to banish sin in the world there would not have been any war," said Flt.-Lt. Nimmo. Kiwanis appreciation was expressed by Mark Vanner.

Trenton Youth Seriously Hurt

Trenton, Nov. 22 —(CP)— Fred Hicks, 17, received severe injuries to his head and suffered shock when his bicycle struck a car owned and driven by Frank Dayman, R. R. No. 2, Brighton, and threw him through the windshield. Dayman observed a car approaching from the bridge but failed to notice the bicycle approaching in front of the car.

Hicks struck the front of the car head-on, smashing his cycle considerably and receiving extensive cuts and bruises.

"WHITMORE," NOT WHITMAN

The name of Corporal Lloyd Whitmore, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Whitmore, of Steenburg, Ont., who was reported killed in action last week, was inadvertently spelled "Whitman" in the newspaper reference to the casualty.

His father was a veteran of the First Great War and at present is serving in the Veterans Guard of Canada.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGES

New York, Nov. 22 —(AP)— The stock market held its gains registered since Monday and some leaders eked out further narrow improvement in today's quiet preholiday session.

Early advances ranging from fractions to around a point were reduced and in some cases eliminated by realizing sales but after this mild pressure abated the list steadied, with volume tapering near the fourth hour.

Steels, rails and specialties had the best support at the start but the carriers later turned irregular.

Major United States stock exchanges and commodity markets will be closed tomorrow, Thanksgiving Day.

LIVESTOCK

Toronto, Nov. 2. (CP)—Cattle trade was fairly active at firm prices up to mid-session on the livestock market here today. Lambs were slow and steady. Calves, hogs and sheep were steady.

Receipts reported by the Dominion marketing service were: Cattle 800, calves 500, hogs 800, sheep and lambs 600. Unsold from yesterday were 3,100 head of cattle.

A few weighty steers were $10-$12.15, butcher steers and heifers $8.50-$10.75, boners downward to $6, butcher cows $7-$8.75, canners and cutters $5-$6.75, bulls $5-$7.50., a few fed yearlings $12.25-$13.50, a few stockers $7.85-$9.25.

Calves were $14-$15 for choice with common vealers downward to $7 and grassers mostly $5.75-$6.

Lambs were $12.50-$13 good ewes and wethers, $11.50-$12 bucks, $6-$8 culls.

Sheep were $3-$4.50.

Hogs were grade A dressed $17.75 with sows $13 dressed.

LIVESTOCK

Montreal, Nov. 22 — (CP)—Receipts: cattle 11; calves 18; sheep 130; hogs 340.

There were 1,300 cattle carried over from yesterday, 80 per cent of which were canners, cutters, bologna bulls and light, thin steers and heifers. Market officials reported that the bulk of this carry-over has been left over from last week and, while it is expected that some will be sold, prospects are that a big portion will be carried over for next week's market. Officials stated shippers have been warned by the trade that the condition created by the carry-over is serious and they have again been advised not to ship any cattle of these classes until further advices.

Calves 13.50-14 for good vealers, good ewes and wethers brought 12-12.50. Cull lambs were 6 with some selling up to 8. Sheep 3-4.50. Hogs 17.65 for grade A. Sows 12.50-12.75 dressed.

HOGS

Toronto, Nov. 22—(CP)—Prices were unchanged at bacon-hog markets reporting early today. Dressedweight, Grade A, delivered: London, Hamilton and Barrie $17.50; Hull $17.60; Stratford, to farmers $17.40, to truckers $17.55.

Two Arrested By Toronto Police

Toronto, Nov. 22 — (CP)—Benoit Boisvert, of Three Rivers, Que., and Paul Mathieu of Sorel, Que., both wanted by Three Rivers police, were arrested by Toronto police today and will appear in court here on charges of shop-breaking and escaping custody.

Police said the men were arrested after C. Welsh, a Toronto resident, spotted them breaking into his garage and fired three shots, wounding Boisvert in the leg. Mathieu fled but was caught later when Welsh notified the police.

Mrs. Welsh, who helped her husband catch Boisvert, said they were aroused by a special alarm system they had arranged in their garage. She said her husband notified the police at once after taking a revolver with him "cashed out into the cold in his pyjamas and trousers."

"I took the baby in my arms and went to help him. My husband walked up to the man that wasn't in the car and said he would shoot him. He pulled the trigger and the gun went off. The man jumped into the air and ran for all he was worth. The other man jumped out of the car and ran too. My husband followed him and fired a couple of more shots. The last one hit him."

Mrs. Welsh said the police arrived a few minutes later and that Boisvert was taken to hospital under custody. His condition is not considered as serious.

Duty is Lowered On Mex. Fresh Tomatoes

Ottawa, Nov. 22 — (CP)—Reduction in the duty charged on fresh tomatoes imported from Mexico was announced today.

The order-in-council authorizing the revision in duty said it was expected imports of fresh tomatoes may exceed 60,000,000 pounds this year, compared with 50,000,000 to 35,000,000 normally brought in.

Between 40 and 50 per cent of the importations are from Mexico and are subject to a customs duty of 30 per cent ad valorem with a minimum of three cents a pound.

The order-in-council provided for a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem with a minimum of 1 1/2 cents a pound on Mexican tomatoes for the period Dec. 1, 1944, to May 15, 1945. The order said this action would result in a considerable reduction in the cost to consumers.

Foxboro Farmers' Co-Operative Expands Activities

Originally operating only as a purhasing agency but within recent months enlarging its scope of activities to include selling of livestock direct to the abattoir, the Foxboro District Farmers' Co-operative has again expanded operations to enter the milling business.

Recently the Foxboro club purchased the milling business formerly operated by Mr. Clayton Reid at Foxboro and have engaged the former owner to continue as operating manager of the business. Intentions are to eventually replace the present hammer mill with a plate mill of greater capacity and to instal a pre-mix plant to mix concentrate feeds.

Immediate plans call for the dismantling of the present brick building and its reconstruction along lines more adapted to the milling business. A charter from the provincial government enabling the Foxboro organization to deal in property was received this autumn.

Now boasting a membership of approximately fifty district farmers, the executive of the Foxboro District Farmers' Co-operative will shortly begin a membership drive which is expected to boost the roster to around 300 members.

Affiliated with the Ontario Farmers' Co-operative the Foxboro club offers to its members group purchasing of feeds and other necessary commodities needed on the farm. No attempt is made to undersell private competitors in this respect. President of the club is Mr. Morley Sine, with Mr. Frank Tummon acting as the club secretary.

'Nubbins' in Bad Shape After Party

Denver, Nov. 22. (AP)—A little boy lay in a Denver hospital bed on Tuesday "in bad shape" after a tiring pre-dated Christmas celebration.

Forest (Nubbins) Hoffman, three, son of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Hoffman of Cheyenne, Wyo., opened presents Sunday that came from as far away as Maine and Florida and then was whisked 100 miles to Denver last night in his doctor's automobile for an examination by a urologist.

The boy's physician, Dr. G. B. Savory, said that he was in "bad shape" and that he didn't think the examination would help but everything was being tried. Nubbins was under treatment about a month ago by the unnamed urologist who will examine him today.

A bladder malady which doctors described as incurable may take Nubbins' life before Dec. 25. That's why the Hoffmans decided to hold the party early—a party that attracted attention throughout the continent.

Early Christmas Mailing Urged

Highly gratified by the response of the general public regarding appeals for early mailing of parcels destined for members of the armed services overseas, postal authorities are again seeking co-operation for the critical Christmas mailing period soon to confront the post office. Full publicity for the "early mailing" campaign has been arranged with the press, radio, theatres and business firms giving co-operation.

With Christmas this year falling on Monday it is pointed out by postal authorities that posting of local mail must be completed by December 18th—outside places proportionately earlier—and by December 10th to the United States. Responsibility for "delivery on time" of Christmas greetings and gifts in a large measure rests with individual citizens, it is pointed out. The post office cannot commence its work until the greetings and gifts have been mailed.

Eisenhower Gives High Praise For Clearing of Schelde

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Paris, Nov. 22. (CP)—From the Allied Supreme Commander Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, Tuesday came high praise of the work of the 1st Canadian and British 2nd Armies at the northern end of the Allied line which preceded the present new offensive.

These operations covered the clearing of the Schelde Estuary to open the great Port of Antwerp for Allied shipping.

"Walcheren Island (in the Schelde Estuary) was one of the most gallant actions of this war", he said. "The navy really deserves great kudos. The Canadian and British armies did a splendid and aggressive piece of work in clearing up the areas at that end of the line".

For the Canadians, the Schelde campaign covered three sectors—the German-held pocket south of the Estuary, bounded on the south by the Leopold Canal; the mainland sector extending northward from Antwerp's dock area to Bergen Op Zoom; and the Schelde Islands of South Beveland, North Beveland and Walcheren.

Commander Glad Reaching of Rhine Is French Victory

London, Nov. 22. (CP-Reuter)—Gen. Eisenhower, quoted by the Paris radio, told a special conference of French journalists Monday that he was glad that the reaching of the Rhine should be a French victory.

"It has always been my wish", he said, "to give the greatest possible help to the French authorities to enable them to take the greatest possible part in the liberation of the country. It was, indeed, agreed upon before the landing. It is France's right and the best thing for Europe.

"My great desire, as a sincere friend of France, is that the position of France should be her traditional position, not at the end of the war but before the war ends".

INDIAN WIDOW GETS GEORGE CROSS

Men Overseas Want Neighborhood News in Letters From Home

Ottawa, Nov. 22 — (CP) — Back from a tour of European battlefronts, Joseph W. G. Clark, Director-in-Chief of Public Relations of the Armed Forces, said in an interview here last night that Canadians at home would do well to prepare themselves mentally for understanding returning war veterans.

"Some of them have been away six Christmases," he said. "They have mingled with the fighting men of other countries, they have travelled half the globe, they have faced death and they have learned to make great decisions.

"They are used to close comradeships — many of which are international and inter-Empire in scope —and they don't understand narrow and parochial mentalities.

"In truth they are citizens of the world with broad horizons and we must be prepared to bring ourselves up to their level when they return. That is the understanding they will rightly expect."

He spoke of the great thirst for hometown news he noticed throughout his tour. Through the "splendid co-operation" of The Canadian Press in publishing The Canadian Press News for distribution in all theatres, through the Army newspaper Maple Leaf and through the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the men at the front are being given a good service of news from Canada.

"But they can't seem to get enough news of the neighborhood type and they all ask the same question—'Why don't the folks at home fill in the little interesting details we want to know and why don't they write more often?'"

"Just because they've been away a long time, their friends at home shouldn't get the idea they are no longer interested in little items of neighborly news and gossip — about changes such as the new grocery store or new paving on Green Street or who is president of the local bowling league."

He said that lessons learned in the earlier phases of the war had been used "to telling effect" in the interests of war correspondents now at the front.

"I'm convinced that the story of the war is being fully and accurately told by the war correspondents and some small share of the credit goes to the Public Relations Services," he added.

Correspondents attached to the Canadian forces had made no serious complaints and "seem happy" with the Canadian Public Relations set-up although they had been critical of other organizations. The correspondents told him they were especially satisfied with facilities such as those provided by conducting officers and those for transmission.

LONDON LETTER

By J. W. SUTTON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

London, Nov. 22 (CP)—Londoners have become resigned to the fact that, until the end of the war, they can expect little relief from the restrictions that made life uncomfortable and irritating since 1940.

Many optimistically thought the end of some of the 10,000 wartime restrictions would coincide with the invasion.

Flying bombs which came a week or so after D-Day were the first things to shake the Londoner's belief that his war was over. With the sirens wailing 10 and 12 times during the day and night he found himself becoming less interested in the relaxation of four-year-old regulations and more interested in the state of his air-raid shelter.

Since flying bombs have no eyes Home Secretary Morrison agreed to substitute a dim-out for the blackout and Manchester, Liverpool and many other Midland and northern England towns flashed on their lights.

Everybody looked forward to London's "lighting up" but the night Londoners were told they could allow light to stream from their windows the Germans staged their first air-raid in weeks and since then the capital has been as dark as it was before the Morrison announcement.

Mr. Morrison however subsequently announced that London would have a modified street lighting system which would give it better illumination than any other city in wartime Britain, when necessary equipment has been installed.

The invasion hadn't progressed far before the Londoner was hit in a vulnerable spot. There was a beer shortage which ministries attributed to supplies being sent to the troops. But investigation did not confirm this and after a first class press rumpus beer became more plentiful.

Although Prime Minister Churchill stated recently that 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 Allied troops are on the continent you would never think any had left these isles if transportation is a criterion. Many trains were withdrawn without notice and workers still travel in overcrowded carriages.

On the homefront, practically nothing has changed with advantage to the civilian—food is still strictly rationed and uninteresting, luxuries are few, entertainment is costly, fuel is scarce. Londoners have reconciled themselves to the fact that as long as the war lasts there can be for them no real return to normal conditions and their battered city will remain in the frontline.

MAY WEAR "GS" BADGE ON LEFT SLEEVE GREATCOATS

Ottawa, Nov. 22. (CP) —A order has been issued permitting active service army personnel to wear the "General Service" badge on the left sleeve of greatcoats, Defence Headquarters said today.

Previously, the "GS" badge was worn only on the left sleeve of a battle dress jacket or tunic.

It was learned that the order followed complaints by active service men that they couldn't be distinguished from home defence troops while wearing unmarked greatcoats.

CABINET REPORTED AGREED ON DRAFT POLICY
BRITISH FORCES THRUST CLOSE TO VENLO

May Set Date For Abandonment Voluntary System

Five Cabinet Members Listed As Forcing Issue

By R. K. CARNEGIE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Nov. 23. (CP)—Cabinet Members maintained silence today regarding a decision—described as acceptable to the "great majority"—reached on Wednesday night on whether a definite date should be fixed for abandonment of the voluntary system for overseas service and dispatch overseas of the Home Defence Army if the voluntary policy fails to raise adequate reinforcements.

One persistent report on Parliament Hill said the cabinet had decided to adopt compulsion if the voluntary system failed to raise the necessary reinforcements by a certain date. This report had it that the date was not far distant.

After the Cabinet rose it was learned that a "satisfactory understanding" was reached, but it was considered possible that the Cabinet may not have been entirely unanimous.

There was no doubt in political circles, however, that same decision was reached which largely closed the breach caused by differences of opinion on how much longer the voluntary recruiting system for overseas should be given a trial.

May Ask Confidence Vote.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King today placed a resolution on the House Order paper stating "that this House will aid the government in its policy of maintaining a vigorous war". This was regarded as the government's procedure to obtain from the Commons a vote of confidence.

The wording of the resolution probably was approved at the 2 1-2 hour Cabinet meeting last night.

Meanwhile, there was a tenseness around parliament buildings as all Liberal members gathered for a party caucus. The meeting was 40 minutes late getting underway, starting at 11.40 a.m., E.D.T.

Mr. King, who arrived late, was greeted with a round of hand-clapping. Col. J. L. Ralston, former Defence Minister, attended the caucus, but it was not known whether Defence Minister McNaughton was present.

The meeting gave private members the first opportunity to expound their views on the voluntary policy since arriving in the capital yesterday. A caucus was called yesterday, but was adjourned by Mr. King who said he had something to discuss with the cabinet.

As the Liberals met political circles were forecasting that "big developments" might be expected later today. They suggested these developments would surprise the public.

Mr. King may make some announcement in the Commons this afternoon, it was learned. Some thought he might define the government's policy on reinforcements either before or after Gen. Mc-

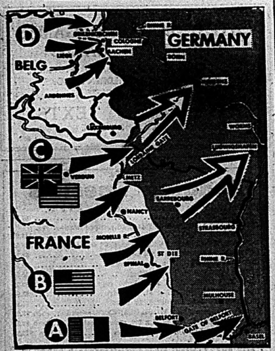
AUTHOR RELEASED

P. G. Wodehouse, creator of Jeeves the impeccable gentleman's gentleman, who with his wife, has been arrested in Paris. After a year in Nazi internment camp, Wodehouse accepted a German proposal that he broadcast non-political talks over the Nazi radio. He was conditionally released last night.

NAZILAND INVASION TO THE WEST



Along historic routes of invasion into Germany, Allied forces along the entire Western Front are carrying on the "big push" to the Rhine and beyond. Particularly spectacular (a) is the French 1st Army's Belfort gap breakthrough to the river Rhine and the road to Bavaria. To the north (b) drives ahead toward Strasbourg and large arrow indicates possible lower Saar Basin route. At Metz (c) German resistance is reported to have virtually ceased to exist, while (upper arrow) the General Patton forces appear bent on following the Moselle river to Koblenz. Following the fall of Geilenkirchen (d) Allied armies are beginning to bore deeper into Germany.

GEN. McNAUGHTON TO GIVE VIEWS ON VOLUNTARY POLICY

7 Letters Tabled In House Reveal Common Concern For Canadian Unity

By JAMES McCOOK
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Nov. 23 —(CP)— Defence Minister McNaughton today will appear as a guest before the House of Commons to support his opinion that required reinforcements for overseas may be obtained without resorting to conscription of 60,000 men in the home defence army.

Gen. McNaughton will speak in a House still warm with the excitement of a 1½-hour session yesterday when members just in from their constituencies heard Prime Minister Mackenzie King read correspondence he had exchanged with Col. J. L. Ralston who resigned as Defence Minister Nov. 1.

They heard, too, Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, demand that the House take action immediately so that draftees might be sent overseas forthwith. A motion to have the House express this opinion was ruled out of order by speaker J. A. Glen on the grounds that notice of motion was required.

Cabinet Meeting.

A cabinet meeting of 2½ hours, called just after the House rose, concluded at 10:30 p.m., and when he left the East Block about half an hour later, Mr. King said he had nothing to say.

The seven letters read by Mr. King in the tense House showed the divergence of opinion between the Prime Minister and Col. Ralston, who listened impassively in his new seat just to the right of the cabinet benches.

King Silent After Liberal Caucus Meeting

Ottawa, Nov. 23 —(CP)— A Liberal caucus of 2½ hours today ended without comment from Prime Minister Mackenzie King or any other government member on persistent reports that the cabinet had decided to approve compulsory overseas service if the voluntary system fails to raise the necessary reinforcements by a certain date.

Nearly 30 reporters waited at the door of the caucus room as the members emerged.

Mr. King walked out with Senator J. H. King, government leader in the Senate.

He smiled and shook his head when the reporters asked if he had anything to say.

Occasional applause was heard in the caucus room where private members were assembled for their first meeting since they returned to Ottawa yesterday to discuss the question of overseas reinforcements.

It was understood that some cabinet members urged at a meeting of ministers last night that a date should be set beyond which the voluntary system would be abandoned unless it had provided the necessary reinforcements.

Five or six ministers were said to have indicated they were prepared to resign unless this date—believed to be not far distant—were established as the limit of the period of trial of voluntary system.

Finance Minister Ilsley, Navy Minister Macdonald, Resources Minister Crerar, Munitions Minister Howe and Revenue Minister Gibson are among those said to be prepared to resign unless conscription for overseas is later enforced.

It was believed that Mr. King placed before the caucus the decisions reached by the cabinet last night after a House sitting at which he read the correspondence he exchanged with Col. J. L. Ralston following the resignation of the latter on Nov. 1 when his recommendation for overseas conscription was not accepted by the cabinet.

Citations List Details of Actions Wherein Two Hastings County Soldiers Receive the Military Medal

Details of the action for which two Hastings County soldiers, Sgt. John W. Loshaw of Frankford, and Acting Sgt. James G. Stapley of Holloway, received the Military Medal are listed in citations released by the Department of National Defence today. The citations covered 111 honors and awards for gallantry in action overseas, all of which had been previously announced.

Sgt. Loshaw, M.M.

The citation for the award of the M.M. to Sgt. Loshaw, son of Mrs. Samuel Loshaw, and the late Mr. Loshaw of Frankford, follows:

"At about 4 p.m. May 23, 1944, the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment were attacking a sector of the Adolf Hitler Line. Sgt. Jack Loshaw was acting sergeant major of "D" Company.

"During the advance the company was held up by heavy machine-gun and rifle fire. Immediately he organised a party and led it with great gallantry and coolness into the heart of the enemy position. He personally destroyed a number of the enemy and forced the surrender of nineteen prisoners. Still under heavy enemy fire he insisted on remaining and attending two of our wounded, though in a very exposed position. Due to his great courage and cool, independent action he enabled his company to advance to their objective.

"The example he set, greatly in excess of his duty, became an inspiration to all ranks of his company to press forward and destroy the enemy."

Sgt. Jas. Stapley, M.M.

Acting Sgt. James Stapley is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Stapley of Madoc Junction and as a member of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment is a veteran of the Sicilian and Italian campaigns. His citation follows:

"During the evening of May 21, 1944, prior to the assault on the Adolf Hitler Line, the officer commanding 14 platoon of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regt. was wounded and evacuated, Sgt. James Stapley quickly took over command.

"This platoon was under heavy mortar fire and was suffering many casualties. This non-commissioned officer immediately reorganised the platoon and led them into position at a pivot in the line. Here for seventy-two hours in plain view of the enemy and only one hundred and fifty yards from heavily fortified pillboxes he held his position. In spite of constant sniping, mortaring and shelling the platoon contained a large force of the enemy. When the order came to attack he led his platoon through deadly fire into position that completely neutralized fire from the pillboxes and made their capture without casualties possible. Sgt. Stapley's great personal courage, leadership and skill were largely responsible for the determined stand made by the men of his platoon."

CHIANG ACCEPTS PLAN SUBMITTED TO MEET JAPANESE

Gen. Wedemeyer Says Japs Cannot be Defeated by Island-Hopping Strategy

Chungking, Nov. 23—(AP)—Maj.-Gen. Wedemeyer announced today that Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek has accepted the general outline of a plan he submitted for disposing Chinese forces to meet the Japanese threat and that it now is going into effect.

Wedemeyer, who came to Chungking as commander-in-chief of United States Army forces in China after the recent recall of Gen. Stilwell, made the announcement at a Press Conference.

He also declared the Japanese would not be defeated by the island-hopping strategy now under way in the Pacific but would have to be ultimately defeated on the continent of Asia.

He said his command automatically would embrace any American seaborne forces landed in China.

To root out the invader "we've got to get to grips with him on the continent," the General declared. "We must get a lodgment in China and sea communications."

Asked if he would bring American troops over "the hump" from India to China, Wedemeyer said: "I visualize the employment of all kinds of resources from all directions."

Japanese Concerned.

He asserted the Japanese were "terribly concerned" about their over-all position. He declared the Allies would disclose many things in the future which would increase the enemy's concern.

Wedemeyer said he believed Tokyo's transfer of Field Marshal Gen. Shunroku Hata back to the homeland and appointment of Gen.

RECKON FUTURE, ADVICE GIVEN BY LLOYD GEORGE

Caernarvon, Wales, Nov. 23—(CP)—David Lloyd George at a mayoral luncheon here said: "Great men sometimes lose the reins and lose their heads. This time, let us hope they will retain them and that when victory is assured they will sit down and reckon what the future is going to be for their own countries as well as for other lands."

EIGHT AIRMEN KILLED

Reno, Nevada, Nov. 23 —(AP)— The Reno army air base announced yesterday that eight men were killed when an army transport plane crashed Tuesday night near Esperto, Calif.

HEALTH PROGRAM IS NOT LIMITED TO PREVENTION

Speaker Shows How Free Enterprise Can Lead in Promoting Well-Being

Montreal, Nov. 23 — (CP) — Health should be regarded as "a state of well-being, affording a feeling of security and a sense of happiness" and a health program should not be restricted to means of avoiding obvious symptoms of disease, George A. S. Nairn of Toronto told the Health League of Canada today.

In an address prepared for delivery at a luncheon gathering during the 25th annual meeting of the league, the president of Lever Brothers (Canada) said the more obvious physical hazards of the new industrial way of life now were well understood and guarded against.

Emotional Balance.

"But how to maintain and develop mental and emotional balance and well-being throughout the industrial life of the community is the problem of which we are just beginning to become conscious," he said.

"Some people feel that this is a field in which the state either has taken the necessary action or should do so . . . It is a curious thing that the people who give voice to that argument are often the most vehement exponents of free enterprise, at any rate in words.

"Surely the essence of enterprise is that industry does not wait for the state. Similarly, any given industry need not wait for all the rest of industry to get going. Each of us, whether as individuals or companies, is free to proceed on our own in any direction which we deem to be right or proper."

Re-establishment of employees who have developed new talents and aptitudes while in the armed forces is one of the responsibilities of industry in promoting mental health, he said.

MAY INCREASE QUOTA

Toronto, Nov. 23 —(CP)— The Telegram yesterday said reports at Queen's Park were that Ontario's monthly liquor ration of 26 ounces will be increased to 52 ounces for December. It quoted Liquor Commissioner V. T. Goggin as saying of the report: "No comment."

COOK COOKS VILLAGE

Cairo, (CP)—In the village of Kom el Hamid in upper Egypt, a native woman was cooking dinner when some cotton stalks caught fire and in less than an hour the whole village was ablaze. Nineteen people died, 48 were injured and 200 houses were destroyed.

RED ARMY TANKS FAN OUT IN SWEEP AROUND BUDAPEST

Grim Hand-to-Hand Fighting Is Reported Along 85-Mile Line North East of Capital

Moscow, Nov. 23 —(AP)— Russian assault forces inched closer today to the Hungarian communications strongpoints of Hatvan, Eger and Muskolc in grim hand-to-hand fighting along the 85-mile battle line northeast of Budapest.

Chill rain and deep mud slowed down Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky's offensive, but the Soviet communique listed six villages captured and 43 German tanks knocked out against fierce counter-attacks by Hungarian and Elite Guard units.

Front dispatches, emphasizing the vigor of the Nazi defence, reported 12 counter-attacks were repulsed at Heviz-Gyor, a town just south of the Budapest-Hatvan railway captured yesterday by the Russians.

Gains in Foothills.

The Soviet communique said further gains were made in the area of fallen Gyangyos, stronghold in the foothills of the Matra mountains from which Red army tanks were fanning out in the huge sweep around Budapest toward Czechoslovakia and invasion routes to southern Germany.

The early morning supplement of the Soviet communique broke several days of official silence about East Prussia and the area north of Warsaw, reporting the repulse of a German reconnoitering unit in East Prussia and heavy patrol combat around the Polish town of Pulutsk.

Otherwise, the war bulletins said, there was only minor action along the rest of the far-flung front.

Soviet Citizens Freed From Slavery.

Russian frontline dispatches said conquered Hungary was replete with contrasts of squalid villages and luxurious castles and claimed that hundreds of Soviet citizens were liberated from years of forced labor on Magyar estates.

Other published reports here said Hungarians had been killing Russian wounded and torturing captured Red army nurses.

Tokaj Height Captured.

(The Romanian High Command announced that troops of the 4th Romanian Army, "in close collaboration with Allied Soviet troops," had captured the town and height of Tokaj, 115 miles northeast of Budapest, and penetrated deeply into Hungarian territory to the west.

(The broadcast communique was recorded by the Federal Communications Commission. The Berlin radio admitted the loss of Tokaj yesterday.)

TWO VESSELS SUNK

Washington, Nov. 23 —(AP)— Two enemy merchant vessels were sunk, 12 left burning and three others were hit in air blows in and around Manila Saturday, the United States Navy said yesterday.

Ted Reeve, Former Sports Writer, Injured, Stayed in Line Four Months

By ALLAN NICKLESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Somewhere in Southern England, Nov. 23. (CP Cable)—Big Ted Reeve of Toronto is confined to a Canadian military general hospital here with a fractured left elbow and is awaiting transportation home where he probably will be honorably discharged from the army.

The 42-year-old gunner, member of Conny Smythe's "Sportsmen's Battery", who gave up his football coaching and writing of his sports column in the Toronto Telegram to join the Canadian Army in 1940, suffered the injury late last July near Caen.

But Reeve, who probaby gave up counting scars and fractures in his early football days, carried on more than three months and reported his injury only Nov. 4. He was sent immediately to hospital.

Ted claims he didn't know it was fractured, although he conceded that it bothered him "some".

Teddy has seen plenty of action since his battery went to France a few weeks after D-Day.

His elbow was smashed by what he described as a "flying rock" during a German artillery barrage. He continued his duties on an anti-aircraft gun until he gave his elbow a "wollop" while loading ammunition on a Holland gunsite.

Full medical examination revealed the fracture and also the fact that Teddy's category was not A-1.

"I didn't want to go to a doctor", Ted told The Canadian Press as he relaxed in his blue hospital uniform—on bed No. 13, "and I sure would like to wind up this show with the guys", he added, waving his arm to indicate the long line of beds containing Canadian wounded.

Reeve, whose arm is in a sling but not in a cast, still has hopes of getting back to the front but it seems certain that he won't be in a combat role.

"I felt good all the way through the show over there", he said. "In fact, it was easier than our training, although we had some tough times".

Ted is not confined to bed and is allowed to leave hospital on a pass. His main worry right now is to get his hair cut because he wants to look his best when he meets his wife "and the gang" around Toronto's Balmy Beach.

Encounter Worst Minefields Since Invasion Days

Grip Tightened on 70,000 Germans in Vosges Passes

Allied Supreme Headquarters, Paris, Nov. 23 (CP-Reuter)—French troops are now fighting in Strasbourg.

London, Nov. 23 —(AP)— British 2nd Army forces in Holland thrust two miles forward to within two miles of Venlo today, while U. S. 9th Army men gouged slowly deeper into Germany toward the flooded Roer river village of Koslar, 26 miles from the devastated city of Cologne.

Both armies fought ferocious opposition in a cold, pelting rain which denied full air support.

In the south, other Americans and French swung to within 19 miles of the Alsace-Lorraine capital of Strasbourg and tightened the grip on a German army estimated at 70,000 men in a precarious position in the snowy Vosges mountains before the upper Rhine. Advances were recorded at both ends of the Vosges.

British forces closed on Venlo in the great bend of the Meuse river, captured the highway town of Amerika and pushed through the worst minefields and mud encountered since the early days of the invasion in Normandy. Berlin said Field Marshal Montgomery had opened a major attack toward the Ruhr arsenal.

The U. S. 1st Army, which captured the battered industrial city of Eschweiler yesterday, mopped up remaining opposition in nearby Durwiss and Lohn and inched slowly forward in the dense and gloomy Hurtgen forest against tense rifle, machine-gun, mortar and artillery fire.

Infantry of the 1st Army thrust two miles forward to the outskirts of Weisweiler, due east of Schweiler, in the pre-dawn darkness.

On the 1st Army's left, the U. S. 9th Army overran several villages in a slow advance but encountered dug-in Tiger tanks near Koslar, two miles west of the communications hub of Julich on the Roer and on the highway from Aachen to Berlin. Resistance stiffened all along the 9th Army front.

North of Geilenkirchen, the British 2nd Army took Hovem and won high ground beyond Gereonsweiler in battling toward the Roer—first major terrain obstacle in the fortified Cologne plain.

Victors of Metz, where five isolated outlying forts held out, the U. S. 3rd Army pushed another mile into Germany to within 15 miles of the sprawling coal and steel city of Saarbrucken, a major rail hub. The 10th Armored Division moved forward to Kesslingen, extending tank force control to 30 square miles of Germany. Infantry of the 3rd was 14 miles due east of Metz, plunging toward the Rhine against reinforced German defences.

Far to the south, the French 1st army continued its advance through Alsace on Colmar, thrusting north through the Rhine Valley from captured Mulhouse. Strong pockets of Germans still fought in the eastern outlet of the Belfort gap, but Gen. Eisenhower's communique said their counter-attacks had been contained.

Another force of French armor and American 7th army infantry provided the northern arm of a squeeze on the survivors of the German 19th army by crashing through the lower Vosges before Saverne in the northern corridor to the Rhine and Strasborg.

The French 2nd armored division took Weithersweiler and Burkenwald in the hills, then closed on Saverne from north and south. The American 44th infantry joined them and today the team was pressing forward toward the German frontier.

French Forces Reach Outskirts Of Strasbourg

London, Nov. 23 — (AP) — The famous French 2nd Armored Division of Maj. Gen. Jacques Le Clerc dashed 18 miles across the level Rhine Plain today into the outskirts of Strasbourg, largest French city still in German hands.

In the soggy, heavily fortified Roer river valley 26 miles from Cologne, German divisions threw a series of counter-attacks at the U.S. 9th Army despite the loss of more than 75 tanks in the week-long battle in the fortified zone approaching the Rhine.

The whole German front in the south was dissolving. The French, who had fought across the Sahara wastes and helped Marshal Montgomery break the Mareth Line guarding Tunisia, encountered only light resistance. The Germans obviously were scurrying across the swift and broad Rhine by any means at hand. The fate of six to 10 divisions of the German 19th Army was at issue; only soupy weather saved them from slaughter from Allied air power.

The French tanks and guns raced through the Saverne Gap southeast of Metz to reach Strasbourg at the Rhine, a strongly fortified trade and industrial centre on the Ill, an affluent of the Rhine which flows two miles away. Normally, 193,000 live in Strasbourg under the guns of the Siegfried Line across the river.

After the success of the British 2nd Army troops, only a thin-skinned "balloon" of German resistance badly pinched all around the perimeter, was left tonight in front of Venlo.

City and District News

MANY GATHER TO HEAR EVANGELISTS AT S. A. CITADEL

A large and appreciative audience gathered at the Salvation Army Citadel last evening to hear the visiting Evangelists Adjutant and Mrs. Ross. The crowd listened with rapt attention as the 225 lb. ex-policeman told of the time when he first entered a Salvation Army Hall at Regina, Sask., and under the sacred influence of the prayer meeting wept for the first time since as a lad he had left his home in Scotland, only a half-crown in his pocket. Any listeners who had been accustomed to the early day Salvationists, must have been pleasantly reminded of the fiery workers of those far-off days. It is expected that the attendances will increase nightly as the campaign proceeds.

TWO DISTRICT BOYS REPORTED WOUNDED

Names of two district soldiers are given in the Canadian Army casualty list released for publication today, both being reported as wounded. They are Pte. Lewis J. Young, son of Mrs. Margaret Young, R.R. 2, Bloomfield, and Rfn. Donald J. Forestell, son of Thomas O. Forestell, of Madoc. Pte. Young is a member of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, while Rfn. Forestall wears the uniform of a Central Ontario regiment.

ROTARIANS TO DONATE BOOKS AND CLOTHING

Books and men's clothing will be the quarries of a Rotary Club hunt this week and next.

The library of HMCS "Belleville" will be replenished with books furnished by the clubmen. Each Rotarian has been asked to donate a volume to be brought to the weekly luncheon on Monday next.

In answer to a general Rotary appeal, suits and overcoats will also be donated by the clubmen for the use of the Britishers made homeless through the ravages of robombs. It is stated that 100,000 in Britain are badly in need of clothing. The clothing will be baled and forwarded from a city central point.

CASE OF CANNED GOODS IS FOUND

There is a case of canned goods reposing at the police station just awaiting possession of the owner. On Wednesday John M. Burley, who resides on East Moira St., observed a carton lying in the middle of the street opposite his home. Upon closer scrutiny he found it to be a case of canned goods, which he immediately took to the police station.

The only other activity in and around local police circles came late last night when Traffic Officer Caldwell observed three airmen from Mountain View carrying a suspicious looking carton. Investigations disclosed the carton was filled with beer bottles. The carton was confiscated and the airmen turned over to the custody of the R.C.A.F. service police to appear in Friday's police court in answer to L. C. A. charges.

Greatly Elated Over News Item

The two old gentlemen stood at a street intersection this morning, undoubtedly in the throes of elation that follows good news.

They gesticulated and slapped one another on the backs, pointing to a small news item tucked away in a corner of a page.

A small crowd collected. Was the war over? Had Hitler been proved dead? Was there another great American naval battle?

The crowd grew larger. Conjecture was rife. The two old gents, faces wreathed in smiles, were too happy to talk.

Finally a spectator managed to get a look at the item which was attracting so much attention. It read.

"There is a possibility that the liquor quota will be increased from 26 to 52 ounces in the month of December."

Awarded D.C.M.

Sgt. J. H. Hill, 26, of Belleville, Ont., won the D.C.M. for leading an eight-man party on to enemy positions before the Hitler Line May 23. The party charged and cleared a German pillbox and enemy dugouts, and took 83 German prisoners. "It was largely due to his intrepid courage, complete disregard for his personal safety and inspired leadership . . . that so many enemy were captured or destroyed with but slight losses to our forces," the citation said. His mother resides at Rossmore and his wife in Peterborough.

Three-Months Term Is Imposed

Sergt. Clarence Nash of the Trenton R.C.A.F. service police, was sentenced to serve three months in prison after being convicted of stealing multiple articles from the Trenton R.C.A.F. base when he was arraigned before Magistrate T. Y. Wills in county police court today.

Nash was arrested by Provincial Police after complaints had been received regarding the disappearance of electrical equipment that included an automobile radio. The total value of the articles stolen was estimated at $350.00, stated Provincial Constables Soubliere and Siple, who investigated the matter and preferred the charges.

Traffic cases in the court resulted in pleas of guilty being accepted from Ernest Reid, Napanee, who paid five dollars and costs on a careless driving count while Roy Hill contributed $17.50, which included costs, when he admitted to a speeding charge.

Public Co-operation Will Speed Delivery Of Christmas Mail

With the beginning of the Christmas mailing rush expected to start shortly postal authorities are reminding the general public of small considerations which if followed would materially speed the delivery of cards, letters and parcels.

The public is asked to tie local and out-of-town mail in separate bundles with stamps in the upper right hand corner. Standard size envelopes and cards run swiftly through cancellation machines and speed delivery. To avoid a recurrence of the hundreds of letters improperly and insufficiently addessed envelopes which are received annually postal authorities ask that checks be made to see that all mail is addressed correctly and legibly — for cities it should always include the house and number.

With the post office handling the greatest volume of mail in history and at a time when trained help has been depleted and inexperienced employees being taken on, it is pointed out that it is in the interests of the general public to cooperate.

MAY SET

Naughton addresses the House on the reinforcement situation.

There was an impression the cabinet would be fairly united on whatever the Prime Minister might tell the Commons, but reports persisted there might still be resignations from the cabinet.

P. C.'s Hold Caucus

The Progressive Conservatives also held a caucus today, probably to discuss whether they should again present a motion asking that the National Resources Mobilization Act be fully implemented and trained men of the home defence army of 60,000 dispatched overseas forthwith.

Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House leader, yesterday attempted to have the motion brought before the House for immediate debate, but Speaker J. A. Glen ruled that 48 hours notice was required.

Meanwhile, there also were reports some C.C.F. members, who have been declined to commit themselves on the reinforcement issue now are convinced draftees should be sent overseas immediately. It was understood they came to the decision after perusing the exchange of correspondence between Mr. King and Col. Ralston, tabled in the Commons.

Earlier reports on Parliament Hill said a number of Ministers would resign if the Cabinet did not agree to an out-and-out policy of sending the drafted Home Defence Army of 60,000 men overseas if the voluntary system failed to "make good" by a fixed date, but it was learned last night that no resignations were tendered by Ministers at the Cabinet session.

Col. J. L. Ralston resigned as Defence Minister Nov. 1 after failing to win Cabinet approval of his recommendation of conscription for overseas service, and he was succeeded by Gen. McNaughton, who believed voluntary methods should be tried further.

Force Show-Down.

Ministers forcing a show-down were said to be Finance Minister Ilsley, Resources Minister Crerar, Navy Minister Macdonald, Revenue Minister Gibson and Postmaster General Mulock. One report also included the name of Munitions Minister Howe.

But when the Ministers left the Cabinet meeting after sitting for almost 2 1-2 hours they had nothing to say. Prime Minister Mackenzie King left the East Block about 11 p.m., E.D.T., but, like his ministers, told reporters he had no statement to make.

The sudden adjournment of a general Liberal Party caucus late yesterday at the behest of Mr. King to give him time to discuss some undivulged matters with the Cabinet started a flood of rumors in political circles.

The question of sending the Home Defence Army overseas was said to have been brought to a head after the Progressive Conservative Party attemped to move a motion in the House yesterday asking that draftees be made available for overseas service forthwith. The motion was ruled out of order on the grounds that 48 hours' notice was required.

Between these flying wings of the Allied 6th army group offensive in the Vosges, other units took the charred ruins of St. Die, which the Germans burned in retreat. Others rolled up extensive gains east of the Meurthe river.

The 3rd army made new advances inside Germany in the Aumsdorf area. Heavy artillery checked progress west of Merzig.

Other units drove north through the Maginot Line beyond Bambudenstroff, six miles from the German border.

Fierce Battle.

The battle in the north of the Cologne plain was described in front dispatches as the most severe since the break-through at St. Lo. Tanks, artillery and infantry all were violently engaged.

Southeast of Weinweiler, near Heistern, American infantry threw off two early-morning German counter-attacks. One was by infantry and tanks, the other by infantry only.

Infantry in the Geilenkirchen sector captured a hamlet two miles northwest of Wurm and was fighting slowly into Wurm and Beeck.

British troops cleaning out the last German pockets against the Meuse in Holland captured Baarlo in an advance on the threshold of the industrial Ruhr through oozing black mud. The bulk of Germans were believed pulled back across the river, leaving only rearguards to delay the British advance upon Venlo. One British column moved more than a mile beyond captured Maasbree in conditions described thus by a 21st army group spokesman:

Masses of Mines.

"The going is absolutely shocking. The Germans planted masses and masses of mines all over the place. It's nothing but mud and mines, mines and mud."

The German radio early today reported the British 2nd had opened a heavy new assault from eastern Holland toward the Ruhr after a 10-hour artillery barrage. Berlin also delared 1,000 Allied guns had opened up from the U.S. 9th and 1st army sector east and northeast of Aachen while "fighter-bombers and tanks in numbers beggering description attack us ceaselessly."

In a field dispatch last night, Associated Press war correspondent Wes Gallagher said the Germans were wildly firing both V-1 flying bombs and V-2 rockets at 9th army rear areas, a development he said was "taken as an indication that the Nazis now are using everything they have in an effort to halt the advance of the 9th and 1st armies threatening the vital Ruhr."

The 9th was meeting some of its heaviest resistance on the approaches to Julich where German tanks were dug in. The Paris radio broadcast a report this morning that Julich had been occupied, but there was no confirmation from any official source.

TRENTON

Former Trenton Youth Brilliant Pianist, Composer

Trenton, Nov. 23— Sixteen-year-old Peter Smith, son of Rev. and Mrs. F. A. Smith, formerly of Trenton, has made a name for himself as a pianist and composer in the Capital City.

Peter, who resides in Ottawa with his mother and other members of his family while his father is overseas, recently performed at an evening concert sponsored by the Collegiate Institute Board and its Advisory Vocational Committee at the Glebe Collegiate. The Ottawa Journal in commenting on the concert states:

"The evening really belonged to Peter Smith, a student of Lisgar Collegiate, who appeared on the program in the dual role of pianist and composer. With the performance of Chopin's familiar and beautiful Sonata in B flat minor he emerged as one of Ottawa's most gifted young musicians. His playing was marked by assurance, quality of tone and maturity beyond his years. He played the Chopin Etude for the left hand as an encore.

The sixteen-year-old composer was lucky to have a pair of musicians like Eugene Kash and Irene Woodburn to introduce his impromptu in E major for violin and piano to the general public. The piece was melodious and "romantic," in character, and was received with enthusiasm. It was composed at a cottage last summer and the youthful author of the work remarked it had no significance but was offered as pure music."

The father of this youthful composer, Major F. A. Smith, is serving as a Padre with the Canadians in Italy, but was for several years Rector of St. George's Anglican Church, Trenton.

Trentonians will naturally, therefore, be extremely interested in the brilliant musical career of Major Smith's eldest son, Peter.

Welcomed to Court

His Worship, Col. T. Y. Wills, of Belleville, was welcomed to the Local Police Court on Tuesday afternoon, replacing Magistrate J. L. Lloyd of Northbrook, who has retired to his former district.

Twenty-seven cases were heard, with Lt.-Col. B. C. Donnan, K. C. County Crown Attorney prosecuting:

Harry Corby and Burton Corby each were charged with intoxication, on evidence of police officer, that they had been liberated on bail and re-arrested next day charged with the same offence, the Magistrate fined them $25.00 and costs each, default 14 days.

F. Doran, paid $50.00 and costs for a breach of the Liquor Control Act.

Six others paid the usual $10.00 and costs.

License Suspended

Donald Tripp of Frankford charged with leaving the scene of an accident, contrary to the Criminal Code, had his license suspended for six months and was given a year's suspended sentence and ordered to pay $20.85 costs, charge of dangerous driving against him was dismissed when the crown offered no evidence.

V. Neal was fined $10.00 and costs for driving with defective brakes, while West Reid paid $10.00 and costs for careless driving.

Gordon Lanigan was fined $5.00 and costs for speeding and Paul MacNamara was fined a total of $4.50 for breaches of the traffic signal.

H. Patton had her case enlarged for one week, as had O. Moran.

Defective Brakes

J. Cormack paid $10.00 and costs for defective brakes and H. McCormack $10.00 and costs for driving without a license.

Clifford Hogan and Edward Williams were arrested by Constable George Crawford about 2.30 a.m. on King St. when they were found trying two store doors. Due to their youth and previous good character and after pleading guilty, convictions were discharged in accordance with Sec. 729 of the Criminal Code, which is provided for first offenders.

Leslie Ray, charged with assaulting Vera Wessels, was defended by Mr. Allan MacNab. Both were tenants of the same landlord and apparently an altercation developed over payment of their Hydro bills. Mr. MacNab, being agent for the property, it was suggested by the Magistrate that he get the parties together; and later, before court adjourned, Mrs. Wessels withdrew the charge.

ful damage failed to appear and a ful damage falle dto appear and a warrant was issued for his arrest.

Two non-support cases and a breach of the School Attendance Act were adjourned for one week.

Strike of Phone Operators Hits Washington Area

Washington, Nov. 23 (AP) — A growing strike of women telephone operators, assuming national significance, hit Washington today and with it came the prospect of White House action.

Not only was the capital engulfed by the spread which started a week ago in Dayton, O., but the great production centres of Michigan as well, and other cities were in the path.

Washington operators began walking out hours in advance of the formal start set for 6 a.m. E.D.T. today.

In Washington, picketing began simultaneously at three telephone company buildings, but a company official said the extent of the strike would only be known during a change of shifts later in the day.

Like a thunderstorm crackling along the lines that link city to city, there were rumbings of still more strikes in answer to the Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers' appeal for assistance from 41 affiliated unions.

Long distance calls were primarily affected.

Reject Return Order.

Just as the estimated 5,000 Ohio workers flatly rejected a get-back-to-work-or-else order of the War Labor Board, the 2,700 Washington operators ignored another W.L.B. message which said that 'any interference with telephone service in the nation's capital at this critical period of the war can not be tolerated."

The War Labor Board, after wrestling with the Ohio dispute throughout Wednesday, deferred possibility of the government taking over until today. It announced last night it would refer the case to economic stabilization director Fred M. Vinson—an action which normally precedes presentation to President Roosevelt.

Cause of Strike.

The strike started in a protest by Dayton operators against the granting of $18.25 living expense accounts weekly to outsiders brought in to help run the switchboards. Operators in 28 other Ohio cities fell in line.

The Washington operators said they likewise objected to a similar practice here, sympathised with the Ohio strikers and in addition had some wage grievances as to basic pay scales.

Company officials have said the practice is necessary in these times of much work and shortage of help —that it is only fair to help out-of-towners meet extra expenses.

Effects of the strike were quickly felt in busy Washington, where thousands of calsl are handled daily to and from war production centres and military establishments.

Only high priority long distance calls were accepted beginning early last night. Local service on automatic dial telephones was not affected.

IN MEMORIAM

NORMAN — In loving memory of a dear husband and father, Edward Arthur Norman, who passed away November 19, 1943.

Time speeds on, one year has passed
Since death its gloom, its shadows cast
Within our home, where all seemed bright,
And took from us a shining light.
We miss that light, and ever will.
His vacant place there's none to fill.
Down here we mourn, but not in vain,
For up in Heaven we will meet again.

Observers Believe Voroshilov To Get Important Post

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
(AP Staff Writer)

Washington, Nov. 23—(AP)—Marshal Klementi Voroshilov, having made his exit from the Moscow scene as a soldier, may turn up again as a statesman. Experienced observers of Soviet affairs consider it possible he would be appointed Russian delegate to the prospective United Nations peace conference next year and serve on the world security council.

Moscow's announcement yesterday that Voroshilov had been released from the state committee of defence was considered not a demotion, but a transfer for Marshal Stalin's old comrade-in-arms.

Voroshilov derived his power from his position as No. 3 man in the Politburo of the Communist party, next only to Mr. Stalin and Foreign Commissar Molotov, rather than from his specific assignment to other posts. As long as he retained his party place, it would appear, his power stayed unimpaired.

His release from the Defence Committee, however, freed him for other work, such as that of post-war planning and administration.

Maxim Litvinov, former Ambassador to the United States, and Ivan Maisky, former Ambassador to Great Britain, had already been assigned as vice-commissars of foreign affairs to Soviet peace planning.

With Marshal Stalin and Mr. Molotov forced to remain close to Moscow, assignment of Voroshilov to international negotiations would give the Russians a diplomat with the confidence of his leaders and sufficient authority to act.

Social Privileges Asked for Parents

London, Nov. 23 (CP)—A scheme of practical social privileges or priorities for parents—first choice of new houses, and piority for family travel and entertainment—has been advocated by the Tory Reform Committee as one way to "dignify" parenthood and stop the decline in the birth rate.

Among other suggestions in the committee's new phamplet, "Tomorrow's Children," are:—

1. A domestic service plan, with national status, and help for mothers before, during and after confinement;

2. Children's "parking places" with an ancillary "sitters" service to care for children while parents go out together;

3. Maternity institutions based on the family unit, with private rooms rather than wards;

"(Sir William) Beveridge and all the rest will be so much moonshine with a declining population and always more coming on the pension list and fewer to the plow, tractor and the lathe," says the pamphlet.

It suggested that each married couple should on the average leave behind not less than two children and preferably three. Economic barriers should be removed so men and women would marry earlier in life.

"The effect of childen today is to reduce the parents' and the whole family's standard of living in the material sense. Instead of being an economic asset, each child is equivalent for many homes to a sentence of 14 years hard labor, with no option and no remission for good behavior."

Fire Under Truck Sets Off Explosion, Trucker is Injured

Granite, Colo., Nov. 23. (AP)—Bill Lane, Granite mail carrier, built a fire under his pickup truck so it would start more easily, and the garage caught fire. Lane called Walt Miller to help fight the blaze, and as Miller approached an oil barrel exploded blowing the roof off the garage and onto Miller's head.

The explosion spread burning oil over the neighborhood, threatening the entire west side of Granite and bringing out the Leadville fire department to put out the blaze. And now: Lane's garage and house have burned down, Miller is in the hospital, and everybody seems to have forgotten about the pickup truck.

Myriads of Shells Tires, Guns, Blankets Needed—Eisenhower

Washington, Nov. 23 — (AP)— Gen. Eisenhower said today his soldiers are making daily headway by courage and suffering but they need "myriads of shells and tires and guns and blankets and planes."

The man commanding the gigantic western front offensive against Germany appealed personally to his compatriots to oversubscribe the Sixth United States war loan and "transform the money quickly into vital fighting equipment."

It was Eisenhower's second urgent appeal to buy war bonds. He made it in a talk prepared for broadcast from his European headquarters.

Mud, cold, bullets and minefields can't stop millions of Allied troops from pushing the enemy back if they are plentifully supplied and supported from the homeland, Eisenhower declared.

The equipment is needed "now," he said.

Admiral Nimitz, Commander-in-chief of the United States Pacific fleet, said in a Thanksgiving Day message on the same program that "we give thanks . . . to the men and women and children on the home front. Their toil and their savings invested in war bonds have made possible the outfitting and supply of the great fleet which has struck the enemy so effectively."

WOUNDED VETERAN CARRIES SISTER TO SAFETY

Toronto, Nov. 23 — (CP) — A wounded veteran of the present war, Cpl. Edward Elliott, 23, carried his semi-conscious sister to safety last night when their home was swept by fire. Gladys Elliott was overcome by dense smoke when she went to warn her father and mother. The corporal found her slumped on a corridor floor and carried her to a rear room where he put her on a roof outside the window.

Damage amounted to $400.

Wodehouse Released By French Police

Paris, Nov. 23 (AP)—The police judiciare announced officially today that P. G. Wodehouse, British novelist, had been released after spending three nights in a police station, but it was disclosed later that he was still detained.

Although it was understood authorities had agreed not to press charges that Mr. Wodehouse aided the Germans by broadcasts from Germany in 1941 providing he left the Paris area, indications were that he would not be released until tomorrow at the earliest pending arrangements for his residence under surveillance in the country.

Both the press and Mrs. Wodehouse were formally advised this morning that the author had been freed.

It was understood that the author and Mrs. Wodehouse were given until Dec. 1 to arrange to live not less than 100 kilometres (62 miles) outside of Paris.

Mr. Wodehouse, who was taken into custody Monday night with his wife, said he hoped to go to Britain and then to the United States as soon as civilian transport was resumed.

Mrs. Wodehouse was released yesterday morning. It was explained at the time that her husband's release was delayed because the necessary papers had not been completed when the police office closed for the night yesterday.

Strangling Effect On Enemy

These days and long since the news reaching Germany is all of a kind, bad news, news of the failure of the Germans to keep off the onslaught of the Allied power which is swelling on the Western Front and on the Russian front and which has been moving up through Italy. In the first part of the war it was the Allies who had to experience reverses, but there was the intense satisfaction in the situation of those days in knowing that Germany was at or near her peak of power while the Allies who had been unready had to build up and at the same time to hold back the enemy as best they could and were doing so.

Today it is Germany that hears news of reverses that no Gestapo can keep out—inevitable reverses that stab at the heart of Germany because Germany is unable to throw reserves into the field or the air for she has not such. The Allies have overwhelming power which will roll on over Germany until the enemy is defeated. Germany cannot call up new forces to her aid.

The sense of irresistible Allied power moving steadily and relentlessly to the overthrow of the German strength is felt everywhere. Undoubtedly the German leaders know that defeat is ahead, though they hope against hope for something to turn up and help them out of the trap into which they have allowed themselves to fall by their unsuccessful plans of conquering the world.

At this time Germany is feeling as never before the strangling effect of the united strength of three Allied fronts and the everlasting pounding of Germany's military targets from the sky, while on the sea Hitler's surface and under-surface navies are so badly battered and so helpless.

The supreme moment of the war is ahead. How far it is difficult to say but there is assured that the iron grip of the Allies will find the Germans unable to endure and with this inability must crash in ruins and rubble their empire of aggression and tyranny. All that the Allies have struggled for has been coming to pass and leading up to this time. The United Nations have not erred—the Germans have made not only the supreme blunder of attacking the world but have also blundered in their conduct of the war—while the United Nations have with the breadth of wisdom of their united strategy and tactics built up the world's most powerful force to bring the Huns to the world judgment, overwhelming defeat in war and the destruction of their machinery for making war. Bad news and heavy blows without let-up will have the inevitable result—the enemy's overthrow.

Huns' Mentality

The wellknown American playwright, philosopher and author, Louis K. Anspacher, in speaking at Montreal on "the Herrenvolk neutrality," declared that Hitlerism is not a phenomenon, dependent only upon the emergence or disappearance of the man Hitler but Hitlerism and its political expression Nazism are manifestations of the Pan-German mind. "We are not only fighting a man and an army. We are fighting a perverted mentality in a people—a mentality whose good qualities have not been emphasized by good historical conditioning but whose perverse qualities have long been indurated by bad historical conditioning. There is not the slightest difference between Deutschland ueber Alles ("Germany over All") and the Horst-Wessel hymn. They both declare the world-wide supremacy of the German Herrenvolk."

Dr. Anspacher declared that "the German general staff is the villain in the drama of liberty and it will continue to threaten the peace, the liberty and security of the rest of the world unless we obliterate it ruthlessly. It is the real enemy. In a short span of 80 years it has threatened five times to destroy the liberties, the peace and the civilization of the world. The present war represents its fifth attempt to do so and the terrible thing to reflect upon is that each successive attempt has carried it relentlessly nearer its goal of world-conquest.

He stressed the implacable long-range planning of the German general staff which is the directive head of the vertical monopoly which has controlled the whole of Germany since the time of Bismarck. At the top of this are the General Staff and the Junker officer-class and immediately below them are the big banking interests who control the money the credit and the production of the great industrialists especially in the heavy goods industries like munitions, chemicals and motorized armament. The General Staff also controls the educational system and each teacher is obliged to cultivate Pan-Germanism. There is, he said, no independent thinking in Germany and he doubted if independence of thought ever existed there in modern times.

The General Staff, he declared, saw in Hitler and his gangsters a rabble-rousing bunch it could utilise, even though it loathed him and it was natural that "some of the Junkers and General Staff should have attempted to blow up Hitler or cut his throat and get rid of the top-flight Nazis and then they would come before the world and say that they had got rid of the bad men who had led Germany astray and were good Germans now who loved good music and children, beer and sauerkraut."

Dr. Anspacher warned that "if we get soft and sentimental as we did the last time or listen to the seductive voice of those who would exploit our war-weariness and if we do not finish the job this time we shall make the most irreparably tragic the most fantastic and criminal blunder in universal history."

The Germans, he said, had never participated in government but were educated into serf-like obedience to force and brutal compulsion. For instance the German soldier accepted no moral or civic responsibility whatever. The German would rather obey than think and he is trained to unthinking blind obedience, the result being "mass murders, tortures and incredible atrocities with a cold and methodical ferocity that has appalled the rest of civilized humanity."

He again warned that it is ridiculous to say that a few Prussians have caused all the trouble Germany has brought upon the world for two-thirds of Germany are Prussians.

The determination with which the Allied governments and the military leaders are pushing the war over the borders of Germany to crush that country to unconditional surrender shows that they will allow no third chance for the Germans to outrage humanity and that the Allied countries are a unit upon the total defeat and crushing overthrow of militarism of Germany and of the Pan-German ideals of race domination.

Master Plan

(Transatlantic London Mail)

Britain's automobile manufacturers have a master-plan ready for the moment the government permits them to resume making civilian cars.

Within three months of the factories release from war work, cars will be rolling off the production lines in thousands.

This is the view of Sir Miles Thomas, chairman of the Public Relations Committee of the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders.

He said that the Nuffield Organization, of which he is vice-chairman, expects to be turning out 1,000 cars a month of one popular model within three months of restarting production.

Sir Miles said that the first new cars "will probably cost 40 per cent to 50 per cent more" than similar cars in 1939.

A large number will have to be earmarked for the export market.

Manufacturers would have to get a grip on the export trade before the public at home could enjoy the advantages of lower prices brought about by quantity productions.

Sir Miles believes there will be fewer models of popular makes of cars. If suitable amendments are made in Britain's motor-car taxation, there is likely to be a type common to both the home and the export market.

Falsehood is in a hurry; it may be at any moment detected and punished; truth is calm, serene; its judgment is on high; its king cometh out of the chambers of eternity.—Joseph Parker.

THANKSGIVING

For every brave boy, land and sea,
And of Thy spacious skies,
Hear us, dear Lord, whose prayers to Thee
From grateful hearts arise.

For all their courage under care,
Their patience under pain,
This day we come with grateful prayer
And shall each night again.

For every miracle of aid
Which faith in Thee restored
And brought to safety boys who prayed,
We thank Thee, gracious Lord.

Grant soon, we pray, that victory
We long have waited for,
When peace on earth again will be,
And war shall be no more.

VORACIOUS OSTRICH

The ostrich is proverbial not only for burying its head in the sand but also for its almost endless appetite.

Among some of the ancients it was widely believed that the ostrich could digest stones and pieces of iron and this belief persisted until a few centuries ago, when ostriches were commonly portrayed with horseshoes in their mouths.

"The ostrich," wrote the French naturalist Cuvier (1769-1832), "is naturally herbivorous; but though it is often seen pasturing in the south of Africa, it is yet so voracious, and its sense of taste and smell are so obtuse, that it devours animal and mineral substances indiscriminately, until its enormous stomach is completely full. It swallows without any choice, and merely as it were for ballast, wood, stones, grass, iron, copper, gold, lime, or in fact any other substance equally hard, indigestible, and deleterious. The powers of digestion in the bird are certainly very great, but their operation is confined to matters of an alimentary character."

Ostriches, like other birds, have no true teeth and their function is partly supplied by grit and gravel that grinds up the food in the gizzard. These birds, being large, require a great deal of grit and they are ever on the alert for stones, gravel, pieces of bone and the like.

It is said that ostriches are hunted in South America for the diamonds sometimes found in their crops. In one of these "living diamond mines" more than 50 diamonds were found.

Ostriches show little discrimination and have been known to swallow pocketbooks, spectacle cases, watches and other similar objects.

On ostrich farms the birds are generally pastured on alfalfa in the summer and fed alfalfa hay, wheat bran, barley, oats and other grains in winter.

As a rule ostriches have no appetite for flesh in any form unless they are exceedingly hungry.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

DEBUNKING NEEDS DEBUNKING

Nutrition scientists have determined within broad limits the amounts of each vitamin and mineral needed in the daily diet to maintain optimum health, says an illuminating editorial on "Medicine Men of the Air," in The New Republic, Oct. 23, '44. It is known, the editorial continues, that "ample amounts of all these essentials are contained in the average, well balanced diet which includes daily servings of meat and potatoes, vegetables, eggs, milk, salads and desserts. Except in conditions of extreme poverty and in certain restricted geographic areas where diets commonly overemphasize one or two foods, many nutritionists believe it would be difficult for the man or woman in ordinary good health to fail to get the requisite amounts of vitamins..."

I am tired of hearing that vague generality reiterated by half-informed and misinformed people wherever and whenever the question of vitamins in nutrition arises. It began, I believe, when the head publicity man of the best advertised "clinic" in the country broke into innumerable magazines, popular and medical, about fifteen years ago, with a characteristic blast at the "vitamin craze"—it seemed that eminent specialists — you know, physicians whose patients are of the upper classes — saw very few cases in a year in which they suspected any vitamin deficiency. But no physician today would have the temerity to make such a statement. Every physician who is at all conversant with the newer knowledge of nutrition knows better now.

If such a "well balanced" (whatever that hokum means) diet as the editorial mentions will supply adequate amounts of vitamins to keep one in good health, why does the Food and Nutrition Committee of the National Research Council advocate the practice of "enriching" flour and bread with vitamins? And why do health authorities approve of the practice of "enriching" milk with vitamin D? And why does the federal government and most state governments approve of the practice of "enriching" or doctoring oleomargarine with vitamin A? Is all of this "doctoring" of foods or food products justified when any one can get al the vitamins he needs from a reasonably varied diet such as the New Republic editorial mentions?

A "crack patent lawyer" defending a University "research foundation" charged by the federal government with conspiring with 16 companies to suppress competition in the manufacture and sale of vitamin D, exclaimed "You can't use it (vitiman D) in everything and you can't cure flat feet with vitamin D."

Of course the patent lawyer is not a physician and he would hardly qualify as an expert witness in regard to what vitamin D will or will not cure. I believe vitamin D cures flat feet in many instances, and I am certain that it prevents flat feet in many more instances. Naturally the patent lawyer would not know, but vitamin D is the specific preventative and cure for rickets, and weak ankles, pronated feet and flat feet in growing children and a common manifestation of rickets.

When it comes to getting enough vitamin D from a "well balanced" diet, if you ask me I think it is practically impossible.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Ex-Mayor Bone Gives Views on Gas Plant

Nov. 21, 1944.

Editor, Ontario Intelligencer,

I understand that the City Council concluded sometime ago to allow the taxpayers of the City to decide by ballot, the fate of our local gas plant. Since then I am told, they have reversed their decision, and we taxpayers who have supported this monstrosity for 50 years, will not be given the opportunity to vote "yea" or "nay". The City Council promised to give the taxpayers all available information on this public sink-hole, but none has been forthcoming. We, the public, apparently cannot be trusted to form an opinion, nor can we be trusted to vote after forming one. All of this and the general treatment meted out to owners of property, is becoming more fascist and more communistic every day. And yet the government wonders, and wonders again, why nobody will build houses to rent.

There have been some very good letters in the paper on the gas question, and I understand, some of our big industries are up in arms at the suggestion of closing the gas plant, although gas can be purchased compressed in steel containers. We used to have the Grand Trunk threatening to "move out" if everything didn't go their way, and now the horrible threat comes from "big business". Our manufacturers employ great numbers of our citizens and their payroll if withdrawn, would mean chaos. This is admitted athough I think it is very good of our people to work for these industries, and I presume it is not slave labor. The bargain between employer and employee is no doubt mutual, and there are no particular favors granted by either side. The industries don't employ these men out of sympathy or philanthropy, I hope.

The government Blue Book shows gas works elsewhere, particularly in Kitchener, doing very well and even extending their capacity. Here it has been one dismal failure for 25 years to my own knowledge. The plant has been rehabilitated at least three and probably four times during the past 25 years at a cost of several hundred thousand dollars. This money came out of the pockets of the property owner, who in many cases is a poor widow. Many of them lost their properties through being unable to foot the tax bills. Now apparently we must continue to face further rehabilitation costs, of maybe another one or two hundred thousand dollars, beside the present annual contribution of $13,000 to $15,000.

The plant of course had very bad management, it couldn't have been worse. Our large industries here have lots of money, they say the plant can be run efficiently and made to pay. Will they risk any of their capital and take it over jointly and severally? Or would they rather risk the widows' and orphans' and the old people's life savings? No doubt they will choose the latter, although they could probably put up the money now, and keep it out of the government's confiscatory system of Income Tax, and not cost the industries a cent. Failing this could not the City take their sinking fund surplus (provided by we property owners) and also use the profits from the water and electric utilities? Or would everybody rather do nothing and just charge it to us as usual?

Here is what the City of Edmonton gets from its public utilities. A city of 105,000 population. These figures are for 1943:

	Taxes Paid	Surplus Transfer	Total contribution to Gen. Rev.
Electric light and power system....	165,021	10,654	175,675
Power, water supply and purification plant	164,731	196,478	361,209
Street Railway System	92,779	29,900	122,679
Telephone Sys. (City owns Telephone Sys.)	122,334	172,618	294,952
Waterworks Distribution System ..	121,565	50,000	171,565
	$665,420	$459,650	$1,126,070

Toronto and other Ontario cities are "thinking about this"—and will continue most likely to "think". We "think" but we never "do".

Remember too that a good many of our large industries could in some cases get better and cheaper goods and services here in Belleville than elsewhere ,but the favors go elsewhere. I am getting a bit fed up on the "all take and no give" idea. We supply at our expense all municipal services for all the churches and all government buildings, including Hydro, which is absurd. If the tenant paid his municipal taxes directly to the City Treasurer as is done in more prosperous and more enlightened countries, conditions would improve 100 per cent. over night I am sure. But try to explain that to anybody in authority. We talk a lot but we never remedy anything, so far as my observations go. Ontario looks and acts today, much as it did in the eighteen seventies. Why we bother shaving every morning I am unable to say.

Yours very truly,
Jamieson Bone.

BEFORE AND AFTER

The dramatic end of the 45,000-ton German battleship Tirpitz is pictured in the above pictures. In the upper photo the Tirpitz rides at anchor in Tromso Fjord, Norway, where she was attacked by a force of 32 Lancaster bombers of the R.A.F. on November 12. An anti-torpedo boom surrounds the ship in this view. In the lower picture the ship is completely shrouded by smoke from bomb hits, as the Lancasters found their target.

MEN WHO THINK OF TOMORROW
plan handi-talkies for your use!

TOMORROW'S PRIVATE HANDI-TALKIE . . . Knee-deep in your favorite fishing waters, you can call the camp on your private radio-telephone to let the boys know what the trout are taking. From your car, you can call home to say you're on the way. The handi-talkie will be a marvel of everyday life not only in sports but in every type of business and industry—planned for you by men who think of tomorrow.

WHO, indeed, doesn't look forward to the good things of tomorrow—when peace comes again? Yet we cannot for an instant relax our vigilance—not so long as there is a single armed enemy soldier at large—Nazi or Jap!

- We must fight to the end the battle against waste; we must keep production at its highest pitch; we must salvage fats and waste paper and metals; we must conserve gasoline and rubber; and, above all, we must continue buying and keeping Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates.
- Does a soldier lay his rifle down when enemy resistance slackens for a moment? No! And no more may we at home withdraw our help by cashing in our Victory Bonds. They represent a pledge to our government and our fighting forces that we will back them to the last. This we must do.
- Let us all be men who think of tomorrow . . . . by holding our home front battle lines today!

NS. Alice Potter Wedded in Naples

A military wedding of much local interest took place in Christ Church away over in Naples, Italy, on November second, when Lieut. Nursing Sister Mary Alice Potter, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis W. Potter, of Belleville, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Captain Edmund Finningley, of the 5th L.A.A. Royal Canadian Artillery, son of Mr. and Mrs. Allan Finningley, of Oakmount Drive, Toronto. The ceremony was performed by the regimental padre, Captain E. Orme.

NATIVE OF BRAZIL

THE DREAMER

Pensively I sit in the classroom
Staring out at the sky,
Thinking, wondering and dreaming
With a faraway look in my eye.

I'm not thinking of wars or of killings,
Of cabbages or kings,
I'm not thinking of pretty dresses
I'm thinking of fanciful things.

I fancy I am a princess
Wearing a crown of glittering gold
I live in a tower of ivory
Like the lucky dreamers of old.

Next I think I'm a whitecap
Dancing along in the breeze
Wearing a gown of sunlight
My playgrounds are the seas.

Then I dream I'm a pirate
Wearing patched and ragged clothes
My ship flys a jolly roger
Where I'll end nobody knows.

Next I am a tramp, a dirty tramp
Strolling the streets with ease
A regular man of leisure
Wearing trousers with baggy knees;

Then suddenly I am a bluebird
Soaring high, oh so high
Trilling a wondrous melody
With my spirit as free as the sky;

Then with a start, I come back to earth
And find I am still in school
And I feel very foolish, to think I have been
A dreamer, a fanciful fool.

CROFTON

Community Honors Young Married Couple

Crofton.—On Thursday evening last, friends from this neighborhood and Burrs' gathered at the hall to honor Mr. Alfred Eley and his bride, formerly Miss Julia Jeffries, of Belleville. All joined in community singing, after which Mr. and Mrs. Eley were called to the platform where a table decorated with pink streamers was laid with gifts. Mrs. Clifford Hough read an address signed by both communities. Both Alfred and Julia made suitable replies. Games were played and then the ladies served refreshments which brought a very enjoyable evening to a close.

Parsons and prayer by Rev. L. C. Burr.

"Do You Remember?

By Daphne Dohl

(Special to Ontario Intelligencer)

I wonder if other readers of this paper, are as excited as I am over the recent publication of two new Canadian books. These are "The Building of Jalna" by Mazo de la Roche and "Carrying Place" by Angus Mowatt.

Angus Mowatt's book "Then I'll Look Up", published some years ago, held a particular interest for people of Prince Edward County and the Bay of Quinte district, as the scene of the story was laid here, in the old days of the grain-carrying schooners. Scenes and even names at Wellington were easy to identify. The title "Carrying Place", of the new book also suggests that the scene of the story could be laid in Prince Edward County.

The scene of all the "Jalna" books by Mazo de la Roche is laid near Oakville, Ontario, on a horse breeding farm named Jalna. But the Whiteoaks family who live at Jalna, is one of such interest and drama, that the books by this Canadian authoress are as popular in England, and the United States as they are here. Her new book is bound to be exciting reading.

I have seen two homes recently that were made interesting by their owners at no great cost. The one home was entirely furnished in a conventional manner. To give it distinction its mistress had secured an old-fashioned walnut centre table with a marble top. She had had the legs of the table cut down to make an attractive coffee table that was "different". For a console table in her hall, she had also secured a kidney-shaped walnut table, again with a marble top.

The other home had a very small dining room, really just an alcove off the living-room. The owner inherited a very fine antique mahogany table, and purchased modern mahogany chairs with white leather seats. There was no room left for a buffet. Someone suggested a corner cupboard built of mahogany. The trouble was to secure some old mahogany that would match the table. Years before the back drop of the windows of a large department store had been of mahogany. Later when a chain store purchased the department store, they painted the mahogany boards white. This year they scrapped them in favor of a newer type of back drop. The house owner secured the painted mahogany boards for a very small sum, and painstakingly scraped off all the white paint. Beneath was beautiful mahogany, which a cabinet maker soon used to build a very attractive corner cupboard. The room still needed to be papered and it was hard to decide on the right background for the mahogany furniture.

About this time the owner of the dining room picked up an antique fruit dish at a sale. It was of milk glass, with a fluted rim of watermelon pink glass. She got it for ten cents, and thought it quaintly pretty. A few weeks later when she and her husband were in the city, they came across candle sticks to match the fruit bowl in an antique shop. They asked the price and were astonished when the salesman said "Twenty-five dollars". "But why?" asked the house owner, and the salesman said, "Bristol glass, Madam". However, they bought them, and decided on paper in the same watermelon pink for the walls of their small dining room. Now they have a very charming room, different in every detail from any one else's. Quite often it is not the amount of money you spend, but the ingenuity you use that produces the most satisfying results in decoration.

MARSH HILL W.M.S.

The November meeting of the Marsh Hill W.M.S. was held at the home of Mrs. Clayton Marisette with an attendance of eight members and one visitor.

Mrs. E. B. Pinkle, the president, opened the meeting.

The Worship Service was built on the theme, "Consecration to the Kingdom". Prayers were offered by Madames Lindenfield, Searles and Mitts. These same ladies were appointed to act as a nominating committee to bring in a slate of officers for the next meeting.

Mrs. Lindenfield, group leader, then called on Mrs. Searles for a reading, "This is not mine".

Mrs. Lindenfield dealt with the second part of the study book, "The Church in Malaya and Dutch East Indies".

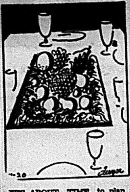
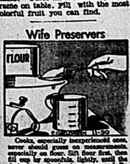
It's About Time



IT'S ABOUT TIME to plan a centrepieces for Thanksgiving dinner which is both beautiful and edible. Place an old ornate picture frame on table. Fill with the most colorful fruit you can find.

Wife Preservers



Cooks, especially inexperienced ones, never should guess on measurements, especially on flour. Sift flour first, then fill cup by spoonfuls, lightly, until the desired quantity has been measured. Do not shake down or pack. If you are measuring a full cup, take a knife and level off the top of the cup after filling. If measuring by spoonfuls, fill spoon and level off top lightly with a knife.

Corbin Employees' Guild Dance Enjoyable Event

The first dance ever undertaken by the Employees' Guild of the Corbin Lock Company of Canada Ltd., was held on Tuesday night and was reported as a great success. The setting for the occasion was the Trianon Ball Room and the featured band for the event was Buff Estes, his clarinet and his twelve musicians. George Brown, president of the guild, and his dance committee, composed of Percy Graham, Alice Ellis, Mary Philips and Annie Bell, are to be highly commended for their very fine arrangements in preparation for the dance. The master of ceremonies Dawson C. Boyd conducted a number of novelty dances which were enthusiastically received by everyone. The spot dance prizes were won by June Richardson and Gerald Pack and by Mr. and Mrs. George Brown. There was a jitterbug contest, and everyone gathered 'round to watch the entertaining show of "rug cutting". The prize went to Mrs. A. Gannon and her "khaki clad" dance partner. Winners of the door prizes were Frances Scott and Grace Bulpit.

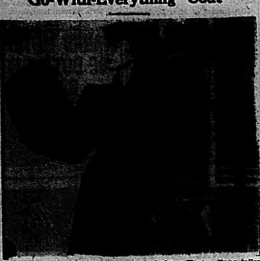
Go-With-Everything Coat



By ALICE ALDEN

THE UNTRIMMED, smartly cut but simply styled, coat of fine woollen is a wardrobe in itself, since it permits dressing up or down, and goes well with or without furs. New York designer Hansen Bang tailored this handsome coat of plum colored woollen and made it with breast and hip pockets and upturned lapels. The one-button fastening defines a fitted waistline.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

An Engagement-Announcement Party

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

My son's fiancee is about to announce their engagement, and I'm entirely uncertain about my duties. I have met the girl twice, and her parents once (they live a few miles from us.) If an engagement-announcement party is planned, will I be invited? If so, will I be expected to take a gift—what kind? And what other duties would be mine? If no party is planned and the engagement is announced only in the newspapers what is my duty?

S.R.

If an engagement-announcement party is given, of course you will be invited (and the members of your immediate family also, unless the party is a dinner only for the engaged couple and their parents). If the announcement party is in the form of a tea or other late-afternoon party, there may be (though this not not necessary) a receiving-line, and you may be invited to receive with the girl's parents, or with her and her mother.

When your son told you of the engagement, did you go to call on his fiancee, to tell her how happy you are about the engagement and to welcome her into your family? If not, this is your very special social duty, and you should make this call as soon as you possibly can.

Alo whether or not there is an announcement party, you will probably like to give this girl an engagement gift. . . .this isn't strictly necessary, but usually the fiance's mother, or his family together, do give an engagement present. An engagement present is something for the girl's personal use (unlike the wedding present, which is something for their home-to-be). Such a gift might be: lingerie, embroidered with either her first name or her initials or monogram; a lovely lace-edged handkerchief, for her to carry on her wedding day; a dresser set, or one piece for her dressing-table; a piece of jewelry (real or costume); a bottle of her favorite perfume, or a decorative perfume bottle; traveling clock, or dresser clock; photograph frame (perhaps lucite, for her bridal photograph); evening bag; comb, in case, for her evening bag.

Names on a Christmas Card.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

My husband and I are quite young, and we have one child. In having our Christmas greeting cards imprinted with our names, we are in doubt as to the correct form to use. Should our names be printed, for example, "Mr. and Mrs. Smith and Joan"? Or could we properly use our first names?

We have saved some cards we have received, and the form of names on these vary: "Mr. and Mrs. James Smith and Joan" . . . "Mary and James Smith and Joan" . . . "Mary, Joan, and James Smith" . . . and "Mary, James, and Joan Smith." Which form is correct?

Reader

I'm sure you want your Christmas cards to register a warm, personal greeting from you and your husband to your friends. . . .therefore you should use your informal names underneath the greeting.

None of the name-forms you mention in your last paragraph is correct! When a child's name is included in the greeting, the father's name should come first . . .John and Mary and Joan. Or, if you prefer, The Smiths, John, Mary, and Joan.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Hen-Pecked G. I. Joe Discovers He's Not An Old Man at Twenty-Seven

"Someone has said 'It's a long worm that has no turning' and I'm rather a long worm, six feet three, to be exact, and like many a shorter and longer worm, my dear Miss Fairfax, I'm coming to you with my problem.

"Of course I'm married. Reading your column every night convinces me the married have it all over the single in the way of problems. My wife is 25, very pretty and there are two adorable children. If it weren't for the kids there wouldn't be any problem. I'd cut and run, providing for my marital problem, of course.

"Whenever anything doesn't suit the Little Lady, she takes to weeping — paddles her own canoe on a river of tears — and sometimes takes to more violent ways and means of showing disapproval.

"When I was drafted I was profoundly relieved. At least I'd have a little peace, and not be harangued all night long. I got my boot training in one of the big camps near a big mid-western city. My mother's family had lived there and I had both cousins and friends in the town. When I got a little time off I began to realize that at 27 life was not one long bitter argument.

"I love to dance and the Post dances were delightful. Now don't jump to the conclusion that I fell in love with some charming little number. I loved them all, even those nice old spinsters who weren't above taking a whirl with a soldier when they saw him parked beside the wall.

"Then came the thunder clap. The Little Lady appeared in the town, wept and threw a tantrum in the homes of my relatives accusing me of things I never dreamed of. She'd left the children with undesirable people while she came to the Post to raise H - - -.

"She actually succeeded in getting to my superior officer and laid before him her false charges. These about me were easily disproved. The upshot of her descent on the camp is, she has been pronounced mentally unbalanced. But what shall I do about the kids? Send them to her mother or mine?

G. I. Joe."

While you've given me your name, you haven't given me your Army Serial Number. Perhaps I'll be able to give you a solution if you answer some of the questions in my letter. Also, don't neglect the number.

BEAUTY

DRAMATIZE YOUR EYES

One beauty madness follows another, and for that let us be thankful. These mild, harmless frenzies increase circulation of the blood streams, offer release from serious matters that occupy our minds. They make us look better, and when we look better we feel better.

If we were to give you a list of whimsies that have come and gone, it would take you too long to read them. Platinum hair was the talk of the town. Leg make-up kept us busy during odd moments in the silly summer time. The upped hair-do can bring on a conversational fight in any group of women. Now, beauty-bedeviled women are getting interested in eye make-up. Well, why not? It's fun to play with. If you're tricky, it will make you glamorous. If you're sloppy in your good looks demonstrations, goodness only knows what it will do to you. So take care. Listen and learn.

Your good-looks reporter watched a make-up specialist play up a pair of sparkling eyes. The demonstration was interesting. Follow his methods and you'll be fascinated by that ever-present friend—the lady in the looking glass.

His subject was a blonde of peaches-and-cream complexion. He used a dark brown mascara and two brushes, one to apply the moistened mascara, the other—a dry one—to separate the lashes when the first application was dry.

Mascara is better than it was some years ago. Now it has a wax-like base that makes it stick. Even so, we suggest that no bawling go on; tears will be muddy to say the least, not those beautiful crystal drops about which the poets rave.

A brown pencil of the same shade was used to darken the eyebrows, and right here Mister Make-upper cautioned against the use of black crayons that are too great contrast to the skin and shout their artifice to all the world. Not that there is any objection to artifice these days: it is only when it proclaims itself too loudly that it is objectionable.

Lid shadow of faint blue was used, laid on fairly heavily along the lashes, growing fainter as it was worked upward with the finger. It stopped at the end of the eye, a full half inch from the far terminal of the eyebrow.

Did the subject look grand? She did.

On a girl with brown hair and hazel eyes, brown mascara and pencil were used and a blue-green shadow applied to deepen the color of the eyes. Because her face was round, the eyebrows were extended with the pencil, given a decided droop at the far ends.

Violet and mauve shadows are good bets for the white-haired lady. Bronze shadows are tops for the woman with a skin of golden cast. Grey shadows are doubtful, and brown must be used stingily.

MY DEAR, JAVEX REMOVES STAINS LIKE MAGIC...

THIS tablecloth was really a sight—but look at it now! There's nothing like Javex for a sparkling, white wash.

. . . And Javex bleaches stained sinks and drainboards in no time at all. It's a wife-saver in the kitchen.

. . . A little Javex, every day or two, keeps the closet bowl spotless. I just couldn't keep house without it.

MISSING HUNTER FOUND

Peterboro, Nov. 22 — (CP) — Arthur W. Nelson of Peterboro, missing on a hunting trip since last Saturday, was found last night after an intensive search in bushland near Apsley, about 30 miles northeast of here.

CONVERTS ENERGY

The Marry Go Round

MIXED GRILL

A wolf seems to want even a girl's kisses "on margin." A lot for a small down payment and a conditional promise.

A wife is always an inspiration—even when she becomes an ex-wife. Many a man has been spurred on to fortune and hard work by the thought of the alimony he had to pay.

The whole art of marital happiness consists in treating the person you love best in the world as considerately and politely as you would a casual acquaintance or even a perfect stranger.

From nine to five a man may be a lawyer, a plumber or a business man, and after that a husband, a lover or a playboy. But once a woman is married, she is a married woman all day long.

Love is such a simple thing; yet it is sometimes as hard to find in this artificial modern life as a plain, uncamouflaged boiled potato on the menu of a fashionable nightclub.

The kisses which a man remembers longest and for which he is most grateful are those that a girl bestows on the Blarney Stone.

Two thoughts cannot occupy the same man's mind at the same time—unless they happen to be a blonde and a brunette, or a couple of redheads.

Sometimes a man's idea of "luck in love" consists in getting out of it gracefully—before he gets too far in it.

In many a model husband, there is somewhere a dead "wolf" whose ghost faintly howls on beautiful moonlight nights.

MARMORA

Airman Praises People of Greece In Letter Home

Marmora, Nov. 22. — News of his recent transfer from Italy to Greece has been received by the parents of LAC. George Rice. George, who enlisted in the R.C.A.F. in May, 1941 attended No. 4 Wireless School at Guelph. He proceeded overseas in February 1942. After two months of training in England he next went to North Africa. Four months ago, he was transferred to Italy and now has written in interesting style of his arrival in Greece.

In part his letter reads: "Don't look two surprised, but I am now. "Somewhere in Greece". It's the best place I've been in since I left England. The cities seem to be modern and very clean. The welcome we received has been and still is tremendous. We'd read about the welcome the boys received at Tunis but this is the first time we've experienced it. The buildings are covered with flags and signs "Welcome our Allies" and such like. There were banners across the streets with floral wreaths on them. The people are very friendly and nearly everyone has been adopted by a family. The number that speak English and have been to Canada or the States is simply amazing. All around they are good linguists many speaking three or four languages. French, Italian, Greek, English, German and others. It is swell to be in a country where people are friendly and happy as you walk along, you hear people say "Canada" and from speaking to several Greeks at different times, I can tell they have had a pretty bad time of it. Canadian wheat and the International Red Cross have made things much easier for them. They all agree that the Jerries are cruel soul-less men who can't think for themselves".

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

With the R.C.A.F. - Overseas, Nov. [illegible] — A spell of good weather in the Adriatic sector of the Italian battle-front has given the R.C.A.F. City of Windsor Spitfire squadron a three-day record of which any outfit could be proud. Here it is:—

First day—Sqdn. Ldr. O. C. Kallio, D.F.C., of Ironwood, Mich., led a flight against a road bridge 10 miles southwest of Ravenna and made it useless; FO. B. J. Hayden of (140 Hepbourne St.) Toronto, led six aircraft on a raid which destroyed the enemy frontline village of Borello; a formation led by Flt. Lt. Dave Goldberg, of (38 King St.), Hamilton, cut a railway line north of Ravenna.

Second day—In a lone operation six Windsor squadron aircraft helped repulse a German counter-attack south of Cesena.

Third day—Squadron aircraft bombed and strafed camouflaged gun posts in the Cesena fields; bombed a building housing German mortars and machine guns; and dropped leaflets, printed in German over the Savio River west of Vervia.

Three attacks on enemy shipping in eight days is the record of FO. W. Earl Umpherson of Lanark, Ont., R.C.A.F. captain of a Coastal Command Halifax patrol bomber.

He surprised a U-boat off the French coast and dropped two anti-submarine bombs "very close" to the enemy craft. Later, with FO. C. A. McLennan of Birtle, Man., as his second pilot and with five other Halifaxes he attacked an enemy flak ship and another merchant vessel in the Bay of Biscay but results were not observed.

The third attack was on three U-boats escorted by four surface vessels in the Gironde Estuary. Despite intense fire he took on the convoy single-handed and dropped bombs so close to one submarine that it probably was seriously damaged. Coastal command described it as "a most courageous attack, worthy of highest praise".

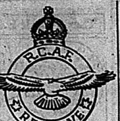
Another R.C.A.F. captain in the squadron—FO. F. T. Rush of Spiritwood, Sask., rolled up three attacks in five weeks.

Canadian, British and Norwegian squadrons are part of coastal command's newly-formed anti-shipping strike wing which, in day and night patrols, is strangling the flow of supplies to Germany's new Norwegian U-boat bases and to German inland forces in Norway.

Commander of the wing is Lord Beaverbrook's son, Group Capt. Max Aitken, D.S.O., D.F.C., who recently returned from service in the Middle East. Aitken was formerly a night fighter ace with 16 German aircraft to his credit.

The squadrons under his command, operating from Scotland are accompanied by Warwick rescue aircraft. An ace pilot is Wing Cmdr. Tony Gadd, D.F.C., of Edinburgh, who has dropped 1,150 torpedoes.

Wing Cmdr. P. G. Powell, D.S.O., D.F.C., of Sorrento, B.C., has been appointed base operations officer at a bomber base of the Canadian group, succeeding Wing. Cmdr. Vaughan Ganderton, D.F.C., Wainwright, Alta., who took over command of the Lion squadron. Powell, aged 27, before the war was navigation officer aboard merchant ships travelling between Canada and the West Indies.



This is a sketch of the attractive badge soon to be worn with civilian dress by all recent and future aircrew graduates of the Royal Canadian Air Force who are being released from active service and transferred to the R.C.A.F. Reserve, subject to recall. This follows the recent announcement by Hon. C. G. Power, Minister for Air, regarding termination of the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan. The buttons will be the approximate size of a ten-cent piece finished in red, white and blue enamel.

Election Notes.

Prime Minister Churchill's speech in the Commons moving the bill to extend Parliament's life another year settled definitely any question of an immediate election and it is believed now that voting will not take place before next Fall at the earliest. Parties are going ahead with their preparations just the same.

The War Today—

Problems of Security Increase As Allies Progress Into Germany

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

The Allied Advance into the Rhineland is encountering new problems of security, due to dangers from Nazi underground units and from spies — threats which Gen. Eisenhower has recognized by issuing an iron-clad rule against his soldiers fraternizing with German civilians, even speaking to them, under penalty of fines.

This menace originally was brought to the attention of the folk back home when Lt.-Gen. Hodges' U.S. 1st Army reached the Aachen sector. The mysterious disappearance of some of his men, apparently victims of the underground, resulted in the issuance of orders against fraternization, and since then the rules have been made more rigid.

Every mile of penetration into Germany by the Allied armies increases the difficulties. Many "civilian" operatives are Nazi soldiers who've discarded their uniforms for mufti and who are equally prepared to play the part of spies or do murder.

Of course that's not the whole story. Apart from the spying and underground operations, it's damaging to the morale of soldiers to fraternise with the civilians of an enemy country. You can't be friendly with folk and be tough with 'em at the same time.

The greatest danger lies in the spying. Spies are the bane of every commander during a crucial offensive like the present. These trained observers swarm the fighting zones in civilian clothing and pour a stream of valuable information back to the German command.

Naturally fraternization between troops and enemy "civilians" provides an admirable setting in which to acquire information.

GEN. McNAUGHTON

They indicated a common concern over Canadian unity. Mr. King's letters showed he did not think the necessity for reinforcements was such as to make necessary a course of action which was not certain of accomplishing its purpose and would divide the country "on the eve of certain victory."

Pledges to Fighting Men.

To that, Col. Ralston replied that "it seemed obvious that some measure of difference or disunity could not be avoided whatever course was taken.

"What weighed so heavily with me in the stand I have taken were our pledges to our fighting men and indirectly to their families.

More than an hour before the House resumed its sittings at 3 p.m. after a recess of three months, crowds began to gather in front of the main entrance of the parliament buildings. Officials said they had not seen queues form in this manner for years.

Senators met briefly in their own chamber and then went to the Commons, overflowing their normal gallery space. The public galleries soon were crowded, while the members' galleries were so full that spectators often had standing room only, an unusual spectacle in a House where the audience usually is small.

When Mr. King rose to read the letters he was applauded by government supporters. The Progressive Conservatives thumped their desks and shouted their approval as Mr. King read excerpts from Col. Ralston's letters showing the latter's support of conscription for overseas.

No Sign of Emotion.

Mr. King spoke without trace of emotion, his voice low. In a gallery opposite him sat Gen. McNaughton looking down on the government benches and listening intently.

The meeting of parliament had been occasioned by the controversy arising from the resignation of Col. Ralston, said Mr. King. But for a public statement made by Col. Ralston on Nov. 12 there might have been reasons of military secrecy which would have made it necessary for the Prime Minister to advise against disclosing certain portions of the correspondence.

But after Col. Ralston's statement he had received the consent of the Governor-General to make public the letters in full.

Col. Ralston returned from a visit to the battlefronts in Europe on Oct. 18 and recommended in light of the information he had gathered that men called for compulsory military service under the National Resources Mobilization Act be made available for overseas. His letter of resignation, dated Nov. 1, said he did not consider it possible that the required reinforcements would be provided in time by a further appeal to volunteer to trained N.R.M.A. personnel to volunteer.

Understood Course.

"Consequently, I wished to be assured that it was government policy that if, after the appeal, the need for reinforcements overseas still existed and volunteers were not available, N. R. M. A. personnel would be sent," Col. Ralston wrote.

"This was the course which I and some other colleagues had understood would follow from your speech in 1942 (when the government was granted authority to send draftees overseas if necessary). It was in effect what I, as Minister, have repeatedly said in the House since then.

"No such assurance was forthcoming. On the contrary, it has developed in the discussions that the government as a whole, certain colleagues excepted, do not consider that your speech committed the government to this course."

Col. Ralston said he considered the differences between himself and the Prime Minister on reinforcing troops "fundamental."

Mr. King replied on Nov. 3 that only on Oct. 19 had Col. Ralston presented a report saying that the army reinforcement position was causing concern. Assurance had been given the cabinet in the first week of August that additional military commitments then being sought would not adversely affect this position.

Surely in Error.

Mr. King wrote that Col. Ralston "surely" was in error when he wrote that their differences on reinforcing troops were fundamental. From the outset the government had been agreed that the reinforcing of the troops was vital. The only difference was in respect to the method or methods of meeting "this fundamental vital necessity."

"I have made it clear that I am prepared to follow the course outlined in my speeches in parliament in 1942, if that course should ever be necessary, but I do not believe that it has become necessary Mr. King wrote.

A general election on the conscription issue at this stage would endanger the war effort and Canadian unity and strength. But such an issue would almost certainly arise if the House were asked to endorse an order-in-council making draftees available for overseas.

On Nov. 6, Col. Ralston wrote that as early as Oct. 13 he had cabled the Prime Minister from Britain indicating his apprehensions on reinforcements. He had reported the need of reinforcements at the earliest possible date and had given information fully.

Explains Differences

"I think, when my recommendation has not been accepted, when there is disagreement between us as to what was the policy to which the government committed itself in 1942, and when there is disagreement as to what is the present policy, that there are fundamental differences," Col. Ralston wrote.

When the authority for the government to send men overseas was discussed in 1942 there was no mention of an election, and Mr. King's suggestion of a general election on the matter now "is the introduction of a new condition not contemplated or discussed at the time government policy was laid down two years ago."

Mr. King sent Col. Ralston two letters on Nov. 10. In one he said that the reference to a general election in his previous letter "was not to its being 'a condition' to the application of conscription under existing legislation, but to a general election being an almost inevitable consequence of any such attempt to impose conscription at this stage of the war."

Oath Binding

In the second letter he noted Col. Ralston's suggestion in a public statement that the Prime Minister should make public the correspondence. Mr. King wrote that the privy councillor's oath of secrecy was binding upon the Prime Minister as on all other councillors.

Mr. King wrote that he believed there should be an exchange of letters "with respect to which no question as to the propriety of publication should arise."

This was the last letter by Mr. King made public, but the tabled correspondence included two other letters from Col. Ralston, both dated Nov. 14.

In one, Col. Ralston said that Mr. King's speeches in 1942 had envisioned the very possibility of conscription for overseas being necessary, and the desired authority was given the government in the light of that possibility.

Praised Ralston's Service.

In the second, Col. Ralston wrote that Mr. King's broadcast address Nov. 8 contained references to matters "treated, debated ar[illegible] in council discussions." Permission to make such matters p[illegible] vested in the Crown and Col. Ralston asked assent to the release of the correspondence be sought.

When he completed reading of the letters, Mr. King said he praised the services Col. Ralston had given Canada.

Mr. Graydon said the issue of overseas reinforcements had been thrown up by public opinion like "lava from a great volcano."

Mr. Graydon moved, seconded by J. G. Diefenbaker (PC—Lake Centre), that the House express the opinion that the full provisions of the National Resources Mobilization Act should be put in effect forthwith and that all trained troops in the home defence army should immediately be dispatched for reinforcements overseas.

Speaker Glen said the motion would require notice and ruled it out of order.

"No justice," said Gordon Fraser (PC—Peterborough West).

In reviewing the House business for tomorrow, Mr. King said it had not been possible for Gen. McNaughton to obtain a seat in the House, which was master of its own procedure and could have Gen. McNaughton appear before it.

Mr. Graydon said his party was opposed to any secret session when Gen. McNaughton was before the House. Mr. Coldwell said the C.C.F. would be prepared to receive information in secret session if this was considered necessary.

The United States General said he had been most favorably impressed by the new Chinese War Minister, Gen. Chen Cheng.

Clear Further Stretches.

Chungking, Nov. 23—(AP)—Driving ahead in a three-pronged attack focussed on Chefang, Chinese troops have cleared further stretches of the Burma Road beyond fallen Mangshih and have captured strongpoints south of the mouth of the Mangshih Valley, the Chinese High Command announced today.

Japanese Choose Limon Bastion For Major Stand

General MacArthur's headquarters, Philippines, Nov. 23 (AP)—American fighter planes and light naval craft tightened their precautions against landing of Japanese reinforcements on Leyte Island today as Gen. MacArthur reported the enemy has apparently chosen the Limon bastion for his major stand in defending the Ormoc corridor.

Fighter pilots sank or heavily damaged four troop-laden freighters, four luggers and 14 barges, a headquarters communique said, as they fended off an apparent Japanese attempt to send much-needed help to the Yamashita line.

No important American gains were reported in the deadlocked battle for the Ormoc corridor but infantrymen, fighting over a waterlogged terrain, drew tighter the noose they have thrown around the Japanese at Limon. They were supported by artillery, which was laying down "steady counter-battery and interdiction fire" on the Japanese rear, the communique said.

American air patrols made new attacks on enemy ground installations and communication routes in the Ormoc corridor. Japanese air activity was dismissed by MacArthur as negligible.

There were indications the Japanese are attempting to sneak reinforcements to Leyte in small units under cover of darkness, rather than risk heavier losses by sending in large convoys.

In a supplemental communique Gen. MacArthur announced that American heavy bombers had damaged two Japanese transports of 6,000 and 1,000 tons at Brunei, Borneo, Sunday night during air strikes throughout the southwest Pacific.

How Sure Are You?

TWO out of three Canadians who have syphilis don't know it.

TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND!

In town and countryside, in every part of Canada, two hundred thousand men and women go about their daily tasks unaware of the danger that threatens them. If it could honestly be said of them "what they don't know won't hurt them" there would be no problem. But that's not so.

For syphilis is deadly . . . and a sneak.

The germs cunningly hide their activity, usually with no outward sign for many years. Suddenly, the body's defences crumble completely . . . disastrously.

But there is a brighter side. Modern science can cure early syphilis. Even for those whose infections have reached the eleventh hour, the clock can be put back many years.

BUT syphilis must be found before it can be treated. For those who may have syphilis there is a simple first step to the road to recovery—a blood test.

This can be done very easily through the family doctor, plant physician or free government clinic.

It is wise to KNOW FOR SURE.

St. Mikes Wins City Football Championship by Blanking Local Collegiate 26 to 0

"Irish" Now Meet Stirling High for Bay of Quinte Conference Title; Win Game in First Half

St. Michael's Academy "Irish" ran rough-shod over a weakened Belleville Collegiate squad to win the city Interscholastic football championship 26 to 0 at the Albert College campus yesterday afternoon. In winning the "Irish" qualified to meet Stirling High School for the senior Bay of Quinte Interscholastic football championship of the C. O. S. S. A. on the same gridiron they won the city title.

After the first half, when they rolled in for fifteen points, Coach Jack Doran's St. Mikes squad turned their big guns for the climactic battle for the district school title here on Friday, as they throroughly outclassed Skipper Les Shiels' "Collegians", especially in the second half when B. C. I. failed to pass the mid-field stripe.

Unerring Passing

It was the unerring passing of Quarterback Dick Fitzpatrick that paved the way for an early Irish lead as Coach Doran's field general fired two successive passes into the clutching hands of Jerry Moher, who made them good. He also carried one over. However, in the five touchdowns scored by St. Mikes they failed to convert for a single point. Gord Donovan was the other Irish player to score major points via the ground route, while Duffy got the fifth as the result of blocked kick.

Frigid-like weather kept the attendance down to less than 500. The "Collegians" ran to the field without the services of their ace kicker, Jack Dodson, who started as a substitute, but had to be injected into the game when halfback Johnny Rollins had two teeth knocked out and had to retire in the first half. On the Collegians' side of the rugby ledger it can be said they used only straight football most of the way, but the Irish line held the better and there-in lies much of the story of victory and defeat, although Fitzpatrick stood out as the principal threat for the Irish in his sterling quarterbacking. Wood, McCarthy, Spafford and Lyall carried strongly for the losers, the latter reeling off several substantial gains in the first half, but they were nowhere in the picture in the last half.

The Scoring

After the kick off B. C. I. drove far into St. Mikes' territory, but were held and forced to kick, with Lucy running the ball back to his own 19 where the Irish started a pay-dirt march. Bob Wilson reeled off nine yards and on an extended run Green helped Lucy lugged to the midfield stripe. From then in it was easy with Fitzpatrick firing to Jerry Moher after an extended right end run had given the Irish a gain. Moher went over standing up to the tune of 5-0.

An exchange of punts gave St. Mikes possession and on a sleeper play Moher was standing on the Collegians' goal line practically alone when Fitzpatrick fired far and true for a second St. Mikes touchdown. Spafford and McCarthy tried a BCI. forward that was called good by the officials owing to interference to the receiver. Lyall cracked for yards, but then the Collegians met a defence and were held. Bob Wilson went to B. C. I.'s. 30, Fitzpatrick reeled off 19 around right end and Donovan crashed over bringing the score to 15-0. Wood, McCarthy and Rollins made B. C. I. yards before the whistle.

Knock on Door

All through the second half the Irish were knocking on the Collegians' door as they kept the play securely in enemy territory. However, it must be said the losers held on tenaciously to keep the score from mounting. Fitzpatrick booted over and St. Mikes picked up their 16th point by way of a rouge. Bob Wilson reeled off 20 and Lucy picked up eight before Fitzpatrick went around the short end for a try that brought the count to 21. Still holding B. C. I. in their own zone the Irish broke through to break up an attempted kick and as the block was executed to the letter the loose ball dribbled behind the Collegians' line where Duffy proved himself quite an opportunist by breaking through to fall on the loose ball for the final count. The St. Mikes line held more securely, but the vast difference was in Fitzpatrick's pitching of forwards and intercepting of the same plays attempted by B. C. I., Dick spoiling no less than four attempts, two of which were of the sensational type.

The line-ups:

St. Michael's Academy — flying wing, J. Moher; halves, R. Wilson, Donovan and Lucy; quarter, Fitzpatrick, snap, Scanlan; insides, G. Wilson, Duffy; middles, McAuley, B. Moher; outsides, Green, Meagher, subs, Peets, Lorimer, Bradden and Brian.

BILL EZINICKI ON 7-DAYS LEAVE

Toronto, Nov. 23—(CP)—Officials at Military District No. 2 Headquarters said Wednesday that Bill Ezinicki, rookie right winger of the Toronto Maple Leafs in the National Hockey League who was accepted last Saturday for active service in the Canadian Army, now is on a seven-day enlistment leave. No information is available as to where he will be posted or to what unit he will be attached, they added.

Ezinicki, 20-year-old Winnipeg native who starred in junior hockey with Oshawa Generals before joining the Leafs this season, was reported last Friday night to have been placed under close arrest for an act committed while he was undergoing medical examination after receiving his callup notice. It was said he tore up his medical papers. He was discharged from the air force for medical reasons earlier this year after four months service and after his discharge was rejected for army service.

Authorities said no charge was laid against Ezinicki in connection with the tearing up of the papers.

INTER-UNIVERSITY PLAY OUT UNTIL THE END OF WAR

Varsity Starts Ball Rolling by Organization of Senior Hockey Team

By The Canadian Press

The first indication of the approaching resumption of intercollegiate sport in Ontario and Quebec is seen in announcement the University of Toronto will have its first senior hockey team this winter since the Intercollegiate Athletic Union called a halt in 1940 to all Inter-University sports activities for the duration.

However, actual return of Inter-University play probably will have to await the end of the war. The revived Varsity hockey team will play only exhibition games and Dr. J. H. Orr of Queen's University at Kingston, secretary of the Intercollegiate Athletic Union, said recently no plans have been made for the resumption of sports activities in the near future.

Since the ban went into effect—it prohibits travel by university teams—sports activity has been confined to competition within the universities themselves and in city leagues.

McGill University at Montreal has been active in City League circles there with teams entered in the Quebec Rugby Football Union, the Montreal National Defence Hockey League and the City's Senior Basketball League.

Queen's won the Kingston City League Football championship this season and will have entries in the City Hockey and Basketball leagues. Much emphasis has been laid on sport competition of almost every type within the university.

The University of Toronto has concentrated on inter-faculty and inter-class football and hockey. Its basketball team will continue playing exhibition games with outside teams coming to Toronto. University of Western Ontario at London had a strong football team this season but played only exhibition games at home.

At McMaster University, Hamilton, there has been much discussion of the possibility of exhibition games in various sport with Western and the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph but Athletic Director A. A. Burridge says there is no chance of anything being done until the Intercollegiate Union gives the go signal.

WATSON DEFENDS EMPIRE TITLE AGAINST KATAN

Dunlop Swarms Ring in Protest; Collins Aids Watson

The British Empire wrestling crown still rests atop "Whipper" Billy Watson's head as in a rematch bout with "Killer" John Katan at the Hume Arena Wednesday night he was given the nod by Referee Bert Maxwell in as wild a finish as has been seen in the local squared ring this season.

With Katan literally hanging on the ropes as he was being punished unmercifully by Watson, Manager Bunny Dunlop could no longer stand to see his pet manhandled and he leaped into the ring to render assistance. This was the signal for Tom Collins, preliminary wrestler from Buffalo, to get in his say, and with four wrestlers and the referee in the ring and all taking a swing at their pet peeves, the bout ended with fans crowding the ringside and Maxwell holding Watson's arm aloft in victory.

Previously both Katan and Watson had each gained a fall in the main bout of the evening and it was do-or-die and a fight to the finish for the third and deciding fall.

Watson Favoured

Watson was definitely in favor with the crowd throughout the bout which was scheduled for a finish regardless of time limit and regaining confidence after being given the works as Katan gained the first fall, came back to even matters. Eighteen minutes after the start of the bout Katan got a leg head lock on the favorite and to the fans' howling dismay literally choked him into submission.

With a series of punishing head locks Watson quickly turned the tide during the second fall and with Katan tearing around the ring in circles trying to evade his agressive opponent the crowd howled their delight. Climbing through the ropes for a respite Katan looked appealingly at his manager for advice but it was to no avail and with arms flailing helplessly he was pinned for the second fall.

Bouncing against the ropes during the final fall the two wrestlers almost wrecked the ring with mat boards springing loose to create a decided hump in the floor of the ring. In a whirlwind of action that ultimately set off the fireworks for the finish Referee Maxwell was several times thrown for a loss as the gladiators tossed him aside to get at their opponent and the bout over saw the referee with blood streaming down his face and with clothes torn.

With clouds of sand being heaved in the general direction of the ring by over-enthusiastic fans and with hundreds crowding the ringside, Maxwell struggled through a maze of wrestlers to raise Watson's arm aloft signalling the finish of the bout.

Exciting as the main bout proved to be the semi-final also was productive of some good wrestling with Al Smith, a former football ruffian from Brooklyn, and Tom Collins of Buffalo wrestling to a 30-minute draw. Smith quickly demonstrated his rough house tactics and Referee Fox spent most of his time warning the over-aggressive wrestler.

In the first bout of the evening Al "Bunny" Dunlop proved too good for Jimmy Burke of Toronto and pinned his shoulders in sixteen minutes.

YOUNG CREWMAN MISSING

Port Dalhousie, Nov. 22 —(CP)—Hervey Verville of Montreal, 17-year-old crew member of the Lloyd tanker Joan Virginia, has been missing since Saturday and it is not known whether he drowned in the harbor here or returned to Montreal.

The youth was last seen Saturday when crew members of the tanker, docked here, went ashore.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

Toronto, Nov. 23 — (CP)—Canadian football has taken a good toehold in the Maritimes — as the result of the missionary work of the Navy in Halifax — and now there are indications more interest is being shown in the game on the west coast . . . Ken (Vancouver Province) McConnell says the Canadian game would win overwhelming support in British Columbia if it was given a decent chance. The big stumbling block now is the ban against Canadian football in the high schools, which can't play it until after New Year's, since English rugby is the prescribed autumn game . . . As a result, the youngsters don't get a chance to acquire a good grounding in the sport, and the coast has never been able to produce a contender for the Grey Cup and Dominion honors . . . Now, Ken reports, high school youths are seeking outside coaching and playing the game for themselves. All they need is some encouragement and Canadian football would go over big in Vancouver and other coast cities . . .

Reminiscence:

Mike Rodden of the Kingston Whig Standard snorts vehemently when he hears anyone exclaiming about 55-and 65-yard kicks by modern football players. "Pep" Leadley of Queen's University thought nothing of booting the ball 70 yards or more, Mike recalls, while Beano Wright, Huck Welch and Bert Gibb of the Hamilton Tigers of the late 20's could outdistance Leadley.

There was a punter in Montreal by the name of Jacques who could hoist the pigskin 70 and 80 yards, and Mike recalls how Harry Batstone of Toronto Argos in one game at Montreal in 1920 ran the ball out from deep behind his own goal line 13 times before the Torontonians could buck their way against those hefty boots of the Montrealer.

That, of course, was before the smaller ball was introduced along with the forward pass. It didn't have the carrying power of the old rugby ball that floated on the breeze like a barrage balloon.

Here and There:

Hockey might make a return to Moncton, N.B., if the Department of National Defence returns the stadium to civilian use, as has been rumored. The city has no other closed rink, and the boys have been struggling along on open-air ice sheets . . . Tommy Moore of the Hamilton Spectator credits lady luck (not the one in the green cape) with giving Hamilton the O.R.F.U. title this year. The only thing the Wildcats had was defensive power, he admits . . . The Frood Open Pit senior hockey team, last year eastern Canada finalists, are getting ready for another title attempt under coach Frankie Graham. A flock of rookies round out the nucleus of veterans . . .

Around the Town.

It was a great night for the City Ladies' Softball League at the Trianon last night when the repeating champion Reliance lassies were feted, given awards and honors and generally accepting the glad hand....However, the big moment for girls' softball in Belleville came when $650 was given to war charities, of which $600 was given to the Red Cross....There is no sporting organization in Belleville, yes and in some larger centres, who can boast of giving over $1,500 to war charities in three years, as can the Barnett-Schrieder led loop. Take a bow girls, after all the boys overseas can read....Now it's St. Mike's versus Stirling high in the Bay of Quinte senior rugby football final at Albert campus on Friday afternoon....Coach Jack Doran's Irish won the city football title beating B.C.I. 26 to 0 yesterday and that just about indicates the score, as a weakened B.C.I. squad couldn't advance the oval to the mid-field stripe in the second half....The difference was quarterback Dick Fitzpatrick, who was the big noise of the day for the Irish....When Dick wasn't pitching strikes for forward passes he was intercepting those attempted by the Collegians, two being of the sensational type ....Just to show the boys were playing for keeps, Johnnie Rollins, B.C.I. halfback, had two teeth knocked out.

Irish Records Toppled.

Army's record-breaking score of 59 to 0 against Notre Dame the other weekend becomes even more impressive when one looks at the all-time Irish marks.

This defeat was only the fifth time in 40 seasons that an opponent has scored 30 or more points against Notre Dame, and one of these was Navy's 32 to 13 achievement of November 4.

Only twice before—and that dates back to 1887—has the opposition broken 50. Oddly enough, it was Wisconsin, 54 to 0, in 1900, and the Badgers again, 58 to 0 in 1904.

Until last Saturday, Notre Dame had scored in 30 successive games, Army being the last to blank them—during a scoreless tie in 1941.

It was the most decisive Army-Notre Dame result in 31 meetings, Army's previous high being a 27 to 0 triumph in 1925, while the Irish's most one-sided victory was 28 to 0 in 1921.

Remember When.

Willie Hoppe's 16-year reign as the world's 18.2 balkline billiard champion came to an end 23 years ago today when Jake Schaefer, Jr., of Chicago, beat him 500 to 346. Hoppe regained his crown in 1922 and held it until Schaefer again won it in 1925. Schaefer lost the crown again in 1926 to Eric Hagenlacher, but proved himself master by regaining the title again in 1929.

The highest run made in a championship 18.2 balkline game was in Dec. 1925 when Schaefer ran 432 points in one inning while beating Hoppe. As for Hoppe's outstanding billiard feature play it came at Pasadena, Cal., when playing against Schaefer also. Hoppe ran 250 points at 18.2 balkine in the space of one foot square in intersecting 18-inch line at the head of the table. Hoppe once made 53 consecutive three cushion caroms in a championship game

More Bad Luck.

Mike Dorando, the Italian who lost the 1908 Olympic marathon to John J. Hayes of the U.S.A. in a dramatic finish was recently discovered living in a small town in Wales by Joe Binks, London sports writer. Dorando had just been bombed out of his place of business.

Apparently his luck isn't getting any better. In the 1908 Olympic games in London, Johnny Hayes, the American runner, was the winner.

But the drama of the race was written around Dorando. It was he who was first into the stadium but he collapsed when only a few yards from the finish—just a few yards from the world's marathon championship.

Spectators who watched him sink to the ground groaned in dismay, because the little Italian had made a brave show. So they picked him up and carried him across the finish. But that was against the rules. Hayes came in under his own power some time later and was declared the winner.

LESSON NO. 539

By SAM GORDON

The Kibitzer

Responding to your partner's bid, what tells you how to do it? Just listen to his opening and fit your answers to it. Replies to each are very few. A few short lines could show them. I'll list them all below for you, I hope you learn to know them.

My frequent explanations of responding bids were often boring to you, no doubt. But I hope they accomplished some purpose; at least giving you the general idea.

Reduce all my words about responding bids to their least common denominator and what have you? A few simple rules that are easy to remember and apply. Adapt them to each suit opening.

In answer to a one bid, pass with less than three tricks; follow T-A-N (takeout, assist, no-trump) with more than two tricks; one-jump if you have enough help for game inclusive of two sure tricks.

In answer to a two-bid, keep bidding to game whether you have any tricks or not; bid two no-trump with no sure trick; follow T-A-N if you have a sure trick.

In answer to a three bid, pass with no trick; raise to four in that suit if you have one trick or more; bid anything else if you have two sure tricks.

In answer to a four bid, pass unless you have at least three aces and a king; with three aces and a king, or better, bid four no-trump to invite slam information.

Give yourself a tryout with this hand:

♠9 6
♥7 6 4 2
♣Q 7 5

If partner opens with one heart, pass with less than three tricks. If partner opens with two hearts, bid four hearts without two sure tricks. If partner opens with four hearts, pass with less than three aces and a king.

Rules learned well ring the bell.

CANADIENS MEET WINGS AND LEAFS TAKE ON BRUINS

Teams Are Tied for Top Spot With Busy Weekend Ahead

It took Dick Irvin's Stanley Cup champions, Montreal Canadiens, three weeks to get into first place tie in the National Hockey League, but just how long they will be able to stand the pace is problematical.

Currently, they are in top spot with Toronto Maple Leafs, early-season leaders and tonight play their first game since acquiring the position last Tuesday, when they meet the third-place Detroit Red Wings at the border city. To round out their week's schedule they meet the Leafs at Toronto Saturday and again at home on Sunday.

Toronto, on the other hand, clash with Art Ross' faltering Boston Bruins at Boston tonight and, while they will be without the services of their ace left winger, Dave (Sweeney) Schriner, they are favorites to down the once-powerful Boston club.

In another mid-week game tonight, New York Rangers travel to Chicago for a game with the tail-end Black Hawks.

Detroit with one of the fastest clubs in the circuit will be shooting for a victory to strengthen their hold on third place.

Toronto will use Nick Metz, who recently was discharged from the Canadian army, in place of Schriner on their front-running line with Gus Bodnar and Lorne Carr. Schriner suffered a severe charley horse last Saturday night when he crashed into his own goal post.

Association Decides To Defer Action

Galt, Ont., Nov. 23 (CP) — The Intercounty Baseball Association decided at a meeting last night to defer action on a recommendation of its executive that it withdraw from the Ontario Baseball Association over the O.B.A. ruling in the case of Hank Biasetti of the London, Ont., team.

The executive recommendation was made Sept. 26 after the O.B.A. ruled that Biasetti was ineligible because he had played Sunday baseball in Detroit this summer. It ordered London to replay a semi-final series with Windsor. The London club ignored the order and played with Welland in an unofficial series for the Ontario baseball title. Later the O.B.A. rescinded its decision.

Tom Long of Kitchener told last night's meeting that the O.B.A. admitted its decision was wrong by rescinding it. He said that before the Windsor club protested over Biasetti, the O.B.A. had notified it that he was eligible. The O.B.A. had put the Hamilton junior team back in competition after it had been eliminated, he added.

The decision of the meeting was to defer action on the withdrawal until after the O.B.A. annual meeting.

Cleveland Barons Swamp Hornets 7-1

By The Canadian Press

Cleveland Barons swamped the Hornets 7-1 at Pittsburgh last night in the only American Hockey League game but the results brought no change in the league standing, although the Hornets' position in first place in the western division was weakened.

It was the third victory for Cleveland in five games with Pittsburgh and the Barons left no doubt about the outcome as they piled up four goals before Howard scored the sole Pittsburgh counter after 15 minutes of play in the second period. Shabaga and Kelly both scored twice for the Barons with Prokop, Sprout and Burlington adding the other tallies.

The league-leading Hornets looked completely lost in the final period when Burlington and Kelly scored goals when Waldriff was in the penalty box

What's Doing in Sport

New interest has been injected into tournament golf in the United States through the return to the fairways of Sam Snead, winner of the 1942 P.G.A. championship at Atlantic City, following his recent discharge from the navy. Snead will clash with Byron Nelson of Toledo and Harold McSpaden in the opening today of the 72-hole open competition at Portland, Ore., in which 74 pros and 49 amateurs all told will go after $15,500 in war bonds.

Clark D. Shaughnessy announced yesterday at Pittsburgh he did not intend to quit as football coach at Pitt in spite of his record of only six victories against 10 defeats in two years. "I thought a great university like Pitt would attract better material," he said.

After four years in the presidency of the Niagara Falls, Stamford and Chippawa Baseball Association, Mike Barto of Niagara Falls retired from office last night and was succeeded by Orm Embleton in the annual elections.

The University of Western Ontario Alumni Association last night at London launched a campaign for further funds with which to construct a $500,000 athletic field house, for which $125,000 has already been subscribed.

Beverly Whitney, Toronto singer, is an outstanding hit in the fine Technicolor feature, "Irish Eyes Are Smiling," which she shares with Monty Woolley, June Haver, Dick Haymes and Anthony Quinn. The film is about the life of Ernest R. Ball, who wrote, "Let the Rest of the World Go By" and other great songs . . . It's a common thing for actresses to refuse to play certain parts because they think their lines are bad. Joan Fontaine walked off the set of "Affairs of Susan" because she didn't like the dialogue for the character she was to portray, Joan of Arc. Then it was revealed that the lines were historically correct.

There is constant agitation in Canada for more frequent showings of British films, with theatre men replying that they do not attract enough people to be profitable. Some do but most don't.

A quiz of British servicemen in the Mediterranean area, conducted by the service newspaper, Crusader, reveals that 95 per cent of British soldiers prefer Hollywood film to those made in the Old Country. And 90 per cent don't want to see war films.

British films, however, will soon meet popular tastes everywhere. Wesley Ruggles, a distinguished American director, has been put in charge of production by a leading British producer and he is hiring talent in Hollywood. The combined work of Britons and Americans is expected to yield films with international appeal.

That period which is hardest to reproduce accurately on the screen is the one between 1900 and 1910. Many people are alive today who remember those times well and any mistake brings a deluge of mail. Major William Halperin of the United States Marine Corps had been assigned to record the life of Jap prisoners. He proceeded to a British camp in New Zealand but the Japs wouldn't cooperate. However, he outfoxed them in everything but personal interviews. Japanese officers wouldn't talk.

He noticed one whose quarters were decorated with pictures of film stars. This officer spoke English and Halperin thawed him out with Hollywood gossip. The officer confessed that his post-war ambition was to be a Hollywood movie star. Halperin said that he might be able to help him realize his dreams by making a screen test right there and sending it to Hollywood. The officer jumped at the chance.

While the "screen test" was being made the Jap answered all questions about excellent treatment, good food, cigarettes and so on—into a hidden microphone!

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was reading his paper and ma was reading hers, saying, Here's still another article on the subject of what to do with Germany after the war. Goodness, William, if we just reason with the German people on the right track, why wont we have just as much effect on them as Hitler had when he reasoned with them on the wrong track? Hitler told them they were the master race and it was their destiny to rule the world with an iron hand at the point of a gun, and they listened to his reasoning and acted accordingly. Well now of course it was the wrong reasoning, but doesn't it prove at least that they'll listen to reason? she said.

That's a very interesting idea, and it ought to work at home as well as abroad, pop said. I'll try a little experiment on Benny. Benny, I think it would be decidedly to your advantage to run around the corner and get yourself an ice cream cone or 2 before you go to bed, he said, and I said, Sure, pop, G, all I need's the money, jimminy.

Now dont answer too hastily, I want to reason this thing out with you, pop said. Ice cream is full of the basic vitamins, and a big cold wallop of it in your stummick just before you retire ought to be the very thing for the good of your health. Have you thought it over carefully? he said, and I said, Sure, gosh I dont need any more reasons, pop, it's a swell idea.

Well now I have another little thought pop said. I'm going to give you the reasons why you will be a brighter and healthier boy if you get up earlier in the morning, even if it necessitates going to bed earlier, he said, and I said, Aw G, pop, I dont want to hear the reasons, that's a heck of an idea.

There, my dear, you see? pop said to ma. The Germans wanted to hear that they are the master race, but who knows if they'll want to hear about going to bed early, or words to that effect? he said.

And he promised me an ice cream cone tomorrow for helping him in the experiment.

CHAPTER 16

Anna sat on the beach in the moonlight waiting her rendezvous, her heart thumping so loudly it almost drowned the pounding of waves on the shore.

Her heart cried out, "He's late! He's late! Has he forgotten? What can have happened?" While her mind, like a cool censor said, "Don't be a fool and give your secret away!"

So Anna tried to still her runaway heart and guess what the wild waves were saying, as many others have tried to guess and no one has ever quite known. But nature always reflects one's moods, and though the sea was swollen and restless, it seemed to Anna to thunder out a magnificent paean of joy.

"I'm young and in love and life is sweet!" was the story the sea told Anna tonight as the vast waters heaved and sagged beneath their eternal magnet, the moon. So she drank in the eerie beauty of summer and moonlit sea and sat there to keep her rendezvous with the nicest young man in the world.

For the hundredth time Anna reviewed the scene at which he had asked her to meet him. She had been working in the garden that morning in usual garden costume—straw hat, blue shirt and overalls, in which she looked like a farmer boy, but which in reality accentuated the fine sturdiness of her beauty. She was so absorbed in her flowers she had neither seen nor heard him until someone said, "Hello!" in that nice, friendly voice which she recognized as Harry Baldwin's.

"Hello!" Anna had answered, squinting against the merciless rays of the sun, surprised to see him, yet not surprised, for he had been in her thoughts at that moment.

"It's hot," he said, "too hot to work. Come with me and take a swim."

"But I can't; you see, I have things to do." If only she were free as he was, not an employee on his mother's estate. Yet he stood there, so friendly, so attractive in that healthy, bronzed fitness of his and with a smile that put her at her ease.

"That's too bad—but how about tonight? I'll meet you on the beach at ten. Please say you'll come."

"Yes, I'd like to."

There was no false coquetry in Anna's manner. He knew her for what she was, the immigrant girl he had admired on the ship, and whom strangely, he had found again as a gardener on his own estate. Life was queer, but he liked her just as she was. Had he not told her she was pretty, different from other girls he knew? This was her claim on his interest. Why try to play a false role?

So here Anna was, waiting for him at the appointed rendezvous and long after ten—why didn't he come? The stage was all set for romance. It was full moon tide, the night was hot and almost as bright as day where the sea like a mighty mirror reflected the broad trail of the moon.

Then Anna saw him coming along the sand, in bathing costume as she was, walking with the easy, athletic grace which she had always admired.

"Sorry I'm late, but there were guests at the house, a party; I thought I should never get off. But I wouldn't have missed this for anything."

Anna was sitting on the sand, bare knees hugged close to her chin, pretending to look nonchalant and not too glad to see him. Harry reached down, took her two hands in his and pulled her to her feet.

"It's a perfect night for a swim; come along." Hand in hand, like two children they waded into the spray.

Like fish in their native element, they cut their way through the surf out to the deeper water, where they turned on their backs to float, easy as though in a cradle, their mattress a hundred feet deep, drifting easily with the tide, which was safe because still coming in.

Anna clasped her hands beneath her head and looked straight up at the moon, with now and then a little kick to shove herself along. Neither of them said a word, because in the first place there was nothing to say, and in the second place it was so perfect one might break the spell.

Then they turned and raced back to shore and emerged dripping, cool and rested on the heat-soaked sands again.

Harry stole a look at his swimming partner. She might have been Undine herself shaking the water from her yellow hair, dripping from top to toe, her bare flesh gleaming in the moonlight above her scant little bathing suit. She had been pretty enough in her garden clothes, in which she looked so much like a boy, but tonight she was simply bewildering—and she looked very much like a girl.

"I have a strange feeling about you," Harry said, "as though you weren't quite real and might vanish into the sea again like a regular water sprite."

"It's lovely there — perhaps I might." Anna made a teasing gesture toward the sea.

"But I shan't let you." Harry Baldwin caught her hand.

"How can you prevent it?"

"Like this." Harry put his arms around her and pulled her down beside him. Then, though she never intended to, Anna found her head on his shoulder.

Anna sat with her head on Harry Baldwin's shoulder and knew she ought to take it away but hadn't the courage to do it, it was so very comfortable there.

"Comfy?" asked Harry.

Anna nodded, whereupon the arm round her waist drew her up closer, which made it all the harder to pull away and sit up straight.

"I'm foolish and courting heartbreaks," Anna argued with herself. "I'm a diversion to him and nothing else; enjoyed today forgotten tomorrow."

But it was summer and moonlight and the sea at their feet sang of young love and romance and the place seemed made for lovers' meeting and both of them were young. Hence the arguing Anna did with her mind carried little weight with her heart, and when Harry tilted her chin and kissed her—very nicely—full on the mouth, the arguments all went glimmering like flies in the night.

Anna, instead of slapping his face, as she had no doubt she should have done, put her own little hand on his nice brown hair and kissed him—very nicely — in return. After that there were no arguments, even with her mind. She just snuggled up closely in his arms and let the moonlit hours romp by.

Anna thought of the other young men she had kissed. There had not been many at that, for Anna was chary of her kisses, making them the more to be prized. Given too freely, they have no value, to her who gives or to him who takes, and it was a select collection of scalps that hung at Anna's belt. But now that Harry had kissed her, it seemed she never had been kissed before. His kiss was the first and the last and the best, all mingled together in one. Just to prove that she was sincere, she leaned over and kissed him again—with such a delightful little gesture that he said:

"You're a funny little thing!"

"I believe you've told me that before," Anna said laughing happily.

"But you really are, you know—a funny little darling."

"Why?"

"Well, of course if you must have a reason—you're so awfully sweet and kissable, yet so awfully spunky, too. You ran away from me on the ship, and when I tossed you that note giving you my name and address and begging you to look me up, you utterly ignored it. But for the strangest circumstances, we never would have met again. And I don't believe you would have cared." Harry kissed her accusingly.

"Oh, wouldn't I?" asked Anna. It was on the tip of her tongue to tell him the truth of the story, how she had thought and dreamed of him and how she had longed to find him. Should she tell him of that bright November day when she had ridden on the top of the bus to his palatial Fifth Avenue home to say, "Here I am; you promised to help me; I need it." Should she tell him that? And how instead of making herself known she had shrunk speechless into the corner, embarrassed by the contrast between her shabbiness and his luxury?

Lydia E. Pinkham's VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Couldn't Get a Good Night's Sleep Because of Weak Kidneys

Also Suffered with Stomach Pains, Gastritis, Acidity, Dizzy Spells and Headaches. "Feels Fine Now."

MR. WILLIAM SHEARER

All around us are grateful men and women who have taken Syntona and found it to be just what they needed to put new energy in their rundown systems and to relieve common ailments of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. Syntona produces these results by cleansing the system of excess acids and poisonous waste matter and by promoting proper assimilation of food to build strong, healthy nerves and sound bodies. The following report of Mr. William Shearer, 448 Victoria Street, London, Ont., is a typical example:

"For years I hardly knew what it was to get a good night's sleep, because I had to rise so often to relieve my kidneys and I had become very nervous and rundown. My stomach, too, was in a disordered condition and I suffered after every meal with awful pains, gas and heartburn. Gas would form and crowd into my chest so badly I could hardly draw a full breath, and there always seemed to be a lump in my throat. I was subject to dizzy spells and attacks of neuralgia in my head that would last for days.

"I had taken so many so-called cures without any real benefits that I had become discouraged and I may never have tried Syntona had it not been that my wife got me three bottles and got me started taking it. Well, that was the finest present I ever got, for before I had finished the first bottle I was feeling better. Now, after taking a few more bottles, I can sleep the whole night through for the first time in years. I got relief from those awful headaches and dizzy spells and my stomach doesn't trouble me like it used to."

Syntona is sold and recommended in Belleville at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST.

Germans Using Double for Hitler Says London Paper

London, Nov. 23 — (CP) — The London Daily Express said today it had "incontestible proof" that the Nazi leaders have been using a double to impersonate Hitler since the July 20 attempt to kill him.

A difference was noted in measurements of Hitler's ears in prewar photographs and one issued by Berlin a week ago purportedly showing the Fuehrer at his headquarters Sept. 25.

When these photographs were given a photo-microscope test, the Express said, Hitler's right ear in the latest picture measured nearly half an inch larger each way. This proved, the paper said, that the new photo was faked "because the ear stops developing at the age of 21. After that there is practically no change and a man's identity can be established as accurately by measuring his ears as by taking his fingerprints."

B17 Flying Fort Flies 400 Miles After 10 Bail Out

Sioux City, Ia., Nov. 23—(AP)—A B17 Flying Fortress, abandoned by its crew of 10 near Marion, S.D., was the plane that crashed near Isabella, Minn., 70 miles northeast of Duluth, it was announced by the Public Relations officer at the Sioux City Army airfield where the plane was based.

Crewmen reported they were forced to bail out when they were unable to "feather" the propeller of a dead engine which threatened to set the flying boat afire. None was injured.

Directed by its automatic pilot, the plane finally crashed in a wooded area north of Isabella and was spotted by Minnesota forest rangers who reported to the police. The Public Relations officer said he believed the plane flew alone for about 400 miles.

Mosquitos With 6-Pound Cannon Death to U-Boats

By ALLAN NICKLESON

London, Nov. 23 — (CP Cable)—Britain's fleet, twin-engined Mosquito aircraft have been secretly armed with six-pound cannon for attack on German U-boats and enemy shipping, the Air Ministry disclosed tonight.

Canadians were prominent in testing and operational flying of the "winged artillery."

The R.A.F. Coastal Command said startling results had been achieved since the cannon, slung beneath the fuselage, was first used in November, 1943.

Following the first two attacks with this weapon, the German Admiralty were forced to provide an escort of surface ships and fighters to protect their U-boats leaving and on going into harbor," Coastal Command said.

FO. A. L. Bennett of Vancouver, who subsequently was killed, was one of three pilots who first tested the weapon while operating from a secret experimental station in southwest England.

Three days after the first combat, between cannon-packing Mosquitos and enemy trawlers, Bennett scored shell hits on a zig-zagging U-boat returning to its base near Brest. Black and yellow smoke poured from the conning tower.

Among Canadians participating in recent attacks was FO. William Cosman, who, with five other pilots, struck at a surfaced submarine so swiftly that it was unable to put up a defence. Cosman made the first attack and scored two waterline hits.

"After the others had got in their blows, I came back again, getting three shells through the Jerry's conning tower," Cosman reported.

Cosman was with a force of a half-dozen Mosquitos which a few months ago shot up an enemy merchant vessel and a small escort ship within sight of an enemy airdrome near Bergen, Norway. Diving through clouds from 5,000 feet he put cannon shells into the escort vessel and three into the larger ship.

On another attack, four days later, Mosquitos pulverized a small torpedo boat destroyer. Cosman scored 15 hits with his six-pound cannon and the vessel blew up.

Definition Of Word Necessary

Ottawa, Nov. 23 — (CP)—Definition of the word "necessary" occupied a portion of the correspondence tabled in the Commons today with Prime Minister Mackenzie King having the final word — that he still held to his widely-quoted 1942 phrase "Conscription if necessary; not necessarily conscription."

Mr. King spoke the phrase when offering a bill to make home defence troops available for overseas service by order-in-council.

Mr. King said in a Nov. 3 letter that he was prepared to follow the course outlined in his 1942 speeches if that course was ever necessary "but I do not believe that it has become necessary."

Col. Ralston replied Nov. 6: — "There is disagreement between us on the vital point as to the meaning of the word 'necessary.'

"Your view, recently expressed, is that you considered it means 'necessary to win the war.' 'Necessary to defend Canadian soil,' 'necessary to avert some great calamity or catastrophe.'

"I took the word 'necessary' to mean primarily 'necessary to keep our overseas army reinforced.' I always thought that this was the meaning given to the world in council and parliamentary discussions."

Mr. King said Nov. 10: "What was meant by the word 'necessary' as used in my speeches in Parliament in 1942, will I think be wholly clear from the context as it appears in Hansard. I think you are in error in attributing to me any different significance to the word 'necessary' than that which it has in my speeches in Parliament."

Worry Over Britain's Post-War Trade Prospects Reflected in Demands On Govt. to Relax Restrictions

(By JOHN DAUPHINEE)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Nov. 23. (CP)—Anxiety over Britain's prospects in post-war trade is reflected in widespread demands upon the government to relax the stringent wartime restrictions on civilian industries and announce immediately its post-war industrial policy.

While the British Press bombards the man-in-the-street with story after story to indicate that the United States is off to a better start than his own country, businessmen and members of parliament are at work on the administration to "loosen up" now.

Some prominent industrialists contend that without relaxation of wartime controls Britain will face serious unemployment within a year.

Few Signs of Giving In.

So far the government has shown few signs of giving in. While some of its spokesmen have emphasized that controls will be removed as quickly as possible, there have been evidences there will be no great relaxation until Japan is defeated—and certainly very little before Germany falls.

In two London speeches on one day Hugh Dalton, president of the Board of Trade, said war needs necessarily must come first and that it was a "delusion" to think large quantities of materials and labor were available for civilian output.

Prime Minister Churchill at the Lord Mayor's luncheon called for a final spurt to speed the defeat of Germany —"Supreme efforts must be made. . .this is no moment now to slacken".

Food Minister Llewellin said: "I can make no promises about decontrol; when it will start, how long it will take".

Aimed at Campaigners.

These speeches without doubt were aimed at least in part at the campaigners for a quick switch to peacetime production, particularly in export lines.

Not all the appeals to the government call for immediate action. The Trades Union Congress, for instance, called for removal of the various wartime controls on labor only after the war against Germany ends.

But most of the government's critics call for some action at once so industry can make a start toward peacetime work.

The Manchester Chamber of Commerce wants relaxation of the export licence restrictions immediately, claiming its members already have lost big South American orders because the Board of Trade has refused permission to ship.

The government now has in preparation a bill outlining its post-war taxation policy in regard to industry. When that measure is introduced, probably early in the new session, a general debate on industrial and labor controls is likely.

R.C.A.F. Bomber Destroys German Sub in Atlantic

(By ALLAN NICKLESON)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Nov. 23. (CP Cable) —A Wellington bomber of the famed Canadian Demon squadron destroyed a German submarine attempting to reach the North Atlantic shipping lanes while an R.A.F. Liberator with four Canadians among the crew heavily damaged another U-boat 400 miles north of the Arctic circle, it was permitted to be disclosed today.

Announcement of these separate actions followed one yesterday describing two others in which one U-boat was destroyed and another possibly destroyed by coastal command Liberators in which Canadians formed part of the crew. These announcements reflected recent attempts by the Germans to increase submarine activities after a period of comparative inaction.

The Demon crew, captained by FO. Lorne Bateman, D.F.C., of Winnipeg, included Warrant Officer A. E. Peter, Hanover, Ont.

The U-boat gunners opened fire when the bomber was within 500 yards but the Wellington was not hit. Depth charges were released as the plane roared over the submarine at low altitude and straddled the U-boat.

The submarine disappeared and a large oil patch extended for half a mile.

In the other attack, an R.A.F. dawn patrol squadron Liberator piloted by FO. D. A. Willows of Regina, flew through intense flak to blow the U-boat out of the water with depth charges. The submarine disappeared from sight a few seconds later and the bodies of ten gunners, who were killed at their posts, were swept into the icy sea. The bomber escaped undamaged.

OVERSEAS ARMY ASSURED OF REINFORCEMENTS

MIGHTY ARMADA SUPERFORTS BOMBS TOKYO

King Mentions Possibility Of Own Resignation

Air Minister Power Resigns, Other Liberals Cross Floor

By FRANK FLAHERTY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Nov. 24.—(CP)— Rapidly unfolding developments on Parliament Hill today assured the overseas army of trained reinforcements and at the same time placed the life of Prime Minister Mackenzie King's government in jeopardy.

The House of Commons meets today for the third time in its special resumed session in an air of greater crisis than prevailed at any time since the resignation Nov. 1 of Col. J. L. Ralston as Defence Minister threw the overseas conscription issue to the fore-front of Canadian political discussions.

It meets to hear Defence Minister McNaughton answer further questions from members on army reinforcements, perhaps partly in secret session.

Yesterday it heard Mr. King announced the crossing of the gap which from the war's outbreak has prevailed between those who favor conscription for overseas service and those who oppose it. The government crossed over to conscription by passing an order-in-council to authorize the sending of up to 16,000 of the 60,000 effective home defence troops overseas to meet infantry reinforcement requirements.

At once there were developments which led Mr. King in the late minutes of the night session to mention the possibility of his own resignation in two weeks and his government's making way for another after defeat in the Commons.

Adjourn till Monday

These developments included the resignation, announced at Quebec, of Air Minister Power and the crossing of the floor into opposition independency of two other Quebec Liberal members, J. P. Pouliot of Temiscouata and Charles Parent of Quebec West and South.

With resignations of other ministers not ruled out and further floor crossing anticipated the key debate of the session on a motion of confidence in the government was put off until Monday.

Packed galleries and well-filled members' seats were the order all day yesterday as Gen. McNaughton held the spotlight, standing erect at a small table placed near the clerk's table. He spoke by courtesy since he is not a member.

He told a story of an unsuccessful effort to assure the provision of 16,000 extra men, over anticipated numbers, by voluntary means, said conditions had changed since he

British Cross Cosina River

Rome, Nov. 24 —(AP)— British 8th Army troops have crossed the Cosina River in the hills southeast of Faenza and have established five small bridgeheads against strong German resistance along a 26-mile front, Allied headquarters announced today.

German infantry was supported by heavy artillery and mortar concentrations in this critical area for the defence of the Bologna-Rimini highway stronghold, but the British captured a bridge at the river bend and tanks crossed to aid the foot soldiers.

At another point British troops crossed the river, captured the town of Figna and proceeded to expand the bridgehead.

On the left flank Polish troops advanced half a mile north of San Biago and seized Monte Ricco overlooking the Marzeno River.

In the Adriatic coastal sector, positions along the Montone River, between Ravenna and Highway 9, were unchanged.

American troops on the Allied 5th Army front south of Bologna repulsed enemy raids.

CROMWELL WAS WRONG

Washington, Nov. 24 — (AP) — Cromwell was wrong when he uttered his famous admonition—"Keep your powder dry." Bureau of Mines chemists say they have found that a bit of moisture helps gunpowder to ignite.

DEMONSTRATORS TERMED HOTHEADS BY BRIG. E. BLAIS

Officer Commanding Quebec District Says There is No Danger of Disorder

Quebec, Nov. 24 —(CP)— Terming a group of 300 to 700 youths who staged an anti-conscription demonstration here Thursday as "hotheads," Brig. Edmond Blais, Officer Commanding Military District No. 5 (Quebec) said today that "there is no danger of any serious disorder" and that he had assumed responsibility to see that "calm is maintained in Quebec."

Brig. Blais made the statement after releasing the text of a telegram he addressed to Maj.-Gen. A. E. Walford, the army's adjutant general at Ottawa, stating the demonstration had been limited to singing, shouting and the display of signs protesting against overseas conscription.

Brig. Blais' telegram said that "certain trivial damage such as broken windows occurred but by no means so far has any incident occurred beyond municipal authorities' control."

The group said to be made up of a majority of Laval University students pulled down bulletin boards from in front of the Quebec Chronicle Telegram, a Conservative paper favoring conscription.

Prevented From Entering.

The parade of youths ranging from 16 to 22 years marched to the St. John Street army recruiting office but were prevented from forcing entry by a large detachment of the Quebec police force who had picked up their trail from the newspaper office in uppertown.

An attempt to force the entry of the Liberal Reform Club was foiled as an army officer—whose name was not made public by Brig. Blais—told them they were "but a bunch of young fools."

No arrests were reported by police after the demonstrators failed to obtain an interview with Premier Maurice Duplessis at the Union Nationale Renaissance Club on Grande Allee and later at the Chateau Frontenac.

Returning Vets Keenly Interested In Canada's Conscription Crisis

By The Canadian Press

Battle-tried veterans of land, sea or air fighting on many fronts, hundreds of Canadian servicemen have returned to Canada in a mass movement that included also a large group of British "war brides" and their children bound for new homes.

Eager interest in development on Canada's conscription crisis appeared the paramount concern of the arriving fighting men.

Large numbers of the contingent were men who had survived three wounds, thereby qualifying automatically for home leave. Most of these were army personnel who had seen front-line action in France, Sicily or Italy.

Another large section of the arrivals was made up of R.C.A.F. fliers who had completed one or more tours of operation against the enemy and were bound home on leave. Many of them, it was expected, would be discharged under the R.C.A.F.'s new thinning-out policy. Others were due for leave, followed by instructional duties in this country.

Col. Margaret Eaton of Toronto, Officer commanding the Canadian Women's Army Corps, returned from a 2 1/2-months trip overseas during which she inspected C.W.A.C. establishments in the United Kingdom and visited the Canadian girls in khaki working near the lines in Belgium.

Another arrival was Mrs. Clara F. McEachren of Toronto, national chairman of women's war work for the Canadian Red Cross, who had spent six weeks in Britain inspecting the organization's activities and lining up plans for assistance to the newly-liberated countries.

Mrs. McEachren said she had found the Canadian Red Cross was doing a fine job overseas, and declared she had heard many expressions of gratitude from the women of Britain for the help they are receiving from Canada's women.

After four years' service overseas Pte. Jack Stuart of Wallaceburg, Ont., said he craved nothing but peace and quiet. "I'm now the most peaceful man you ever saw," said this wounded veteran of the Sicily and Italy campaign. He was hit by mortar bomb shrapnel while fighting with the Royal Canadian Regiment at Motto Ridge, Italy.

Col. Eaton declared the members of the khaki-skirted corps has proved themselves valuable adjuncts to the advancing Canadian troops.

Col. Eaton said Canada's CWAC's, stationed in Belgium, have been under fire and have stood up well to the other hazards and inconveniences to be found in the wake of war. "As a matter of fact," she said, "they all seem to be enjoying it."

Germans Lash Out Against British

$4,318,592,000 U.K.'S LEND-LEASE AID GIVEN ALLIES

$2,437,062,000 of This Was Received by United States in Year July '43—June '44

By JAMES F. KING
(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

London, Nov. 24 (AP)—Britain has given her Allies lend-lease aid amounting to $4,318,592,000 since the war began, a government report on "mutual aid" announced today.

Chief beneficiary has been the United States, which during the year from July, 1943 to June, 1944 received from Britain alone $2,437,-062,000 worth of goods and services, the report said.

In addition, during that year alone British ships brought to the United Kingdom more than 865,000 uniformed Americans including 320,-300 carried on the Queen Mary and Queen Elizabeth.

Next to the United States, the most aid was given Russia—$1,077,-828,000 worth of goods during the year, including 1,042 tanks.

Aid to Other Countries.

Aid to other countries since the war began included:

China—$36,300,000.
France—Up to June, 1943—$54,-600,000.
Poland (Provisional)—$400,000,000.
Greece—$49,472,000.
Czechoslovakia—$74,516,000.
Portugal—$44,532,000.
Turkey—$82,734,000.

No Agreement With Britain.

Canada has no lend-lease or reverse lend-lease agreement with Great Britain. Economic co-operation between the two countries is based on separate agreements.

Aid given American forces, the report said, included petroleum products worth $235,528,000, aircraft worth $43,068,000, guns and ammunition worth $29,196,000, and tanks and vehicles worth $9,620,000.

Other items listed as having been built especially for the Americans or turned over to them were 133 airfields, barracks, roads, railways, seaport facilities and hospitals with nearly 100,000 beds.

In addition to nearly $32,000,000 worth of food provided United States troops in the United Kingdom, the report said bulk foodstuffs and raw materials amounting to $54,000,000 were shipped to the United States, mainly from British colonies, but paid for by Britain. Included were 40,000 tons of natural rubber, largely from Ceylon.

The building program for airports, barracks and other quarters was estimated to have employed more than 100,000 men.

Tommies Stand Firm Against Wave After Wave of Attacks North of Hoven

By NED NORDNESS
(AP War Correspondent)

With the British 2nd Army, Nov. 24 —(AP)— The Germans, lashing out furiously along Lt.-Gen. Dempsey's entire front in Germany, today are rolling wave upon wave of counter-attacks forward. Already seven divisions of infantry and armor have been thrown into the fight.

The plateau hamlet of Hoven, three miles northeast of Geilenkirchen, which the Tommies succeeded in penetrating yesterday, was retaken by the Germans during the night, but British units are standing firm on high ground overlooking the Wurm valley to the north of this bitterly-contested town.

On the British front north and northeast of Geilenkirchen, Lt.-Gen. Dempsey's troops are taking Field Marshal von Rundstedt's Sunday punch and still edging forward.

Using Best Troops.

The enemy is grimly determined to guard this gateway to the Roer valley and his industrial area beyond. He has thrown in some of his best troops in this battle-scarred rolling country. Three panzer divisions, one panzer grenadier division, two to three infantry divisions and two independent tank battalions are shaking the countryside with the fury of their attack.

The ponderous weight of the enemy's attack has so far been rebuffed by sturdy Tommies and supporting tanks and flame-throwers. With fixed bayonets, under some of the most furious barrages of the war, the British soldiers are holding on and even moving forward.

This is the Battle of Normandy all over again. The countryside is being plowed by ravaging shellfire.

"The Germans are smashing at us hard," a spokesman for Field Marshal Montgomery said today. "His troops are of the best, and he's determined to block our advance to the Roer."

Yard-by-Yard Fighting.

Northeast of Geilenkirchen, the fighting near Wurm and Beeck is a bloody, yard-by-yard business, and farther to the south the Germans have thrown in still more reinforcements in the Linnich sector.

Farther north along Dempsey's front line British troops have cleared out the enemy's last bridgehead before Roermond and steadily are driving him back near Venlo.

Here the British still are trailing a retreating enemy, hindered by mines, mud, cratered roads and tough road blocks. Nevertheless, they have almost reached—and are already plastering with artillery—the Germans' Meuse defences, the last before Germany itself.

Cleaning Out Strasbourg.

French armor cleaned out the whole western part of Strasbourg today and the Germans asserted that a surprise attempt to capture a bridge there across the Rhine had been frustrated.

On the hottest corner of the western front, however, a violent German counter-attack with six or seven divisions, half of them armored drove the British 2nd army back from Hoven on the muddy Cologne plain, three miles northeast of captured Geilenkirchen.

Flame throwers were being used by both sides. The men of Lt.-Gen. Dempsey's army stood firm on the high ground overlooking the Wurm Valley north of the levelled hamlet. Still farther north, British troops absorbed all German counter-attacks and moved forward, yard by bloody yard.

Deepen Wedge.

The U. S. 3rd army beyond Metz captured Oberlimen and deepened its northern wedge into Germany with gains of two to four miles yesterday. The front edged slowly toward the Saar industrial and rail centre of Saarbrucken, 15 miles from forward lines.

British troops in Holland moved within easy field-gun range of the Maas river town of Venlo, 1 1-2 miles away.

Snow, rain and fog slowed the drives in the Vosges mountains and beyond Belfort where American and French units were striving to bag thousands of Germans of the 19th army. London heard an unconfirmed report that Field Marshal Blaskowitz in the southern front had been removed from his 19th army command.

Limon Bastion On Leyte Island Taken by Yanks

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Nov. 24. (AP)—Mud-slugging American infantrymen lunged southward from Limon today after capturing that bastion of the Japanese Yamashita line in the climax to the longest and bitterest fighting of the entire Leyte Island campaign.

The Japanese 1st Division has been practically destroyed, Gen. MacArthur said in announcing that the U.S. 32nd had smashed into and through Limon yesterday.

Gen. MacArthur said the victory at Limon may result in the rolling up of the entire Yamashita Line upon which the enemy depends in his fight to hold Leyte Island.

The communique said the Americans had advanced 1,000 yards south of Limon and had reached the nearby Leyte River breaking the last Japanese resistance in the battle for the mountainous defile leading into the Ormoc corridor. The fight started after the Japanese had landed heavy reinforcements at Ormoc October 25.

It was the second Japanese division virtual annihilation of which has been annouced by MacArthur. Earlier he had reported the destruction of the Japanese 16th, which had played a leading part in the defeat of American forces at Bataan.

American planes ranged the air and dealt other damaging blows to the Japanese.

Light naval units maintained vigilance against any enemy effort to land reinforcements or supplies.

DOESN'T WANT FURLOUGH

Tampa, Fla., Nov. 24—(AP)—Pte. Rudolph F. Jaeschke is a rare soldier. He doesn't want a furlough. Coming to Drew Field nearly two years ago, the former Tennessee farmer has never left his post. Three-day passes have been arranged and a furlough thrust upon him by his commanding officer, but he just isn't interested.

New Yugoslavia Govt. to Embrace Six States

London, Nov. 24. (CP) —Proposal by Marshal Tito to establish a new Yugoslavia federal democratic government embracing six States was announced last night by the Free Yugoslavia radio.

The partisan leader was quoted as saying in an interview with a Bulgarian newspaperman that the new government would apply all its powers "to the closest collaboration and reapprochment with its Balkan neighbors", particularly Bulgaria.

Federal units under the new government will be Serbia, Croatia-Slavonia, Macedonia, Bosnia, Herzegovina and Montenegro, the broadcast said.

It was the first official statement disclosing any particulars of the recently-concluded agreement between Tito and Dr. Ivan Subasic, premier of the Yugoslav government in Cairo. Subasic saw Marshal Stalin in Moscow yesterday.

"Each federal unit", Tito said, "will have its national government. At the head of federative democratic Yugoslavia will be one single government. The final internal organization will be carried out—after the liberation of the country—through the constitutional assembly to which the peoples will send their representatives selected in free elections".

RUSSIAN ARMY AGAIN ON MOVE IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Fresh Drive Grinds Out Gains Up to 16 Miles on a 25-Mile Front

London, Nov. 24 (CP)—The Russian 4th Ukrainian army was on the move again today in eastern Czechoslovakia after a four-week fighting lull.

Moscow announced last night the fresh drive by Marshal Ivan Petrov's forces already had ground out gains up to 16 miles on a 25-mile front west of Ungvar, Carpatho-Ukraine city which fell Oct. 27. The thrust, apparently aimed at the big highway and rail hub of Kassa (Kosice) has overrun 30 populated places as well a Csaps (Cop), a railway junction 15 miles south of Ungvar.

Kassa lies about 45 miles north, northwest of the Hungarian communications centre, Miskolc, itself threatened from the south and east by units of Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky's 2nd Ukrainian army sweeping through Hungary.

While Petrov's troops were reaching Sobrance, 10 miles northwest of Ungvar, Malinovsky's army units recaptured Tokaj at the southern end of an approximately 55-mile active front between those two points.

In yesterday's fighting Soviet troops also smashed due west of Ungvar 16 miles to Budkovce. The railway station of Bacska, seven miles west of Csap, also fell.

The Russian communique reported capture of more than 3,000 German and Hungarian prisoners north and northwest of Csap, and 2,500 in two days of battle in Hungary. Moscow said the total taken since Nov. 8 in Hungary now stands at 14,470.

Moscow said Tarcal, three miles west of Tokaj and 35 miles east of Miskolc, was taken during the day.

Loses Appeal Over Murder Conviction

Toronto, Nov. 24 —(CP)— The Ontario Court of Appeal today dismissed the appeal of William Schmidt against his conviction at Fort Frances recently in the "hot stove" murder of Mrs. Violet Jamieson at Flanders, Ont. Schmidt and three other men—Eino Tillonen and George and Anthony Skrypnyk—were sentenced to be hanged Dec. 14.

E. A. Yoerger, counsel for Schmidt, had argued that his client should have had a separate trial because statements made by the other three would prejudice the jury against him.

The quartet was convicted and sentenced to death in Mrs. Jamieson's death from burns received when she was placed on a hot stove to make her reveal where she kept her money.

Von Rundstedt Warns Germans to "Stand Fast" In Aachen Area

London, Nov. 24 — (CU-Reuter) —Fritz Luecke, German war correspondent, reported today the Field Marshal von Rundstedt, commander in the west, had warned troops in the Aachen area to "stand fast" because if they were overcome the way into Germany would be open.

"Never before has a battle been so costly to us," the correspondent added.

563-Ton Swedish Passenger Ship Hours Overdue at Baltic Port

Stockholm, Nov. 24 (AP)—The 563-ton Swedish passenger ship Hansa was hours overdue at the Baltic Island of Gotland today, and Swedish military aircraft reported sighting debris, bodies and a lifeboat with apparent survivors 25 miles from Gotland.

Disappearance of the ship in good weather recalled the recent German proclamation that shipping in the Baltic and the gulf of Bothnia was liable to be sunk without warning.

The Swedish newspaper Aftontidningen speculated that the ship, carrying more than a score of passengers and 27 crew members, was sunk "either by a mine or a torpedo." Reports in Stockholm said a number of those aboard were Swedish soldiers on leave. The route was outside the area proscribed in the German proclamation.

First Land-Based Planes to Attack Japan's Capital

Airmen Briefed to Avoid Palace, Shrines and Temples

Saipan, Nov. 24—(AP)—A mighty armada of B-29 Superfortresses blasted Tokyo today with hundreds of tons of bombs, opening what Gen. H. H. Arnold said was "an attack which will be carried on relentlessly from the air until the day of land-sea invasion" of Japan's home islands.

An undisclosed number of Superforts roared from newly-completed airbases here at dawn for the 3,000-mile flight which marked the initial attack on Japan's capital by land-based planes and its first bombing since April 18, 1942.

Brig.-Gen. Emmett (Rosie) O'Donnell, 38-year-old former West Point football coach, led the historic daylight assault, believed to be the largest attack yet made on Japan's homeland.

The aerial task force was from the recently-established 21st Bomber Command of the 20th Army Air Force, operating from the Marianas.

The first use of these bases south and east of Tokyo creates a two-way aerial squeeze against Japan's vital industries, with other B-29s from China to the westward.

First official announcement of today's raid merely said a "sizeable task force" of Superforts "attacked industrial targets in Tokyo." Another communique was promised when further details were available.

(Tokyo, acknowledging the assault four hours after its announcement in Washington, said 70 Superforts hit the southern and northern outskirts of the capital early this afternoon, Japanese time. The broadcast, heard by the Federal Communications Commission, claimed the B-29s "failed to attain any tangible results" but "residential sections, including one hospital, were slightly damaged." It said three were shot down. There was no Allied confirmation.)

Tokyo's great sprawling industrial area is ringed by airfields and anti-aircraft defences, recent lone B-29 reconnaissance flights showed. Shipping and ship-building yards are located in nearby Yokohama.

The airmen were briefed to avoid the Imperial Palace, in the capital's heart, and shrines and temples.

They departed from here well aware the raid would not be a surprise to the Japanese, long forewarned by reconnaissance flights and practice B-29 bombing missions against Truk and the Bonin islands. The flight bore little resemblance to the first thrust of 16 medium bombers, launched from a carrier, which hit Tokyo in 1942 under Lt.-Col. (now Lt.-Gen.) James Doolittle.

Its importance was underlined by Gen. Arnold's personal report to President Roosevelt.

"This operation," he said, "is in no sense a hit-and-run raid. It is a calculated extention of our air power . . . No part of the Japanese empire is now out of our range, no war factory too remote to feel our bombs. The battle for Japan has been joined."

Superforts Carry 10 Tons Bombs

Washington, Nov. 24 —(AP)— A Superfortress can carry at least 10 tons of bombs.

The United States Army Air Forces revealed this today in announcing that a B-29 would be on exhibition this weekend.

With the plane will be shown supplies and equipment including a "bomb load showing the largest load carried so far by a B-29, forty 500 pound bombs," the announcement said.

Telephone Strike Comes to End

Washington, Nov. 24 —(AP)—The United States sighed with relief into its telephones today, spared of a threatened widespread strike that could have tied up its communications in wartime.

Telephone operators who had quit their jobs in 29 Ohio cities and in Washington and Detroit went back to their switchboards. Similar walkouts which had shown signs of developing in New York and elsewhere promptly faded.

It will be up to the War Labor Board now to adjust differences between the strikers, their employers and their expressed targets—operators brought in from outside and given living expense bonuses not received by residents.

Until late yesterday leaders of the Union, the National Telephone Workers Federation (independent), had rebuffed the W. L. B. then, in the face of prospects for government operation of the telephone companies, they called the whole thing off.

Backing the W. L. B. also were such weapons as power to take away union security privileges.

Mayor Conboy Calls Statement 'Falsehood'

Toronto, Nov. 24. (CP) — Mayor Fred Conboy last night described as a "slanderous falsehood" a reported statement of a former civic employee before Board of Control Wednesday.

R. G. Pell, the employee, is reported to have told the mayor: "You ought to be in jail, not sitting there. There can't be any gasoline shortage when the Streets Commissioner sends two husky men like myself and a five-ton truck to deliver two brass taps to your house".

Dr. Conboy said that "at no time have I received taps from any one. Any fixing of taps in my home is done by a recognized plumber".

Street Cleaning Commissioner Harold Bailey said the "allegations made by Mr. Pell are false, unjust and malicious". He said Mr. Pell was dismissed from the department December 18, 1943, for "misconduct".

For the twenty-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Nester Soderberg, Front Street has been wounded for the second time according to an official cable received by his parents.

Hit some time ago while fighting with his regiment in Belgium, Soderberg was taken to hospital at the base and there recovered from his wounds.

Pronounced fit and ready for further action, he rejoined his regiment two weeks ago. Scarcely had he got used to the fighting in new territory when a German shell exploded and the young soldier was back in hospital again.

He received shrapnel wounds in the left loin and in the cheek. The cablegram inferred that the wounds were not serious.

Public Displayed Keen Interest In Announcement

Coincidental with the release over press cables yesterday afternoon of the news that the Federal Government had passed an order-in-council making 16,000 draftees available for overseas service, radio announcers aired Ottawa dispatches to the same effect.

A few minutes later telephones jangled and buzzed in the news room of this newspaper. Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Public apparently keeping up with the trend of the times wanted confirmation of what appeared to be wild rumors, in some cases.

"Is it true that conscription has been passed by the government?" was the question asked by the majority of the telephonees.

A querulous voice, apparently that of a gentle old lady, wanted to know if all her boys were going overseas.

Another female voice wanted to know: "Does that mean the Argylls will be sent overseas?"

Another business man had been told that all "A" category men had been called for service.

And so it went on. People from all walks of life showed exceptional interest in the news and could not wait for the press account for confirmation of what they heard or had been told.

A couple of old "sweats" summed the situation up with the terse remark, "It's damn near time. Let's go have a beer on it."

Capacity Crowd Hears Adj. Ross At S.A. Citadel

Adjutant Ross, former Regina policeman, who is conducting a twelve-day evangelical campaign at the Salvation Army Citadel here, spoke to a capacity congregation on Thursday night. Adjutant Ross began his series of sermons on Wednesday.

Taking as his text the 28th chapter of Matthew, the sixth verse, "Come see the place where the Lord lay," the speaker went on to say that many of the things the Lord used were borrowed. The loaves and fishes with which He fed the five thousand were borrowed. The boat He used to preach to the people was borrowed. The colt He used to ride into Jerusalem was borrowed. The upper room where He held the Last Supper was borrowed. The cross He was crucified on was borrowed from Barabbas, and the tomb He was buried in was borrowed.

Stating that one day he stood near a seaport and watched a convoy come into harbor with the destroyers and torpedo boats forming a line of protection for the incoming ships as they opened the submarine nets to allow the convoy to pass through. But, just outside the harbor, within sight of the port, an enemy submarine had been able to get in a parting shot and sink a tanker. The Adjutant went on to say that thousands had never heard the Gospel, but it would be very hard for those who had, to have almost made the harbor and then be lost.

In many Canadian cities, packed Citadels have been unable to hold the crowds anxious to hear the Adjutant's message.

Ward of C.A.S. Presents Bond To Organization

Proof of the splendid work being done by the local branch of the Children's Aid Society was forcibly exemplified at the monthly meeting of the society this week when Inspector T. D. Ruston read a letter from a former ward of the C. A. S. in which was enclosed a $50. Victory Bond, which the young lady had purchased from her earnings and presented to the society in appreciation of kindnesses received and the work of the society in placing the young lady when she was a child.

In the letter that contained the bond the young lady, who is now in the C. W. A. C. following supervision of the society when she was a child, the lady praised the work of the Belleville branch of the Children's Aid Society and expressed a desire that the bond be ultimately spent to help some other unfortunate child obtain an education. "It is indeed, gratifying to receive such praise from one of our previous wards and to know the work of the society is appreciated by those who desire to better themselves," commented President H. B. Fetterly.

The board voted to send Christmas parcels to the soldiers overseas whose children are now wards of the society and also to send suitable presents to those fathers serving in Canada.

Very Busy Month

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. Mrs. S. P. Hagerman read the clothing committee report, showing that this committee had had a very busy month, which can be fully appreciated when you note the Society had 305 children under its care and supervision. Seven new cases were reported and four cases that had been closed were reopened. Six cases were closed. The Society, he stated, had 110 active cases, 10 cases had to be dealt with through the Court, 121 children were placed in Foster homes (boarding), 44 children in adoption probation homes, 100 children in free homes, 4 children in mental institutions. 161 children were visited by the Workers during the month, 112 office interviews in respect to children and family difficulties. Seven children were examined by the Mental Health Clinic, 9 dentist clinic and 26 medical health clinic.

Superintendent T. D. Ruston related several interesting cases that had come to the Society's attention and what had been done in each case. Superintendent also reported they had 140 Unmarried Parent's cases, while the treasurer's report showed a monthly expenditure of $474.87.

FOLLWELL AND TICE IN MAYORALTY RACE

Very Small Crowd At Nomination Meeting Today

In as quiet a nomination as has been seen in Belleville in some years and one which was attended by only 36 interested rate-payers, a total of nine public-minded men were nominated to run for the position of mayor as the annual nominations for the mayoralty office, for public utility commission, council and school board were held at the city hall this morning.

Forty-one nominations were made for the 14 aldermanic seats.

For the Board of Education eleven nominations were received.

There are five nominations for the police commissionership.

Nominated to stand election for the position of mayor were Mayor Harry Rollins; Alderman Frank Follwell; Ex-Mayor Glencoe Thompson; Ex-Mayor George Tice; Alderman Harry J. Clarke; Ex-Mayor W. C. Mikel, and Aldermen H. J. Allin, Harold J. Armstrong and E. Ormonde Butler.

Only Two Announce Intentions.

With the exception of two, however, all nominees present at the meeting withdrew, leaving the field for mayoralty to Alderman Frank Follwell and Ex-Mayor George Tice. Alderman Allin and Ex-Mayor G. Thompson were not present to express their intentions. Aspirants for office have until nine o'clock Saturday evening to qualify. Nominations for Hydro commissioner, council and school trustees were held during the noon hour following the speaking of mayoralty candidates.

Annually named as chairman for the meeting at which nominees in the field for the office of mayor have to present their views before tax-payers, Mr. W. A. Woodley expressed his regret at the apparent non-interest of local tax-payers in nominations. "Years ago," he said, "this city hall would be jammed to the doors at such a meeting." Commending Mayor Rollins for the manner in which the city business had been conducted during the past year, Mr. Woodley pointed out the men elected would be the ones to run the city for the following year. He favored first the election of the council and then the council members choosing a mayor from their body.

Stands by Statement.

As first of the mayoralty nominees to speak, Mayor Harry Rollins indicated his decision to stand by a previous statement that he would not contest for the office of mayor for a third term. He had made the statement he said, and he meant to stand by it. He intimated, however, that had he been offered an acclamation he would have accepted.

In recounting his two years as mayor of the city Mayor Rollins emphasized that the chief magistrate of any municipality was always called upon to take the brunt of any mistakes made by the council, despite the fact he may not have voted for the measure.

He complimented the council of the past year in their judgment of important matters, indicating all had shown ability and had offered splendid support.

Tribute to Former Mayors.

Paying tribute to former mayors of this city Mayor Rollins referred to one time city tax rate of 53 mills, which, he claimed, had been put there by "wise spending," as was indicated by the fine system of schools in Belleville which were "now paying dividends." Of recent years the city had adopted a "pay as you go" system and with the council making an honest effort to stay within their budget a surplus for this year was indicated.

The mayor told how the Municipal Board had granted the city permission to use surplus in the sinking fund to offset permanent pavement repairs. As result of this program Belleville now had a fine system of street roadways, claimed Mr. Rollins, and a system for which the city had been many time complimented.

The speaker predicted a great future for Belleville, and outlined a program which he would like to see carried out within the next 25 years. In closing he reaffirmed his statement of not contesting the mayoralty and wished other aspirants success.

Alderman Follwell expressed his thanks to Mayor Rollins for the tribute paid to the council members and briefly went over his four years as an alderman in the city, three years of which had been served as chairman of Printing and Stationery and one year as chairman of Light. As result of the recent lifting of power restrictions the city had been surveyed and additional lights placed where needed.

Need Aggressive Program

Expressing himself as fully mindful of the honor and responsibility going with the position of mayor, Alderman Follwell set forth a platform calling for an aggressive industrial program which would give gainful employment to the men and women of the armed forces on their discharge from active service.

Though recognizing the need for a public works program in order that the ordinary work of the city may be kept up-to-date, the speaker claimed this only to be a "stop-gap" in the over-all picture of providing gainful employment as a rehabilitation program. "A man out of the army does not want a pick and shovel job," he asserted, "but needs gainful employment through which he can build himself a home and raise a family."

'More Jobs, More Homes, Lower Taxes'

He pointed to the present building boom in the city as a "healthy" sign and one which result in greater assessment. He was in favor of low tax rates but asserted the rate in Belleville could not be further reduced without curtailment of some essential service or by an increase in assessment. His slogan was "More Jobs, More Homes, and Lower Taxes," he said.

Speaking on a parks board program the speaker favored an improved recreational centre for youth and claimed the present agricultural park could be made a year-round proposition for both adults and youth. If city finances could make it possible he urged for a youth centre later. He claimed the water front could be improved and that the river system needed a "complete going over."

13 Years in Council.

Although stating definitely that he was in the field for mayor, Ex-Mayor George Tice declared he did not consider nomination the proper time to present his views. "Right now I have not a thing to say, except to thank my nominator and seconder," he said, "I will express my views at nomination meeting a week from tonight."

"I have served 13 years in Belleville council and if elected I will give of my best as I did before, to serve Belleville," he concluded.

Declaring himself not to be in the field for the mayorship, Alderman H. J. Clarke presented a resume of his experience with the special property committee indicating that the present program of disposing of building lots had resulted in an increased assessment of one million dollars.

City's Fine Financial Position.

As chairman of the finance committee Mr. Clarke declined to take any credit for the city's splendid financial position. He stated the city sinking fund debt had been decreased from $988,000 to approximately $100,000 at the present time and that the serial debenture debt was decreasing at about $100,000 per year. In closing he paid tribute to Mayor Rollins for ability shown as chief magistrate of the city.

Alderman Armstrong indicated that he was not a candidate for mayor but commended the special property committee in their current program of selling city lots. This had been a "service to the people," as had been proven by the very few complaints. The splendid financial condition of the city was attributed to the "common sense of this and previous councils."

Alderman Butler declared he was not in the field for mayor this year but intimated that he may offer himself for that position at some future date. He had the interest of the city at heart as was indicated by his six years in council. In closing he expressed himself as being in the field for alderman.

Mr. Mikel's Views.

As a program for future councils to follow, Mr. Mikel pointed out the need of a new union railroad station for Belleville. It could be built of county materials and would prove a decided advertising value to the city and district. The speaker also recommended a suitable monument being erected for the late Sir Mackenzie Bowell, a former Belleville boy, who without the advantages of higher education was elected member of parliament and honored this city by being premier of Canada. It would be a worthy act in honoring a distinguished man and would prove of great tourist and business advantage to Belleville.

Mayor Rollins in replying to previous speakers indicated "no reply was necessary." He expressed his appreciation to previous speakers for their kind words and wished every success for the incoming council.

'Man on Street' On Draftee Issue

"A year ago I tried to join the army. I was turned down as being medically unfit. Now I have been called in the army and have been accepted. I did not "go active" because I was being tossed around from pillar to post by army officials. A lot of this 'zombie' stuff blame lies at Ottawa. Now if we have to go why that is different. That is what a lot of us have been waiting for. We have been fooled around so much that a lot of us draftees have adopted the attitude that if they really want us they can come and get us".

That is what a Canadian Army draftee told a representative of The Ontario Intelligencer while making a survey of the "man on the street" today, regarding the government's decision to send 16,000 draftees overseas.

A consensus revealed that seven out of sixteen persons contacted by the newsman were in favor of "conscription four years ago. It should have been in force at the beginning of the war".

These seven people included a waitress, an executive of a prominent oil firm, a stenographer, a hardware store clerk, a laborer, an account, and a well-known Prince Edward county farmer.

A lawyer was of the opinion that the voluntary system if properly administered by competent men would produce the reinforcements necessary.

A returned soldier of this war embellished his remarks with some real army expletives. It's damn near time," he said. "Anyone who says reinforcements are not needed, should spend a couple of weeks in Belgium. That's all I have to say."

Another farmer did not favor conscription as he saw it. "My two sons are overseas and we are proud of them. But why do their friends hide behind the job in a war plant where they have been getting exemptions. If it is right for one to go, it is equally as right for another."

A department store employee mumbled a laconic "I dunno. Guess it is alright," when asked his opinion of the government's order-in-council.

Salesladies in three department stores, and who were chosen at random, were coincidently of the same opinion. "Why shouldn't the government send them overseas. They are no better than any other soldier."

A wily man-about-town countered the question with a query of his own. "Where are these 16,000 draftees coming from? Tell me from what part of Canada, and I'll give you my answer." That stumped the scribe and he moved on.

There seemed to be some confusion on the part of two or three people, and these were women, when asked their opinions. One lady said her son was in the Argyll Light Infantry and he was too young to go overseas. The others were of the opinion that the draftees were members of the Reserve army.

Report 'Big Three' Sign Agreement On Occupation of Germany

London, Nov. 24 —(CP)— A reliable report today said Russia, Britain and the United States last week signed an agreement on the occupation of Germany. Details of the agreement were not immediately known.

BALANCED BUDGET SEEN IN QUEBEC PROVINCE

Quebec, Nov. 23 —(CP)— Hon. Bona Dussault, Provincial Minister of Municipal Affairs, told delegates at the annual meeting of the Union of Quebec Municipalities here yesterday that "the province and cities will need a well balanced budget with which to face the post-war period."

Wanstead, Essex, England—(CP)— After residents complained, a new German prisoner-of-war camp here was ordered closed.

Press Comment on Order-in-Council

(By The Canadian Press)

Following are excerpts from editorials in today's daily newspapers on the conscription order-in-council:

Toronto Globe and Mail — The Prime Minister has chosen still another compromise .. Mr. King has sought to shift the responsibility for using conscription from the government to the defence minister. There is posed immediately a question of faith in that minister.

London (Ont.) Free Press — The government must face a vote of confidence. It has already lost the support of at least one Quebec minister with the reported resignation of Hon. C. G. Power, Minister of Defence for Air. The possibility of a coalition government suggested in these columns some days ago is by no means past . . . .

But one thing is clear. The voluntary system has failed . . .

Montreal Gazette — If Mr. King ever gets around to bring in overseas conscription it will not come through any frank and responsible measures. It will come like a thief in the night and at such an hour as man knoweth not. But the penalties of these methods will destroy him. The anti-conscriptionists will lose all respect for the man who is deserting them by such stealthy steps, while the conscriptionists will feel no more than that Mr. King was gradually compelled to adopt a policy which he resisted as best he might, to the end.

Ottawa Citizen — Democracy is operating in Canada. The government's decision to take the responsivility of sending trained reinforcements overseas by the National Selective Draft is political democracy in action. It should be a great forward step toward eliminating "conscription" as a political football . . . . There should be no more reckless talk by responsible ministers in Canada about the volunteer being "a better man and better able to fight than the conscript."

Ottawa Journal — It is Layton Ralston, good Canadian, who is the hero of this hour. And that implies something . . . General McNaughton should in all honor walk out of this cabinet or take some other portfolio and Prime Minister King should invite Col. Ralston to return to his post . . .

Montreal le Canada — The armed forces of a country are only an emanation of that country. They are not more important than the country. Our first duty is toward the country, not toward the military force which is only the expression of it. Country first, army second —the latter being only in the service of the other . . . Let's keep away from the China breakers, the Tory bull is in the China closet.

Saint John Telegraph-Journal — After watching events in Ottawa for two days, Canada is forced to conclude that it has taken something like a minor earthquake to put into force a very limited and still conditional application of the people's will as expressed in the conscription plebiscite.

Halifax Chronicle—What it (the government's action) does not do is explain the ground for Mr. King's sudden right-about-face. . . The government's action in invoking overseas conscription would appear to suggest with entire clarity that the basis upon which General McNaughton originally indicated his willingness to assume the portfolio of Minister of National Defence had ceased to exist.

Winnipeg Free Press—The pledges and commitments entered into in 1942 have been honored. . . . There remains today only the loyal acceptance of this decision by the country as a whole. . . .There are many anti-conscriptionists in Canada outside Quebec. . . .but. . . it is from Quebec that the loudest voices are to be heard in denunciation of conscription or any steps leading toward it. That is why it is most important today to address to that province the appeal to a democratic minority to accept with good will the verdict and will of the majority of the people. . . .

Regina Leader-Post — There are those who regard the decision as a major shift in government policy. They are wrong. It is, in fact, a precise fulfillment of the pledge given by the Prime Minister in 1942. . . The decision reached vindicates Col. Ralston on the point on which he resigned, that the voluntary system would not meet the situation. His judgment on that score was correct but the fact that it has been proven correct does not weaken the contention of Gen. McNaughton and the Prime Minister that under the circumstances then prevailing the voluntary system before the compulsory step was taken, should have been given a final chance.

Vancouver News-Herald— As the first breach in the anti-conscriptionist citadel, this is to be welcomed. But it is not good enough. We looked for something better. In changing its policy the government should have gone the whole way. This is no time for half measures .

A Vast Enterprise of War

The British Commonwealth Air Training Plan has accomplished its mission, it has been the guarantee of air superiority and air supremacy in the various theatres of the war. It has been one of the most far-sighted programs ever attempted in war, its conception has been a work of genius. It has done magnificent service in lifting air superiority to a magnificent peak of power. It has been a triumph of co-operation and joint action of the Commonwealth nations.

Now the plan is to be wound up and completed by the end of next March.

Hitler and Germany had started the war with a giant Luftwaffe with which he linked land power and the result was the blitzkrieg, the aim of which was to crush at great speed the states of Europe. With it also went the most unscrupulous plotting that the world has ever known with Nazism and Hitlerism set to destroy the accomplishment of the ages in freedom and democracy.

Yet this great enemy plan has been utterly defeated. Against it was set the scheme of the Empire air training. This British Commonwealth project built up power in the air the like of which the world has not known. Everyone recalls the place Prime Minister Churchill has given to the air achievements in the early days of the war. The inspiration of these events of that time has been woven into the plan.

The plan has had no small part in sending the armadas of the sky over enemy country and dominating lands. It has been an inspiration to the great ally the United States whose air power is now very great. It has caused immeasurable losses to fall upon the war machine that Hitler built up in his Luftwaffe and in his railways, highways, canals and his vast armaments and munitions works.

When the Empire plan ends in March no fewer than 224,296 men of air and ground crews will have been graduated. To this Canada has given the great number of 163,797 men. Its success is seen in the part that the R.A.F., R.C.A.F., and Australia and New Zealand have played upon the world's stage in the air in these momentous years. It has a large surplus of men, the guarantee which means so much.

The undertaking has fulfilled more than the promise. It has been one of the strategic weapons of the war against the aggressors.

Strasbourg

News Thursday that the French were fighting in Strasbourg, the capital of Alsace, France, brought into the light of the present the city which is one of the best known to the outside world. The fact that French troops have entered the city will be a great morale builder.

Strasbourg is a strategic city 250 miles east by south of Paris and about 370 miles southwest of Berlin. By means of canals which unite the Ill with the Rhine, the Marne and the Rhone, it is connected with the Atlantic and Mediterranean. The city has always been strongly fortified. Powerful fortifications according to old standards and the pentagonal citadel were built in 1682-84. Its cathedral presents the styles of architecture of the eleventh to the fifteenth centuries, the main style being Gothic with high towers, imposing facade, with statues and great rose window, painted glass windows and an astronomical clock which is world-famed. It is a city of varied industry, tanning, brewing, machine making, woollen and cotton manufactured goods, cutlery, musical implements, chemicals and gloves.

The ancient Romans, progenitors of the modern Italians, are believed to have founded this city, which early went by the name of Argentoratum. It is claimed that it was erected by the Romans as a defence measure against the Germans. In the sixth century it was given the name of Strassburg and in the tenth century it became subject to the German emperors. It was united to France in 1681 and fell to Germany with Alsace-Lorraine in the German war of aggression of 1870-71. It has been in French hands from 1918 until it was overrun by the Germans in the present war.

Czechoslovak View

The victory to be won over Hitler and Nazism will have to be the result of "the defeat of Hitler and Nazism not only on the battlefield but also in the sphere of politics and moral conceptions—defeat mercilessly and without compromise."

This statement was made in Montreal by Dr. F. Pavlasek, Czechoslovak Minister to Canada, during an address. In his opinion it will take three or four generations, maybe a century, before the world can hope that Germany will be completely purged of all Nazism and become a nation again acceptible in the family of free nations."

So he said that the Czechoslovak people are preparing for that struggle to make their country "a firm island of democracy—to build in Central Europe a moral, intellectual and spiritual wall as a defence against the worship of instinct and brute force, against the passion for conquest and against the cult of moral lawlessness." Democracy is the only form of Czechoslovak national life, he pointed out as he referred to the twenty-century-old struggle of the Czechs for existence, four-fifths of whom were wiped out by the Hapsburgs in the 17th century.

The peace which the world wants is the peace that will come after unconditional surrender of Germany and after her crushing defeat and after such terms as will prevent any further outbreak of Hun savagery against the peace and security of the world, so that there will be assurance and guarantee against German aggression in the future.

Church Attendance

(Hamilton Spectator)

In criticizing the churches the emphasis is wrongly placed. It is not so much the fault of the clergy as of the public that religious observance is so sadly neglected. A book just published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge—Church Worship and the Non-churchgoer, by Gordon W. Ireson, has the right idea. The author shows how he himself at one time thought the solution lay in introducing "human interest" into the services; but came to realize that what was needed was to "modernize" worship, but to restore popular respect and enthusiasm for the "faith of our fathers." To do this, he holds, there must be more systematic instruction for the young in Christian culture. The London Times, reviewing the book, suggests the gathering of small groups of various kinds where, by means of intimate discussion, men and women can be brought to see that the Christian creed has a very direct relation to themselves and the society in which they live.

Animals Miss Children

(From "Britain" Magazine)

The flying bomb evacuation of children from London has had a noticeable effect on the zoo.

Whereas the crowds of children used to collect to stare at the animals, the animals now rush to get a look at the children.

"There are so few around these days," said one of the officials. "The animals miss them very much. Most of all the monkeys. They look completely miserable."

Plywood Buses

(Boston Post)

Recent demonstration of a bus body constructed entirely of plywood, including even the chassis frame parts, made a bus weighing a full ton less than the conventional steel bodied one. But, although this may point the way to saving of weight and metal, bus builders and operators should go slow and remember the old wooden railroad coaches. They were light, but they splintered and collapsed terribly in collision, wreaking a savage toll of passengers.

If all men were to bring their miseries together in one place, most would be glad to take each of his home again rather than take a portion out of the common stock.—Solon.

Necessity is the argument of tyrants; it is the creed of slaves.—William Pitt the Younger.

JUST FOLKS

PHEASANT QUARREL

Two ringed-necked pheasants in the yard
I've watched all summer as they've sparred,
And wondered: It is lack of pluck
That not one blow has either struck?

They dodge and duck; take quick steps back,
And then spring forward to attack,
Assuming many a fighting poise,
Just like antagonistic boys.

Who'll boss the pheasant flock, no doubt,
Is what the quarrel's all about,
But since they parry every blow,
Just how it's settled I don't know.

Thank God, if pheasants must dispute,
They don't make deadly guns to shoot,
And don't, when they are moved to fight,
Destroy themselves with dynamite.

BURNING DIAMONDS

Although diamonds are the hardest and most imperishable of all known substances, they are composed of pure carbon and will burn if heated sufficiently in air.

It is not possible to burn a diamond in an ordinary fire, but it can easily be done with a blow torch.

Diamonds are affected by heat at temperatures ranging from 1400 to 1607 degrees Fahrenheit, depending on the hardness of the diamond. Such temperatures are not reached in an ordinary burning building, but they are sometimes reached in extensive conflagrations. For instance, it is estimated that temperatures as high as 2200 degrees Fahrenheit were reached in the great fire that destroyed San Francisco in 1906.

Dr. George F. Kunze, the eminent gem expert, reported that he had seen thousands of diamonds in a single fire and that some of the most valuable lost from half to three-quarters of their weight, while others were entirely burned up. He said diamonds are not likely to be cracked by heat, but the surface will be gradually eaten away and corroded until it becomes white or gray, and if exposed long enough the diamonds will be completely consumed.

Under a blow torch diamonds are readily converted into graphite. When burned in oxygen gas they give a brilliant light.

A diamond can be shattered with an ordinary hammer by hitting it hard enough at the proper cleavage.

Contrary to the general impression diamonds used for industrial purposes as abrasives do wear out.

The carbon atoms in diamonds are crystalized in a definite form and fixed rigidly in position.

Diamonds are found only in single crystals, never in solid formation.

Although a diamond is crystal clear, when reduced to dust it is as black as other carbon. It is the only gem stone composed of only one element. Other gem stones are composed of two or more elements.

KING MENTIONS

took office three weeks ago and compulsion now was practicable and necessary.

At the same time he said he would be "the most thankful man in this room" if enough draftees—nicknamed Zombies—volunteer for general service so that it will not be necessary to use the authority now vested in him.

It was during a discussion of procedure for today that Mr. King made his references to the possibility of sweeping changes. When a member asked Gen. McNaughton to repeat a statement he had made earlier Mr. King said this was unreasonable and spoke of the strain under which members of the government had been working.

Mr. King Heard.

"When honorable gentlemen speak of not having any confidence in the government I hope they will consider very carefully what alternative government they will put in if I resign this past within the next two weeks", he said

Hon. R. B. Hanson (PC—York-Sunbury) said Mr. King was not indispensable and there was a growing body of opinion which wanted to be rid of both the Prime Minister and the government.

Later Mr. King said he was not sure he would want to proceed today with the main debate since he did not wish to address the House when he was tired but added:

"I might feel very differently in the morning. I may decide it is not necessary to say more than two or three words".

For many members this brought up the prospect of either a resignation or a dissolution of parliament and the calling of a general election. Against the latter possibly there was, however, a repeated assurance from Mr. King that he would do all possible to avoid an election while men are fighting at the front, providing the term of parliament is not extended.

In another reference to the confidence debate Mr. King said: "If the resolution (of confidence) is not carried, of course, the government will immediately make way for those who are responsible for its defeat to form an administration to carry on at once".

Had to Call Order.

The grave view members take of the situation was apparent in serious faces and whispered discussions. Repeatedly the speaker had to call for order, not so much because of interruptions but because of the murmur of conversation as members exchanged thoughts in whispers with their deskmates and the whispers added together blurred out the words of speakers.

"We are facing the greatest crisis since Confederation. This may mean the breaking up of Confederation," said A. W. Neill, veteran Independent member for Comox-Alberni by way of prelude to a question directed to Gen. McNaughton.

At times hot words were exchanged as when Karl Homuth (PC—Waterloo South) said a statement by Gen. McNaughton that soldiers were not shifted from other branches into infantry and put in the battle lines was untrue. He withdrew at the request of the speaker but not before an unidentified member shouted:

"Where were you in the last war?"

"Where the hell were you?" retorted Mr. Homuth.

Over-All Shortage.

Gen. McNaughton said there was no over-all shortage of reinforcements but there was a shortage in the infantry. It had been met in part by remustering men from other branches of the service.

When he took office he hoped to meet further requirements by a new approach to the home defence troops to induce them to go voluntarily.

That this effort wil be carried on in the future and meet with more success was indicated when he said the power to send men overseas by compulsion would be used only to the extent necessary to maintain the army.

Of the 16,000 men required, in addition to men now available for overseas service, 5,000 are to go in December, 5,000 in January and 2,000 in each of the three following months.

This, the General said, would avoid the possible shortage of men for infantry reinforcements which now looms up for the end of January or early in February and again for spring or early summer.

16,000 to be Sent.

Gen. McNaughton said the 16,000 to be sent overseas were in addition to the supplies of General Service personnel it was planned to send in any event. The total increase planned was 16,000, eventually destined for the infantry. He could not say that these men would be entirely draftees as some might be General Service infantry changing from one place to another. But the net increase sought in the pools overseas was 16,000.

On the basis of present estimates this number, plus the other reinforcements already planned, would make the position "reasonably safe."

If the 16,000 were not obtained the estimates would go "into the red—quite deep."

Howard Green (PC—Vancouver South)— asked if it could be said how many of the 16,000 additional men to be sent overseas would be draftees and how many volunteers

"It is not possible to give an answer because of this fact, that the shipping we shall have will be for 16,000," Gen. McNaughton replied.

Make Good Deficiency.

"I'm the first instance those, who volunteer for service will probably be selected and we shall use the powers of those 16,000 of N. R. M. A. (National Resources Mobilization Act) men just to make good a deficiency."

He would use compulsion no more than was necessary to meet the deficiency which otherwise would exist, and he planned to provide the 16,000 additional men required as far as possible by sending General Service peresonnel.

"As long as there are suitable General Service personnel available to meet the requirements, it is our intention to use them," the Minister said.

"We propose to make good whatever deficiencies there are from N. R. M. A."

Mr. Green: "N. R. M. A. men will not be sent overseas if you can possibly avoid it?"

No Intention of Compulsion

Gen. McNaughton: "I have no intention of using compulsion except to meet a deficiency, and having regard to the purpose we have of maintaining the strength of our armies overseas."

Mr. Green said that under the proposed policy he wondered if home defence troops with full combat training would not be put into action, but boys with five or six weeks of training would be.

Gen. McNaughton said he did not think that would be the result.

A gunner remustered as infantry would be given a minimum of six weeks of training. Men must have reached a certain standard before being passed out on remustering, and careful checks were made.

Mr. Green said that if a battalion suffered severe losses and was in a desperate position seeking to hold its part of the front, men insufficiently trained might be sent into action.

Gen. McNaughton said that if battle conditions allowed a battalion reduced to 50 or 100 men would be withdrawn and if this could not be done, it was the duty of every man, regardless of his training, to do the best he could.

Fiery Debate

Mr. Green:—

"Government members are applauding. What does the general think the duty of the men who are in the home defence army fully trained in combat training should be?"

Gen. McNaughton:—

"The duty of the man in the home defence army is that he shall take his honorable obligation of service, and take it up at once, as other Canadians are doing."

Mr. Green: "Under this proposed plan there will be two types of Canadian soldiers, one who fights and one who does not fight."

Gen. McNaughton said he hoped men in the home defence army would come forward to take up their obligations. He was doing all he could to persuade them to do so. He would continue asking them to volunteer for general service.

Must Face Vote.

Early in the session Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, said his party would move for total conscription, which would make all draftees liable to duty in the United Kingdom, European and Mediterranean theatres of war.

Mr. Graydon indicated that the government must face a vote of confidence shorty.

He said his party planned to introduce a motion calling for the formation of a new government led by a man with the confidence of parliament and favoring total conscription.

The House became noisy late in the sitting when G. S. White (PC—Hastings Peterborough) asked Gen. McNaughton to give reasons for a change in his attitude towards compulsory service.

Gen. McNaughton said he already had explained his position several times.

Mr. King said he did not consider the request reasonable as Gen. McNaughton had been up until 5 a.m. preparing a speech for the House and had been on his feet almost all day. All government members had been under great strain. Those who talked by lack of confidence should consider what alternate government they would put in if he resigned.

"John Bracken", Progressive Conservatives cried, referring to their national leader.

Veteran parliamentarians said that scenes in the House yesterday and the general tensity reminded them of crises in 1926 when the fate of the Liberal government of that time sometimes depended on the vote of one member.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

OH, DOCTOR! DOCTOR!

In your article about Galvanic Burns of the tongue recently you said. "These are authorities to which I refer dentists or doctors." Do you mean to imply that dentists are not doctors?...grammitical (sic), but it has a degrading affect on the dental profession....You should have said "dentists or physicians". Are we not correct? (Signed)—Three names, all in the same handwriting.)

Whenever any one calls for, sends for or looks for a doctor there is no question what he means.

Whenever one sees a sign, card or lettering on an office door which reads Dr. John Doe it is reasonable to assume, and John Doe hopes it will be assumed that Doe is qualified by education and training to practice medicine.

Of course in Yankeeland you get badly fooled if you take the title so used without circumspection.

Numerous individuals who write to me call themselves "Doctor" but, as their stationery fails to indicate why, I do not take them at face value. Generally one with a doctoral degree uses it, if anywhere, on his professional cards or stationery.

I have abandoned the effort to persuade dentists to adopt, for trade purposes, another trademark title than Doctor, in order to leave that trademark to practicing physicians exclusively. My dentist friends, if any, will search in vain for any mention of the gratuitous title I tried to foist upon them, in my writings. Incidentaly, I hope dentists who read this will send me their names and address on a stamped envelope, so that I may send them a copy of the expurgated edition of the booklet "Save Your Teeth"—and I hope they will, for the sake of public welfare, tell me just what they find wrong with the teachings in the booklet—I'll be grateful for any criticism or suggestion from a dentist, and of course I'll regard such communications as professional and confidential, unless the dentist expressly consents to publication or quotation.

There may be just a little truth in the saying that an apple a day keeps the doctor away. When I can get it, I believe an apple, washed with soap and water and eaten as dessert, as a chaser for any sweet or refined carbohydrate, or last thing at night, is better for teeth and gums than any toothbrushing or mouthwash, though of course, it will not keep the dentist away, not if you have an intelligent appreciation of the importance of saving your teeth.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Shady Institution

You may call it ridiculous, but the nurse in the doctor's office told us there is a law in (a backward State) that keeps the husband out of the delivery room. (Mrs. J. W.)

Answer—If a woman wants her husband with her, as a normal woman does, any reputable doctor in any hospital, may and should see to it that the husband remains with his wife throughout the delivery—that's where a real man belongs. A woman is a lot safer having her baby at home anyway—provided she has a home fit to have a baby in.

Moth Patch

Girl 21 with large moth patch on face. Kindly send prescription given some time ago in your column for cleaning it up. (Mrs. S. J. D.)

Answer—Send stamped envelope bearing your address and inclose ten cents for booklet "Cosmetic Blemishes." Best course is to have the spot removed by physician with electro-dessication, carbon dioxide pencil, dichloracetic acid or whichever method the physician considers best.

The Silly Habit

Thanks to your fine booklet I am now completely cured of constipation, from which I suffered for forty years—I had always believed one must take something at least. (L.A.)

Answer—Well, what else did the quacks and nostrum mongers of the past hundred years promote that idea for? Any reader who asks for it (no clipping, please) and incloses ten cents and stamped envelope bearing his address, may have the booklet "The Constipation Habit."

Miss Ruby Snar was maid of honor and wore an ensemble of white with veil to match and carried a bouquet of flowers.

Groomsman for the occasion was Mr. Oscar Cole, brother-in-law of the groom.

A reception was held at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. T. Bentley. The rooms were decorated with pink and white streamers.

Out-of-town guests were relatives from Oshawa.

Mr. and Mrs. Waite will take up residence in Belleville.

Your Hairdo and Your Head

Janet Blair wears a most becoming coiffure.

By HELEN FOLLETT

Because other women are sporting the uppity hairdo is no reason why you should do so. You don't have to wear your tresses that way; the law doesn't say so. The elevated pomp is not for all faces, certainly not for the long thin one, as it only makes it look longer and thinner.

You have a head contour, a profile, a throat line and, in the composition of a hairdo, these elements must be taken into consideration. No doubt you have a friend who looked sweet and youthful with her petaled bob but now, with her hair hoisted high, looks 15 years older. It's silly to follow a style that is not becoming.

Becoming Coiffure.

The time has gone by when all women will follow a fashion like sheep. It just isn't being done by ladies of fashion. The well-groomed woman knows herself, selects coiffures and clothes that are becoming and that still belong to the mode. It isn't as if one hasn't a variety of coiffures from which to choose. You can have long hair, short hair, or hair piled on the top of your pate and still be smart.

The high hairdo calls for neatness above everything else. If you can't make your rear locks behave, if they insist upon fringing down on your neck, then do please put your mind on hair growing; don't sport the uplifted effect until the hair is long enough to stay put.

Study Head Contour.

You can't deny that the uppity-do makes you appear older. Unless there are plenty of curls on the forehead, it causes the face to look brittle. The plain, smoothed-back pomp can be worn by certain types but it is a beauty fatality when assumed by others.

A woman with verve and distinction, will see that her coiffure is beautifully molded, that the lines of her head are good when seen from front, sides and back. Careless arrangements just don't belong to this period of fastidious grooming.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Duties At a Silver Wedding

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,—

1.—When I go to call on our friends who are celebrating their Twenty-fifth Wedding anniversary, what would be the proper thing to do and say to them?

2.—What should I write on the card I'm enclosing with my gift to them?

3.—Should I hand the gift directly to them, or leave it when I leave?

4.—How long should my visit last?

Wondering

1.—When you have left your wraps in the room assigned for this, go at once to your hostess and host (don't stop to chat with other friends first!) shake hands with them and give them your congratulations and best wishes for this important occasion. Tell them too how happy you are to be with them on this significant day. Then, if there are other guests waiting to be greeted, sally forth to find friends to talk with, and when you wish, go to the room in which the refreshments are being served. There may not be another opportunity to talk with your hosts; but as you are about to leave go to say your good-bye, thank them for inviting you, and say some gracious comments on what a lovely party it is.

2.—What you write depends on the degree of closeness of your friendship with them. But something on the order of this: "With devotion and blessings to you two dear friends, and with every good wish for your happiness, always".

3.—Give your gift to your hostess as you go to greet her.

4.—Stay as long as you feel inclined to stay. . .if it's a tea or afternoon reception, perhaps between a half hour and an hour.

An Evening Wedding.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

Our daughter is planning to have an evening church wedding (in the evening because of great inconvenience to the majority of guests). The wedding is to be at 8 o'clock in our church, and because of the war and because of the fact that we have two sons in service overseas we don't wish to have an elaborate wedding, but we do want everything right and as nice as possible. All the men in the wedding party except my husband will be in uniform, and my husband is planning to wear a tuxedo. Now for our special problem. If the bride wears a wedding dress with short train and finger-tip veil, what is the proper attire for the bridegroom's mother and me. We prefer to wear street-length dresses, but will wear floor-length dresses if necessary. What is your candid opinion as to what the mothers should wear?

M.A.

Since apparently it isn't too inconvenient for you and the bridegroom's mother to wear long dresses, I think this is what you should do. The dresses needn't be evening dresses. . . they should be long dinner dresses of a simple type, perhaps you both would like to wear the costume much favored by "the mothers" of today's weddings. . . a simple dinner dress with matching short jacket or bolero. And this dinner dress attire is more consistent than street-length dresses would be with the bride's attire, with the number of attendants and with their attire, and with your husband's tuxedo.

Fashion Flashes

NOTHING PRETTIER than Winter White. This light, lovely shade is used for a wide-crowned sailor trimmed with shaded pale beige ostrich tips.

It's either black or white for long skirted evening gowns. White jersey, with a wide midriff of marquisette outlined with curling scrolls of gold kid, and with feathery embroideries in tiny gold sequins on skirt and bodice, adds up to a charming winter evening frock.

A good variety of separate skirts and blouses means endless changes of wardrobe. The apron wrap effect, with side draping, appears in skirts for casual wear as well as for dress use. Plaid in red, gray and green woollen makes a smart skirt on side wrap lines. It is bound down the side and around the hem with green flannel. Green buttons on the waist band.

Ideal for an early-teen frock for gadabout wear is a brown velveteen jumper. For dress-up wear it is worn with a blouse of apricot pink satin, while for afternoon it is teamed up with a shirt blouse in gold wool jersey.

No matter what hat style happens to be the current darling, the tricorne goes on and on, always a favorite with the discreetly-dressed smart woman. A small tricorne in black fur felt is trimmed with a cluster of silver tassels and has a draped black sheer lace veil.

Successful Tea Held Under Auspices Of Hospital Auxiliary

The home of Mrs. J. H. Forrester, Bridge Street East, was the setting for a delightfully arranged tea on Thursday afternoon under the auspices of the Hospital Auxiliary. The occasion was a fine success, with the treasurer reporting very pleasing proceeds realized, which are to be used towards the purchasing of equipment for the auxiliary.

The door was opened to the guests by little Miss Katharine Cameron. Mrs. Forrester with Mrs. H. Wray, the president of the auxiliary, received. Mrs. Mackenzie Robertson and Mrs. J. McIntosh invited the guests to the tea room.

Convener of the tea was Mrs. J. Galloway. The tea table was beautifully arranged, spread with an ivory lace cloth, centred with a silver basket of bronze and lemon yellow 'mums, and flanked with tall cream tapers in silver candelabra. Presiding over the tea table were Mrs. W. C. Mikel, Mrs. A. Mitchell, Mrs. R. Abrams and Mrs. G. S. Stobie. Acting as servitours were Mrs. W. Allore, Mrs. G. A. Morton, Mrs. J. Marsh, Mrs. R. Grant, Mrs. Roy Spafford, Mrs. E. M. MacDonald, Mrs. W. L. Langlois and Miss Ivy Dickens. The tea table was replenished by Mrs. T. F. Aman, Mrs. E. Finkle, Mrs. George Wilson and Mrs. F. Camben.

Conveners of the Talent Table were Mrs. J. A. Lisotte and Mrs. Gordon Barclay, assisted by their committee comprising Mrs. D. Bradford, Mrs. R. M. Flynn, Mrs. C. Cameron, Mrs. C. Earle and Mrs. E. Turvey.

A cake, which had been made and donated by Mrs. J. McIntosh, was won on a draw by Mrs. E. Cummings. Mrs. Laurie Lewis donated a picture which was won on a draw by Mrs. R. S. Gibson.

Treasurer for the afternoon was Mrs. A. E. Miles.

APPEALS SENTENCE

Toronto, Nov. 24 —(CP)— Lorne Corley appealed a sentence of $25 or 30 days on a charge of failing to report for medical examination. Reserving judgment on the appeal, Judge James Parker said he did not see why Corley "should be in this position."

Corley told the court he tried to enlist in the R. C. A. F. in 1939, but was turned down. He paid $1,200 for a flying course, obtained a commercial licence and became an instructor. Later he joined the R. A. F. Transport Command.

He was rejected by the R. C. A. F. again in 1944 and in 1943 was rejected from army service.

3RD OF HILLIER

Benway Family Honored on Eve Of Departure

3rd Hillier—Mr. and Mrs. George Benway who have disposed of their farm 3rd of Hillier to Mr. C. Benway and have purchased the Reid farm at Dunse's where they are about to reside were very pleasantly surprised on the evening of Nov. 15th. A party of about 75 friends and neighbors assembled at their home to express their regret at their departure and to wish them health and happiness in their new home.

An address was read to Mr. and Mrs. Benway and Ronald by Miss Mabel Dainard and the presentation of an electric table lamp was made by Miss Clifford Panting on behalf of the community. Ronald received a purse of money.

Mr. and Mrs. Benway replied very graciously thanking their friends for the present and inviting all to visit them in their new home. All joined in singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows" after which refreshments were served by the young ladies present. The address was signed on behalf of the community by Mrs. Lelia Panting and Miss Mabel Dainard.

Compensation for the shortened length of the fur coat is seen in full sleeves, pleated shoulders, huge cuffs and other details. A smart stroller in black Persian lamb has a soft collar, deep, softly rippled revers and full sleeves with wide wrists. Also huge patch pockets.

Paper Complains Yanks Steal All Glory in Film

London, Nov. 24 —(CP Reuter)— A demand that the latest "March of Time" picture, "Strategy of Liberation," should be "recalled and re-edited" is made today in an editorial in "World's Press News," trade journal of the British press.

Blasting what it calls the film's "extreme partiality to the Stars and Stripes," the journal says it "fairly suppressed and plays down the parts performed by the British, Canadian and French forces in a theme which purports to tell the tale of history from Normandy to Brussels."

World's Press News points particularly to the crediting of the building of the artificial Mulberry harbor to American engineers "when the originator was a British naval officer and the fulfilment represented the work of 30,000 British men and women over a long period."

The editorial continues:

"This bitch to hog the limelight on the part of some Americans puzzles us. The plain American soldier is doing a grand job. He is fighting alongside the British in complete amity with mutual admiration and respect.

"Politically, America is a good friend, whose strength and generosity has put the coping-stone on the earlier fighting of the British and Russian forces against Nazism.

"It is only this colossal complex of perpetual 'skite' that is so disturbing to the British sense of decency and fair play.

"Surely the United States is doing a big enough job to be satisfied with its due appreciation without seeking to rob her allies of the recognition to which they are justly and fairly entitled? There should be no need to twist and pervert history."

Band of British Soldiers Gains Objective in Third Grim Attack

By CHARLES LYNCH
(Reuter War Correspondent)

With the British 2nd Army, Nov. 24 — (CP-Reuter)—This is a story of how a band of British fighting men, their formation broken up twice by heavy German machine-gun and mortar fire, formed for a third time and advanced through the ramparts of the Siegfried Line to gain their objectives and hold them.

It happened yesterday northeast of Geilenkirchen. British troops were ordered to fight their way on to a high feature and capture the village of Hoven. Twice the tanks formed for the attack. Twice the curtain of bullets and mortar bombs and shells that the German sent screaming in, broke up the formation.

For the third time the officers of this formation rallied their men and gave the order to attack.

Across the starting line went these troops and up the shell-scarred slopes to the tiny hamlet of Hoven. In among the wrecked houses they went and word came back "objective reached."

The Germans were quick to react. In a matter of minutes after the British had battled their way into Hoven the enemy counter-attacked with crack troops supported by maximum mortar and artillery fire.

Inside Hoven there was bedlam but then came word "enemy beaten off."

Still there was no respite for these weary troops who had had more fighting in three hours than most soldiers experience in as many days even in this sector which has been flaming now for seven days.

Again the enemy came into the attack lunging across the fields which were sown with their own mines. Again the attack was met and beaten off. Back again came the Germans to carry out their final dash to recapture Hoven at all costs.

This time the task of the British forces was complicated by the fact that they had 30 German prisoners captured during the two previous counter-attacks.

But they managed to guard these fanatics and once again the line held.

Today the Hoven feature is in British hands thanks to the almost inhuman fight put up by these veteran troops of a famous regiment.

Rome, Nov. 24 —(CP Cable)— A general military court on Wednesday sentenced Giuseppe Ceccarelli, 24-year-old peasant from Frosinone, to five years' imprisonment for culpable homicide arising from the knife slaying of a Canadian army engineer, L/Cpl. William J. Bell last June.

A brother of the convicted farmer, Sisto Ceccarelli, was sentenced to two years for concealing the crime and for removing shoes and identifications from the body.

Evidence submitted tended to show that Bell was stabbed during a melee that arose when a group of engineers went to the farmhouse in search of wine.

GIRLS' SOFTBALL LOOP GIVES $600 TO RED CROSS

Champion Reliance Girls' Team Honored and Presented With Signal Tokens

As the result of activities throughout the summer months the Belleville Ladies' Softball League presented cheques amounting to $400 to local war charities at the Reliance girls' softball team victory dance when the 1944 league champions were honored. The distribution of the money went to the Community Chest while the sum of $600 was given to the Belleville branch of the Red Cross Society. The ladies' softball league operates annually in favor of war charities, to which it has contributed over $1,800 in three years, Mayor Harry Rollins informed the gathering.

It was a gala occasion at the Trianon ballroom when the girls' softball champion Reliance team were honored as repeaters from 1943. Chairman Jack Darlington welcomed the visitors and introduced Mr. T. K. Schwab, of the league executive, who presented cheques to Mr. M. P. Duff, president of the Red Cross and to Mr. C. B. Morgan on behalf of the Community Chest fund.

Outlines Program

"I might say the Belleville Ladies' Softball League operates entirely in favor of war charities, contending teams do not receive a penny of the league's money received in collections. However, at this point I wish to thank the Toronto Sunday Morning Class girls' softball team for coming to Belleville, and at no expense to our league, last Civic Holiday when our war charity program was enriched well over $600. This is indeed a fine effort on the part of every girl in the league and reflects favorably on their efforts," stated Mr. Schwab.

Secretary Eddie Schreider presented the Frontenac Trophy, emblematic of the league championship, to team captain Mrs. Wm. Blaind and congratulated her and her teammates upon winning the league for the second year in succession. President Chas. Barnett presented individual crests to Manager Bill Blaind following which Mayor Rollins congratulated the league upon its splendid success in years past in bringing recreation to so many young ladies and also in the provision of entertainment to the citizens in general.

In connection with the club's victory dance the personnel of the team was introduced to the large gathering during which time Mrs. J. J. Morch presented each player with a group photograph of the champions, while Mrs. J. A. Lisotte presented each girl with a windbreaker jacket, a present from the Reliance Industries.

The remainder of the evening was spent in enjoyable dancing.

CANUCKS PLAY BASEBALL IN ARMY SWEATERS

Soldier Players Make Big Hit at Sports Meet in Belgium

Somewhere in Belgium, Nov. 24—(CP)—The Canadian game of softball was introduced to a Belgian town for the first time when two teams from a Canadian Army bridge company staged a sports meet under a warm fall sun before moving "up the line."

The winning team—the score was 6-1—received a great ovation from hundreds of Belgian spectators—not because the townspeople understood what it was all about but because the winners wore the borrowed sweaters of the town soccer club and called themselves the "Belgium" team.

Included in the "Belgium" lineup were Pte. N. Jones of Hamilton, Ont., who pitched, Sgts. F. Speck of Kirkland Lake, Ont., and J. H. Atherton of Toronto, and Ptes J. W. Crowe, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., and D. P. Armstrong, Sinclair, Man. Among the losing team were Sgt. W. D. Hannah, Toronto; Cpl. Ken Reardon, Winnipeg, Ptes. J. M. Trewe, Mattawa, Ont., and Spr. I. Sapolsky of Halifax.

Pte. J. E. Stone of Cranbrook, B. C., won the 100-yard dash with Reardon, former professional hockey player, second, while the pick-a-back race went to L. Cpl. N. Swiris of Weston, Ont., teamed with Pte. R. P. McConnell of Pembroke, Ont. Swiris also won the biscuit race.

The heavies from the workshops, including Sgt. H. Sparrow of Winnipeg, Cpl. C. W. O'Brien of Moncton, N. B., and Ptes. G. R. Clark, Provost, Alta., and A. I. Boyce, Blenheim, Ont., won the tug-of-war competition.

FURTHER HONOR FOR AIR MARSHAL BISHOP

Ottawa, Nov. 24 (CP)—Air Marshal W. A. (Billy) Bishop, who retired from the R.C.A.F. as director of recruiting in September, was invested with the insignia of a Companion (Military Division) of the most Honorable Order of the Bath at a private investiture at Government House yesterday.

Air Marshal Bishop, who already holds the V.C., D.S.O., and Bar, M.C., and D.F.C., was awarded the C.B. in the King's Birthday Honors list earlier this year.

The investiture was made by the Earl of Athlone, Governor-General. Mrs. Bishop was present.

Toronto, Nov. 24 — (CP) — The Barber of Seville had nothing on the Barber of Vancouver. A versatile gentleman by the name of Alexander Boytnun, barber by trade and former Canadian middleweight wrestling champ, gave a violin recital on the coast the other day, throwing in a few sleight-of-hand tricks and acrobatics for good measure . . . We haven't been able to find out where the rest of the quartette is.

Puckish Puzzle:

Everyone has been puzzling over this incident in a city league hockey game at Windsor, Ont., when a puck split — one half going into the net and the other half sticking in the goalie's pads. Jack Adams of Detroit Red Wings, a member of the N.H.L. Rules Committee, thinks it wasn't a goal. Giving his unofficial opinion, Adams pointed out the rule says a goal is scored only when the puck enters the goal and goes "entirely" over the red line between the posts. The puck in question certainly didn't go over the line entirely—not by half!

Chatter:

Mike Rodden, sports editor of the Kingston Whig-Standard, hockey and football official, etc., isn't convinced Toronto Leafs' Bill Ezinicki is really a rough character. Mike says he refereed 18 games last year in which Ezinicki played, and almost as many the year before but didn't see him "commit one major offence." At times he was "chippy" in his tactics . . . this is real community spirit: sport fans in Peterboro, Ont., already have raised more than $205,000 for a memorial centre and community sport grounds . . . horse race followers near Windsor, Ont., are interested in that Michigan track dispute. Racing has been declared a non-legitimate business by the judge, with threatened closing of tracks in the state. If that happened, racing interests might move across the border into Canada, with beneficial results for the Dominion Treasury . . . Return of University of Toronto to senior puck circles restores still another famous old name to the game . . .

Hard Games Feature Army Tennis Contest

Somewhere in England, Nov. 24—(CP) — Highlighted by a hard-smashing singles match, the Canadian Army (England) team tennis championship was won by a Canadian Ordnance and Mechanical Engineers Reinforcement Unit which defeated Canadian Ordnance Depot five matches to three.

The tournament followed Davis Cup rules with two singles and two doubles matches in a round-robin contest. Outstanding was a battle in which Pte. Yolland of Penticton, B. C., member of the losing team, beat Capt. H. P. Penwarden of Winnipeg 7-5, 6-3. Yolland went on to defeat Pte. E. R. Wall of Ottawa, 6-4, 6-1, while Penwarden defeated Lieut. J. A. Cook of Montreal, 6-3, 6-4.

Among the doublesmatches, Capt. A. MacLaren of Ottawa and Pte. E. Harbinson of Victoria, COMERU members, walloped Ptes. W. Bodden of Winnipeg and F. Taggart of Kelowna, B. C., 6-0, 6-1.

Sport Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
Associated Press Sport Writer

New York, Nov. 24 — (AP)—Amateur night . . . latest report on the off-again-on-again manoeuvres about bringing Gunder Haegg and Arne Andersson, the Swedish speedsters, to the United States this winter is that they're both open to persuasion . . . Gunder Haegg has escaped from Sture Olsson, the Malmoe haberdasher who objected to losing his best tie salesman during the Christmas rush, into the army . . . now the Swedish Athletic Association hopes to postpone his military service for the projected tour...next step is to convince Andersson, who says "not even Per Albin Hansson" (the Swedish Prime Minister) can get him to travel without his wife, that it won't be so bad after all... Meanwhile American track fans probably are asking "How much are those guys holding out for?"

Shorts and Shells

Now that Jimmy Crowley has joined Elmer Layden in the ranks of pro football commissioners, the other two projected pro leagues should know where to look for their head men . . . and the Four Horsemen likely would find the club owners as stubborn as seven mules . . . Since Bryan Hextall can't leave Saskatchewan to play hockey for the Rangers this winter, don't be surprised if he turns up with some "amateur" club out there.

Northey Hits Homers At Opportune Times

New York, Nov. 24—(CP)—When Ron Northey, leading hitter of the Phillies, belts a homer, it usually means something, says Bill Brandt, veteran National League publicity director. Bill has clippings to prove his point.

In 1943 Northey was the first southpaw to homer against the St. Louis Cardinals. During the past season his 15th inning homer beat the Boston Braves, 1-0, the same day Jim Tobin hurled his second no-hit, no-run game in the five inning nightcap of a twin bill. Later in the season he homered off Tobin with the bases loaded.

Northey hit 22 homers last season and batted in 104 runs.

SHAWINIGAN FALLS THIRD

Shawinigan Falls, Que., Nov. 24—(CP) — Shawinigan Falls Cataracts last night turned back Lachine Rapids 7-2 in an Interprovincial Hockey League game here and pulled into a third-place tie with the Rapids in the league standings.

Two goals each by Garand and Bisson and singles by MacIntyre, Williamson and Brodeur made up the Cataracts' score, while Vallieres and Chapman scored for Lachine.

Due to transportation difficulties, the Lachine club was late in arriving here and started the game with only five players on hand. There were only five Rapids' men on the ice when Vallieres scored his goal.

Canadiens Take Leadership Of N.H.L. by Tying Red Wings While Leafs Lose to the Bruins

Cellar - Dwelling Black Hawks Earn Draw With N. Y. Rangers

By ERIC SANDERSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Montreal Canadiens, last year's Stanley Cup champions, last night took over the leadership of the National Hockey League for the first time this season by holding Detroit Red Wings to a 3-3 tie at the Border City while Toronto Maple Leafs, early-season pace-setters, were trounced 5-1 by Bruins at Boston.

In a third mid-week game, the cellar-dwelling Chicago Black Hawks held New York Rangers to a 4-4 draw.

Canadiens, who won the championship with ease last season, now hold a one-point lead over Toronto and a five-point margin over Detroit.

Canadiens had to come from behind twice last night and then after taking a 3-2 lead Bill (Flash) Hollett netted to tie the match.

Playing before a crowd of 12,588, the Wings sailed in front early in the first period on Carl Liscombe's goal which Hector (Toe) Blake matched before the session ended. Rookie Steve Wochy slipped a 15-foot backhand shot past goalie Bill Durnan for the only counter of the sandwich period. Maurice Richard squared things again in the first minute of the final period and Dutch Hiller put Canadiens on top before the half-way mark.

In two previous meetings this season Montreal took the Wings 3-2 both times.

Toronto Outplayed

Toronto was outplayed by a wide margin as the Bruins strengthened their hold on fourth place.

Leafs were without the services of their ace winger, Dave (Sweeney) Schriner and dressed only 11 players.

A goal by Lorne Carr after the 10-minute mark of the third period robbed rookie goalie Harvey Bennett of the first shutout of the league this year.

Bruins were paced by their top line of veteran Herbie Cain, who netted twice, Bill Cowley, who continued his drive for the league's top scoring honors by collecting a goal and two assists to give him 21 points, and Bill Jennings, who assisted on Cain's first goal. Other Boston marksmen were defencemen Pat Egan and Aubrey (Dit) Clapper.

Rangers seldom took advantage of their opportunities and although they took the lead twice were unable to beat the Hawks.

Chicago's top line of Smith-Mosienko-Horeck each scored once and Bill Thoms got the other.

Clint Smith got the first goal of the game but Joe Shack tied it up and Ab Demarco gave Rangers a 2-1 lead going into the second period. Bill Mosienko and Thoms netted in the middle stanza before Fred Thurier again evened the score and Ott Heller sent New York in front for the second time. Pete Horeck whipped in the only counter of the third period.

WILDCATS READY FOR NAVY BOYS FROM MONTREAL

Hamilton Will be Gunning For Their Second Dominion Championship

Hamilton, Nov. 24 —(CP)— When Hamilton Wildcats take the field Saturday against H. M. C. S. Donnacona of Montreal they will be gunning for their second Dominion championship and the 10th in the city's history.

When the Cats brought the Canadian title home last year it marked the first time since the old Tigers did it in 1932 that a Hamilton squad had turned the trick. Before that time, in 45 National finals since the first in 1892, seven Hamilton teams—those of '06, '07, '12, '13, '15, '28 and '29—came out on top. No Dominion title was declared in 1890, 1903-04 and from 1916-19.

Wildcats' performance, as in practically every contest in the last two years, will depend mainly on whether Joe Krol's quarterbacking is up to its usual superlative level. The fabulous Windsor native was far below par in his team's 6-0 defeat by Balmy Beach last week. He was just then recovering from an attack of the grippe, but expects to be in good shape for the title struggle.

Only name missing from the Cats' starting lineup will be that of Joe Soyka, good halfback who was injured last Saturday.

Coach Eddie McLean's charges will be heavy favorites to take the Montreal team, which went through its Quebec Rugby Football Union schedule unbeaten but lost to the University of Western Ontario in exhibition and went under 12-1 to Toronto Navy last week in a bid for the Canadian Navy championship.

The Sailors have lost the services of inside Don Loney, who has been posted to H. M. C. S. Cornwallis at Deep Brook, N. S. Coach Glen Brown indicates he will rely on a passing attack in the attempt to wrest the Dominion crown from Hamilton.

Doncaster, England, Nov. 23 — (CP) — Capt. E. S. Armitage, one of the Chindits in Burma, writing home said: "If ever you read that the Jap soldier is a little chap who wears spectacles, it's all nonsense. The whole time we were out there I never saw one with spectacles."

SCORING LEADERS IN THE O.H.A.

Toronto, Nov. 24 —(CP)— Laurie Peterson and Douglas McCurdy of the St. Catharines Falcons Junior 'A' team share first spot in the scoring list released by the Ontario Hockey Association today. Both Falcons garnered five points in the opening game of the season against Galt, in which the St. Kitts' squad scored a 10-4 victory.

Peterson tallied four times and picked up an assist, while his teammate was in on five goals. Denny of Oshawa Generals and Blute of St. Michaels are tied for the next position with four points apiece.

In the Senior 'A' O. H. A. series, the first game of the schedule saw the St. Catharines sextet edge out Staffords, 3-2. Scoring honors are divided between Umbo Concessi of the Saints and Doc Dafoe of the Toronto Staffords, each have nicked two markers in the contest.

In the Junior standings, the Memorial Cup holders, Oshawa Generals, top the Eastern Group, while Falcons are atop the Western Group.

FOR GOOD STEERS AND HEIFERS

Toronto, Nov. 24 —(CP)— Next week's livestock market will be open for any number of good steers and heifers, the management of the Union Stockyards announced today. But, they warned, only a moderate supply of plain cattle or cows should be loaded. The management said indications were the carryover of cattle would be less than 1,000 head after the weekend.

LESSON NO. 540
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

A squeeze is one of the big moments in the life of a bridge player. See it happen in this deal:

NORTH
♠A Q 9 7 6
♥4
♦K 4 3
♣A Q 10 9

WEST
♠10 8
♥7 6 2
♦Q J 10 8 5
♣8 3 2

EAST
♠K J 5 4
♥10
♦9 7 6 2
♣K 6 5 4

SOUTH
♠3 2
♥A K Q J 9 8 5 3
♦A
♣J 7

The bidding went like this:

SOUTH	NORTH
3 H	3 S
4 NT	6 D
7 H	Pass

Four no-trump is the ace-and-king asking signal. Six diamonds is The Kibitzer's convention signal for showing two aces and one king. The other bids are naturals.

West leads the diamond queen, which south wins with the ace. On six trump leads, dummy sluffs three spades and two clubs. A south club lead is then won by dummy club ace.

Dummy leads the diamond king, on which south sluffs a small spade. A small diamond lead from dummy is trumped by south. And now, each of the players is down to three cards.

Left in south are the last trump, a small spade, and the club jack. Dummy has kept the A Q of spades and the club queen. South now leads the last trump and sluffs the dummy club queen thereon.

If one opponent has both black kings, he is squeezed. Because he must have the club king alone and the spade king with another spade. And he must let go of one of them.

In this case, east is the victim. If he lets go of the club king, south will take the last two tricks with club jack and spade ace. If east gives up a spade, both dummy spades are good.

When pulling a squeeze, assume that both threats (in this case, the black kings) are in the same hand. How do you know which hand? Often by keeping track of the cards that have been played.

Suppose you are incapable of remembering the cards played? Or suppose you are unable to learn who has the feared cards? Then pick on one opponent blindly and hope he has them.

Many a success blossoms from a guess.

BILL DENNIS HEADS JUNIOR HOCKEY TEAM

Belleville Hockey Club to Promote City Juvenile Loop to Stimulate Interest in Game

Wm. J. "Bill" Dennis, who has for many years been actively connected with the sponsorship of hockey in Belleville, was elected president of the Belleville Hockey Club at the annual meeting held at the Hume Arena last night. The newly formed 1945 hockey executive announced they would sponsor both a junior "B" O.H.A. team, as well as a juvenile club into the O.M.H.A.

Efforts to interest local service and fraternity organizations in the sponsoring of juvenile teams to form a city juvenile league for the development and sponsoring of hockey among the teen aged boys of Belleville is one of the principal efforts to be carried out by the new hockey executive. Contacts with service community service clubs will be made in the near future and efforts to have the city juvenile league operate at the proposed city open air rinks will also be a major part of the incoming executive's program for 1945.

Officers Elected.

The election of officers of the Belleville Hockey Club for 1945 resulted as follows:

Hon. President: Thos. Fleury.
President: W. J. Dennis.
Vice President: Fred Reid.
Sec. Treasurer: Wally Berry.
Executive Committee: J. N. Yanover, Jack Doran, A. R. Holway, Walt Gerow and one to be named.
Club Physician: Dr. F. R. Ross.
Club Trainer: Wm. Britton.

The matter of a coach was left in the hands of "Toots" Holway with the names of Mike Dalura, former New Haven Eagles star now stationed at Trenton, and Dan Cowley, well known R.C.A.F. star, being prominently mentioned.

Secretary W. Berry was named as delegate to attend the annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association at Toronto on Saturday.

'Y' Basketball

Scores in the Y. M. C. A. ladies house cage loop were close and the games keenly contested last evening when the Blue Flashes downed the Black Shirts 29 to 24 while the White Streaks eked out a 32 to 30 win over the Red Devils.

In the opening game the Red Devils were leading the White Streaks 22 to 16 at half time. However, the White Streaks played consistant ball to score 16 points in each half and eke out a one basket victory. Headed by Gwen Bennett, who scored four baskets in the last half, the winners rallied as Eva Allison scored 16 points for the winners. Peg Ronsky, Marg Bush and "Pee Wee" Lapore were the principal offensive attackers for the losers. It was the series most thrilling game yet played.

In the nightcap affair the Blue Streaks led the Black Shirts 17 to 12 at the halfway whistle, as each squad managed to score an even dozen points in the last half.

Speedy Arlie Gilbert was the scoring threat of the night for the Blue Streaks getting 16 points, while Marion Salisbury picked up eight scoring points. Ruth Oliphant paced the losers with ten points, Nora Stoliker getting six and E. Burkholder four. Twin bills of ladies basketball are played each Thursday evening at the "Y".

League Standing Remains Unchanged

(By The Canadian Press.)

Providence Reds edged out Indianapolis Capitals 4-2 last night in the only scheduled American Hockey League game, but the results failed to bring any change in the league standing. The game developed into a wild slug-fest and Rollie Forget suffered a lengthy scalp wound from the stick of Red Kane, Indianapolis defenceman.

In a flurry of sticks in the first period, referee Rabbitt McVeigh suffered a cut mouth and had to leave the ice for repairs. Five major penalties were handed out by the officials.

Bellemarre started the scoring for Providence but Pete Leswick evened the count two minutes later. Ron Hudson and Kemp gave the Reds a 3-1 lead before the end of the first frame. After a scoreless second period, Leswick added another for Indianapolis, before Courteau scored the final Providence goal.

What's Doing in Sport

Colorful Sam Snead, on the comeback trail of big-time golf after 26 months' service in the United States Navy, headed the field today as a crack contingent of pros and amateurs teed off in the second round of the 72-hole Portland Open. The Hot Springs, Va., powerhouse thrilled a gallery of more than 2,500 when he clubbed over the rain-soaked Portland Golf Club course with a two-under-par 70 yesterday.

Snead's initial effort gave him a one-stroke edge over Mike Turnesa, White Plains, N.Y., who finished with a 71. Byron Nelson, former National Open and P.G.A. champion, biggest money winner of the year, had a first round 73. He tied with Denny Shute, Akron, O., veteran.

Robert (Scotty) Rankine, now with the R.C.A.F., returned to Berwick, Pa., after an absence of seven years to compete in the Thanksgiving Day 9-mile road race but failed by 15 seconds to capture this modified marathon for his sixth time. The winner was Johnny Kelly of Acton, Mass., who took the event for the third straight year, his time being 49:30. All three Canadian participants finished in the first five, Walter A. Fedorick of the Hamilton Olympic Club taking third prize and Ab Morton of the RCAF fifth.

Mrs. J. B. Burnstein's Okana captured yesterday's $25,000 Argonaut Handicap at Hollywood Park, Inglewood, Calif., in a field of 14 to make the California thoroughbred's record 10 wins in 16 starts this year. Marriage, the favorite, could only finish seventh.

Former manager of Battling Siki who kayoed Georges Carpentier for the world's light-heavyweight title in 1922, Robert (Papa) Levy died from a heart attack in New York yesterday. The 71-year-old veteran had spent 25 years in boxing and baseball.

Setting the pace all the way, Jimmy Rafferty of the New York Athletic Club yesterday set a new U. S. amateur record of 31:38 in winning the 10,000-metre road race at Baltimore, Md. The time was more than two minutes better than the old mark.

Prior to the 55th annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association here Saturday, the executive meeting will meet tonight, it was announced yesterday. A new schedule in the junior "A" series will be drawn up owing to the withdrawal of the Hamilton club and will be announced next week.

Little Benny's Note Book

After supper pop started to turn on the radio, saying to ma, The Gluckman Kelly fight ought to be just starting, here's where I relax and enjoy the battle through the air in scientific detachment.

Now William, I never knew it to fail, ma said. This is mystery night on the air and I was just in the act of contentedly making up my mind whether to tune in an Annals of Scotland Yard or Case Histories of Dr. Sharp, she said, and pop said, But my dear, there's no better mystery than a good prize fight.

Such a statement for land sakes, ma said. A left to the right and a right to the left and bong goes the bell and so on without the slightest rime or reason. Where's the mystery in that? she said, and pop said, I'll explain where. Just imagine the 2 big incrutable men sitting in their corners, silent but scheming. Suddenly they both throw off their bath robes, each revealing a sea of hitherto hidden muscels.

Gassly, ma said, and pop said, Bong, the bell. The epic struggle is on. You can hear the flying gloves, like the ominous thud of approaching cavalry, as they find their targets. But Kelly is the top man tonight. Kelly is everywhere at once, the winner before he starts, pop said.

Then where's all the mystery? ma said, and pop said, I'm coming to that. Gluckman sags at the knees and glazes at the eyes and puffs at the ears. He doesn't know where he is and cant remember where he was and fortunately for him doesn't even realize where he's going to be. To make a long story short, the mystery is, what's holding Gluckman up? pop said.

The mystery is how grown men can sit and watch 2 brutes who would of got their just desserts if they'd both been knocked out before they entered the ring, ma said.

The result being pop went up in my room and heard the fight on my Junior Midget set while me and ma listened to Annals of Scotland Yard.

Whitehall Notebook

(By DOUGLAS AMARON)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Nov. 22. (CP)—Sir William Beveridge, father of Britain's Social Security scheme, is anxious that the Liberal Party should become more radical.

"The times call for a new Britain", Sir William said at a reception tendered him by the Liberal Social Council on the occasion of his entry into parliament as a Liberal member. "Liberals must not be afraid to use the state. They must humanize it and utilize its machinery".

Sir William suggested "a Liberal party with a radical program" as a banner under which to fight to rebuild up a strong and flourishing Liberal party.

Liberalism, said Sir William, stood for the best safeguard of the liberties of the British people, not so much the liberties that were only useful but those which were essential.

Many evils remained to be eradicated, including want, squalor, ignorance and disease. The battle to eradicate them was begun 36 years ago by David Lloyd George and Sir William hoped that soon the finishing touches would be put to the great project started then.

In Wales, a new Liberal federation has been inaugurated fusing the party's North and South Wales Federations. Despite the fusion, the two federations will continue to function separately.

Aim of the new federation, according to J. E. Emlyn-Jones, its president, is to place Liberal candidates in every Welsh constituency in the next general election. A provisional constitution laid stress on the special needs and aspirations of Wales, including appointment of a Secretary of State.

GYPSY BLOOD

By MARGARET NORRIS

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

Harry would indeed be interested to hear it, but something set a seal on her lips. Perhaps it was the old world wisdom which the new world does not possess and which was Anna's heritage, along with her gypsy blood. This must remain her secret. Some things are best untold.

"You're so strangely elusive," Harry was saying to her, "so different from the other girls I know in what my mother and sister call 'our class'—silly flappers, who run you down, pursue you, don't give a fellow a chance, while you run away from me. I'm almost afraid of losing you, of your disappearing way."

"Tonight," said Anna, "any time. That's because I have gypsy blood. It brought me to America, it might take me anywhere. I'm a victim of the itching foot."

"You look like a gypsy: as though when a child you were dropped from the gypsy cart, except that gypsies don't have yellow hair." Harry ran his fingers through Anna's. "It's lovely hair, and with your black eyes — But please don't run away."

"I never would run away from this—but, after all, what would you care? You like me tonight but tomorrow I'm forgotten. There are so many other girls."

"There are not and there never will be—not for me, at any rate."

"Never's a long time; be careful."

"Never's not long enough if we could always remain like this. But tonight is ours, at least."

"Yes, tonight is ours; our very own." Then Anna let Harry kiss her again.

After all, what did it matter? It was partly the wicked moon.

A night of bewildering happiness!

That was how Anna loved to think of the evening she and Harry had spent together by the sea. In the lonely hours that came after (and they were very lonely indeed) she lived on the memory of that evening as a hungry man lives on the memory of a feast, or a camel, stranded in the desert, lives on the water from the previous spring.

Anna reviewed every word, every gesture. She felt his kisses again, hotter than the sultry night on her forehead, her eyes her lips. She heard his voice as he told her she was different from the other girls he had known, prettier and sweeter than any of them—that was why he loved her. She recalled the beauty of moonlight and sea and the delicious feel of the water as they had floated at ease, as though in a cradle, their faces turned toward the moon.

It had been too beautiful to be real. Perhaps it was only a dream. Harry, to all appearances, had no memory of it at all. How could he pass her by without a nod of recognition, as though they had never met?

One long, dreary week had passed since that night, and Harry had not once spoken to her, however close he had passed her as she worked among the flowers in the garden. Even when alone he did not glance her way and he was seldom alone, she observed. There were many guests at the House by the Sea, friends of his sister, Louise, and Harry was always the center of a gay, laughing group of young people.

They were attractive young men and lovely girls—girls of Harry's own kind and class, who wore fashionable sports clothes in the daytime and at night, soft, filmy frocks that seemed to be spun out of moonbeams. And they did everything so well! They danced like fireflies, swam like mermaids and rode like a fearless young centaurs; yet with it all had small, fragile hands which looked unfit for anything except to entangle in their meshes the hearts of hapless men.

Anna watched their comings and goings in the big House by the Sea, the great purring cars in which they came and went; their parties on the beach; the morning rides and the evening dances and the long, moonlit hours on the veranda. Whom was Harry kissing now? Did he remember, she wondered, that he had told her he liked her because she was different from other girls like these? One night he had told her he loved her, and she, poor silly, girl, had believed him, swept away by the joy it had given her to hear it.

But Anna was too young and too vital to live long on memories. She wanted realities and life itself and the things that are youth's due, whether one's hands are soft and white and made to ensnare men's hearts, or whether they are square and callused and tanned from contact with the soil.

One night there was a ball at the House by the Sea. Dozens of cars had spun in, spilling their quota of lovely, flower-like girls and slim, white-flanneled young men. With envy and unrest in her heart, Anna had watched them come. How cruel that they did not invite her, who was as pretty as any of them, as young and as gay and as eager! But again she must watch from far, a forlorn outsider, peering in as she had peered hungrily into the ballroom of the ship.

Weary of torturing herself by the sight of other peoples's gaiety, Anna ran down the path that led to the sea. The sea always comforted her. It helped her to solve her problems and she had grown to love it so she wondered how she could leave it when the time came for her to go. Tonight it was not gentle and moonlit as it had been a week ago. It was dark and sullen and angry, but Anna loved it in all its moods.

Anna had fully expected to be alone in her meditation by the sea, but as she rounded the curve to the little cove that was her favorite haunt she saw a trespasser on her property, one who appeared to have come to stay, and, having established prior lien, had no intentions of surrendering his claim.

He was a solitary figure, silhouetted against sea and sky, with an air of dejection, as though he, too, had a problem which only the sea could solve. As Anna drew nearer, she recognized him as one of the house party guests. Why was he not at the party with the others? This was strange indeed.

Anna was wondering whether his presence in this, her chosen retreat, meant that she must seek out another spot, or that she, too, might remain, when he pulled himself out of his dejected contemplation of the waves and said, rising courteously to his feet:

"I was just wishing for someone to talk to. Won't you join me? There's plenty of room."

In Anna's code of ethics, never learned from an etiquette book, she had one simple maxim (among others), which ran very much like this:

"Speak when you are spoken to—if the young man is attractive."

And this young man was—Oh, very! She could see that in a glance. He was long and lean and pleasantly bronzed, with hair and eyes and skin all varying shades of sunny tan. His legs were so extraordinary long that to stand up or sit down was like opening or shutting a jack knife. Yet he was not awkward as some very tall people are. He carried himself with a Sir Walter Rawleigh air of chivalry. Indeed, he might have passed for Sir Walter himself, for although the night was cold, he was coatless, as though he had proffered that garment to some fair lady in distress.

So when he said, "Won't you sit down?" with a very courtly gesture, as though he were offering her a dais instead of space on the cold, wet sand, Anna said:

"Thank you, I'd like to," and suited the action to the word.

Through her mind flashed the question of why he should be sitting disconsolately by the sea, baying the moon, as the poets would say, except that the night was dark. Perhaps he, too, was unhappy in love, which gave them a kindred sorrow. Two forlorn creatures might meet, who knows, in mutual consolation, as two negatives make a positive? Why was he not at the party with the other young people of his kind? Why should he be left out like herself? Anna wanted terribly to ask but wisely she waited to let him speak first.

"My name is Moore—Jim Moore," the stranger was saying. "I'm a guest at the Baldwin estate."

"Then why aren't you at the party?" The question came tumbling out.

"Ah, that is my secret sorrow," he said with mock eloquence, placing one hand over his heart. Then he looked expectantly at Anna, as though awaiting some explanation from her.

"My name is Anna, and I, too, am from the Baldwwin estate." It didn't seem necessary to tell him in just what capacity she was there.

"Delighted, Miss Anna; I approve of that name, so simple and easy to remember," and she knew by the look he gave her that he approved of her, as well.

"Oh, I have another name all right, but it's Polish and you'd find it hard."

"But since we are both from the Baldwin estate, we can waive such formalities as names and hurry to get acquainted. I wonder, Miss Anna from Poland, if you know what a godsend you are to me tonight, in my loneliness and distress?"

He looked neither lonely nor distressed; already the change was amazing. A word of friendly conversation had made him a different man. But Anna was wise enough to know that when a young man asks for consolation, one must not tell him how cheerful he looks. Be as sweetly sympathetic as possible. Besides, she was beginning to place him among the gay house party guests. By prodding her memory, she could pigeonhole him as the particular friend of Louise Baldwin—Louise, who at this moment was dancing with some other, but surely no nicer, man.

"Did she refuse to dance with you?" asked Anna with gratifying sympathy. It was a guess entirely safe. When a young man mopes at twilight, even a babe may know that there's a woman at the bottom of it.

"What extraordinary discernment! Woman's intuition, I suppose—or do you know the circumstances of the case?"

"I've just been given the cold shoulder myself. I recognize the symptoms."

"My friend for life!" exclaimed the young man. "Yet it is very hard to believe that one so young and fair as you could possibly have been given the mitten."

"He kissed me once, he kissed me twice and then he rode away. He hasn't even spoken to me for a week and now he's dancing with another lady."

"Another, but none fairer," declared the young gallant. "What do you say to this plan, Anna?—Love has been cruel to us both. While the others dance to jazz music, we mope by the sea. But suppose we pool our sorrows and find consolation together? We are too young to mourn, you and I. Why should we not dance, too? Not more than twenty rods from here I have a handsome six-cylinder steed, champing to carry us far away where lights are bright and hearts are gay."

"You mean on a party?" asked Anna.

"You're a veritable mind reader," said Jim Moore.

Anna accepted Jim's invitation with the same alacrity with which the hook and ladder squad responds to the fire alarm. She raced him the 20 rods to the car and though his long legs gave him unfair advantage she got there only a step behind and they clambered in laughing and breathless.

"Where shall it be then—dancing?"

"Oh, I should adore that!" Anna exclaimed.

"That makes it unanimous" said her host and he stepped on the gas.

The big car shot forward like a pistol shot. This is an adventure, thought Anna, to be off for dancing purposes with a young man unknown an hour ago, and such an attractive young man, who talked as they do in novels, like a chivalrous knight of old, and drove a high powered car! He was not as nice as Harry of course. No one in the world was that nice, but as a lethe for an incurable sorrow, a pastime for an hour, he was satisfactory, this young man of Harry's class and type, handsome, amusing, charming, gay.

As Anna settled back in the low swung seat she tried to appear blase, as though she were accustomed to riding in six cylinder, sport-model monsters that burned up 60 miles an hour with no more effort than a bird.

There was no moon but a million stars lit up the dark dome of the sky. It was late August and clear and cool with the first touch of fall in the air that makes one feel delightfully melancholy, pleasantly sad, as it were. It was a perfect night for confidences and since both were in a sentimental mood and the setting was so romantic there was only one thing to be confidential about. It was Jim that started talking.

"Tell me about this young man of yours, the one who let you down. Is he worth a heart-break? Heartbreaks cost dear. They should not be lightly given."

"He's wonderful!" said Anna. "He's the prince in the fairy tale and I'm the poor peasant maiden upon whom he once smiled. Hence the ending can only be heart breaks, but he's worth it, just to know him. And you, Jim, what is your trouble?"

"Oh, I'm in love with the princess who lives in the marble palace and she's just as inaccessible to me as your prince is to you. I'm going to try to forget her. Why should I sit and weep?"

"But my prince kissed me once," said Anna, "which makes it hard to forget."

"My princess has kissed me dozens of times, but she has kissed so many others that why should I cherish her kisses above those of all the rest?" Jim heaved a sigh like a furnace then burst into a jolly laugh. "See here, you and I are too young to mourn. If our respective loves are cruel, why should we mope about it? There are other fish in the sea. I'm satisfied with the one I caught." He smiled beamingly on Anna.

"Wasn't it funny, it was by the sea."

"Yes, I'd gone there to drown myself, but the water was so awfully cold, and then you came along!" Jim beamed again. "I have a great plan Anna. Let me be your prince for tonight. You could easily be my princess. You make a wonderful one!"

"Would you take me for your princess if you knew that I was really a peasant girl, born with gypsy blood in her veins and therefore not happy in the grainfields who came to America steerage, like any poor immigrant girl, worked in factories clerked in stores and once got put in jail and stumbled on to the Baldwin estate through a series of odd events and have been silly enough to love Harry Baldwin ever since I saw him on the ship?"

Last Meeting Of Board Held

Belleville Cheese Board wound up its business for the current season on Thursday evening when members voted to adjourn until the call of the president and secretary next Spring. Members voted to sell two weeks' cheese over the board with cheese factory presidents being free to sell cheese to the buyer they choose following that date.

Indicative of the fact, that the cheese making season is practically over, fourteen factory salesmen indicated they would have cheese to sell the week following the board, while only three signified they would have cheese the next week.

The usual caretaker's fee of $15 for the season was voted to the caretaker of the city hall for preparing the council room for board meetings. Prior to adjournment Mr. Herb Morton and Secretary Fred Mallory were appointed a committee to act should any emergency affecting the board arise during the closed season. Members were also invited to attend the Central Ontario Cheese Makers' convention to be held in Belleville December 5 and 6.

A total of 1,690 cheese were offered on the board, all selling for the usual 20 cent price.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Nov. 24 —(CP)— Of all four index groups in the early hours on Toronto market today, the industrials showed the main weakness with a drop of .30. Volume was again small at 234,000 shares for the first three hours.

Abitibi 6 per cent preferred encountered active selling on the announcement of the re-organization plan and the price fell back 2½ to 49½. The common dropped ¼. Other papers were steady. The utility issues weakened and the foods and steels were steady. Hiram Walker weakened ½ to 76.

McIntyre, Dome, Pioneer, Beattie, Upper Canada and Central Patricia were among the weak golds. Teck Hughes gained 5 cents, Preston 6 and Transcontinental Resources 3.

Steep Rock fell back 10 cents to 2.75 and Nickel lost ½. In the Western Oils Home had a gain of 5 cents.

WALL ST.

New York, Nov. 24 —(AP)— Stock market customers today returned from their Thanksgiving recess with a little less confidence in the bullish argument and, while scattered favorites attracted mild bids, weakening of recently buoyant aircrafts handicapped buyers generally. Dealings were relatively slow.

Soft spots included Lockheed, Boeing, Douglas Aircraft, United Aircraft and Grumman.

Canadian issues were fractionally lower.

HOGS

Toronto, Nov. 24—(CP)—Prices were unchanged at bacon-hog markets reporting early today. Dressedweight, Grade A, Barrie, London, Hamilton $17.50 delivered; Brantford $17.15 plus transportation; Stratford, to farmers $17.40, to truckers $17.55 delivered; Hull $17.40 delivered.

Hopes 450 Troops Home on Leave Before Christmas

Ottawa, Nov. 24 (CP)—Defence Minister McNaughton said last night in the Commons he hoped 450 troops with long service overseas would be home before Christmas leave.

"That number was set purely by the exigencies of transportation," he continued

"That is the limiting factor. I am in great hopes that we may have larger number and that we can increase them very materially as soon as transportation is available. We are certainly going to do that."

He was answering M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. leader, who asked whether estimates for reinforcements allowed for leave for men who had been in the firing line ever since the invasion of Italy and, more recently, France.

Gen. McNaughton said he was glad the question had been asked as the matter had given him anxious thought.

"Some of our men have been over there five years or more, away from their homes, and we are most anxious that those with such long service should have the rest and comfort that comes from returning to their families," he said.

Answering a question by Joseph Harris (PC—Toronto Danforth), Gen. McNaughton said he did not expect men returning on leave would be able to bring with them wives or families acquired overseas. The whole limitation on the movement was transportation.

SHARK REPELLANT

Washington, Nov. 24 — (AP) — A new shark repellant which has proved "very satisfactory" in experimental tests has been reported by the United States Navy. The chemical is being incorporated into a packet which can be attached to life jackets. It diffuses in the water as an inky fluid offensive to sharks.

Civil Aviation Conference Places Canada in U.S. News Spotlight

By C. R. BLACKBURN
(CP Staff Writer)

Chicago, Nov. 24 —(CP)— Canada has been in the spotlight in the United States to an unusual degree this month, and not only because of the prominence given here to news of the events leading up to this week's special session of parliament.

The Canadian delegation to the International Civil Aviation Conference which opened Nov. 1 has been engaged in a strenuous effort to bring together from widely separated points of determination the United Kingdom and United States delegations.

In that role the Canadians apparently have won the respect and admiration of all delegations of the 54 countries represented here and if the conference is a complete success much of the credit will go to the delegation from Canada.

The struggle has been between the extreme international control of commercial air operations between countries, advocated by the British delegates, and the freedom to engage in open competition through bilateral agreements, proposed by the United States.

Symington in Forefront.

H. J. Symington, hard-headed legal and business executive and head of the Trans-Canada Air Lines, accustomed to the quick, incisive methods of big business, wore himself weary attempting to bring together the suave, diplomatic Adolph Berle, United States Delegation head, and the experienced, politico-diplomat, Viscount Swinton, British Group Leader.

The applause which greeted Mr. Symington's brief rejection of the Berle-Swinton proposal to end the conference without settling the outstanding issues, coming from delegates and spectators alike in a close-packed open plenary session, and speeches which followed, indicated that Canada's determination to put international aviation under adequately controlled competition, and to do it now so that small nations' hopes of participating may be preserved, had the popular support.

Crowded Hotel.

Roofed City: Close to 1,000 delegates, staff and observers of the air conference here work and live in the Stevens Hotel, largest in the world — and are almost lost in it. Another 1,000 delegates to the annual C. I. O. meeting are working and many of them living here. Probably there are 6,000 people in the hotel every day and Walter Thompson, Canadian National Publicity Director, aptly described the hotel as "Times Square with a roof over it."

The "Little Flower": Mayor La Guardia of New York, twitting his own delegation leader, Adolph Berle, and supporting Mr. Symington's demand for a complete job to protect the future of world air commerce, said all that had been agreed on so far was technical detail about flying services. Nobody disagrees about those things he said . . . "Everybody is in favor of better weather and safer flying conditions."

STOLEN BONDS FOUND IN ASHES

Denver, Nov. 23 — (AP)—Harold and Fred Olin, ash haulers, spied a bit of paper protruding from a truckload of ashes. It was a $25 war bond. Sifting the ashes they found 16 more. The bonds had been stolen.

Pembroke, Wales — (CP)—Floods caused widespread damage in west Wales following the heaviest rain and wind storm in history. Three feet of muddy water flowed through some small towns and thousands of fowl were drowned.

MARMORA

Local Chapter Of I.O.D.E. Hears Report of Activities

Marmora — The regular meeting of Marmora Chapter I.O.D.E. was held at the home of Mrs. A. M. Jones on Tuesday evening. The regent, Mrs. D. P. Marett presided. The card party held in Deloro hall on November 20th was reported to be very successful.

The wool convener Mrs. F. R. Wells reported that the last shipment of knitted articles sent to I.O.D.E. headquarters had been acknowledged. The "Echoes" secretary Mrs. G. Murray read an interesting story on Ways and Means and Miss Miriam Savage gave a very instructive reading on "The Endowment Plan." One new application was received and accepted. After discussion, it was decided that the chapter would present a gift to any repatriated service man or woman returning to Marmora, Deloro and vicinity.

The next meeting will be held on December 5th at the home of Mrs. G. Murray.

Our country's flag was brought forward and the meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Nazi Radio Refers To Foreign Theories About Adolf Hitler

London, Nov. 24 — (CP-Reuter)— A spokesman of the German home radio referred today for the first time to foreign theories about Hitler's silence.

"Enemy and neutral papers are still agitated over the fact that the Fuehrer did not speak Nov. 9 as he always used to do," he said.

"The very clear and understandable explanation that work does not permit him to leave his headquarters does not satisfy them.

"They work for mysteries and are pouring out fairies' tales. There has been a lot of mud-slinging but it will not reach Adolf Hitler who stands high above his detractors.

"Whether he talks or remains silent he will always be the centre of interest. He guides history and impresses his stamp on the age."

DIVISION OF TOLLS DISPUTE

Rome, Nov. 23 —(AP)— A dispute over the division of tolls has held up for a week the institution of a radio message service for civilians between Italy and Britain and the United States, and there was no indication today that a settlement was in sight.

New High Total Resources Mark Bank of Montreal Year

Assets in Excess One and One-Half Billion Dollars—Public Deposits Over $1,400,000,000—Strong Position Shown

Showing total resources at a figure higher than in any previous year, the annual statement of the Bank of Montreal, which appears today, is an outstanding illustration of the prosperity prevailing throughout the country, as reflected in the business of the hundreds of offices of the bank which are located in all districts across Canada.

The annual statement, which is the 127th in the history of the bank shows total assets of $1,526,734,000, an increase of $212,898,000 over the previous year.

Deposits at Record

Deposits, which last year stood at $1,205,874,000, the highest figure to that date, increased by $214,937,000 to a total of $1,420,811,000, notwithstanding heavy withdrawals in both the commercial and savings departments by subscribers for investment in Victory Loans.

Strong Position

Cash holdings and money on deposit with the Bank of Canada stand at $184,473,000, an increase of $62,196,000, while holdings of bonds and debentures, the greater portion consisting of Dominion Government and high-grade Provincial and Municipal securities which mature at early dates, have risen by $156,075,000 to the impressive total of $955,538,000. These, with notes of and cheques on other banks and money on deposit with other banks of $87,662,000 with call loans of $51,165,000, which latter increased in the year by $29,000,000, place the quickly available resources of the bank at $1,279,000,000, equal to 88.30% of all liabilities to the public.

Profits

Profits for the year which ended October 31, after deduction of taxes payable to the Dominion Government, amounted to $3,194,300.19, a figure less by $108,534 than in the previous year. The decrease in profits is, no doubt, a reflection of the generally lower interest return which is being received by banks upon loans and in investment account, as well as substantially higher operating costs combined with an increased total of interest payable to depositors upon a substantially higher volume of deposits in the savings department. The profit represents a return of 4.10% on the shareholders' equity, which compares with 4.30% a year ago and 4.31% in 1942. Dominion Government Income and Excess Profits taxes estimated for the year have been provided for in an amount of $3,725,000, this comparing with an adjusted amount in the previous year of $5,112,194. This adjusted figure of the previous year's taxes is covered in a footnote to the present statement which explains that "the Minister of Finance has expressed the opinion that the transfers made in 1943 to Contingent Reserve Fund from the earnings of this bank were in excess of the reasonable requirements of the bank." The footnote then explains that the management and auditors of the Bank do not agree with the Minister in this matter but, having been advised of the Minister's views and of his purpose to act in accordance therewith, the bank has estimated that approximately $2,200,000 of such transfers must be added to income of that year for tax purposes. The footnote adds that as a result the bank will be called upon to pay additional taxes for the year 1943 of a like amount under the Income Tax and Excess Profits Tax Acts. It is further stated that provision has been made from Contingent Reserve Fund for this tax liability, of which twenty per cent, or $440,000, will be refundable under the provisions of the Excess Profits Tax Act.

From the net profits of the year ended October 31 last of $3,194,300.19, there was distributed to shareholders in dividends $2,160,000, and a sum of $500,000 is written off bank premises, these amounts being the same as in the previous year. After these deductions is left a balance of $534,300.19, which added to the previous balance in profit and loss account of $1,879,521.13, makes an amount to be carried forward in this account of $2,413,821.32.

THE POLICE WEREN'T FOOLING

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 23 —(AP) Police squad cars were ordered on the alert for a "car full of youths packing a pistol." Patrolmen spotted the car and, with drawn guns, crowded it to the curb with orders for the boys to come out with hands up. They did, trembling, and surrendered a toy pistol. The three were en route to a high school fraternity initiation, with the pistol part of the act there.

'Definite Action' Forecast In Telephone Strike

Washington, Nov. 24 — (AP) — "Definite action" in a spreading strike of women telephone operators was forecast for late today as the Ohio-born walkout spread to Washington and war-busy Detroit.

Almost simultaneously Miss Jeannette Reedy, vice-president of the striking Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers, was disclosed to have wired union associates from Washington that prospects for settling the dispute today were good.

A spokesman for economic stabilization director Fred Vinson predicted the action here without hinting what it might be. Mr. Vinson, however, usually routes unsolved labor disputes to the White House. Only President Roosevelt can order government seizure.

A settlement would forestall Federal government action.

A. J. Krug, War Production Board chairman who last night conferred with Robert G. Pollock, president of the Ohio Federation today was reported closeted with army officials. The army presumably would take over the struck exchanges in the event of a seizure order.

In Washington company officials said its long distance switchboards were "about two-thirds" covered. They added that calls were light, even for a holiday.

The strike everywhere was orderly. It had little effect on the public generally, because most cities affected have automatic dial systems. These do not require operators.

The Washington and Detroit strikes began formally at 6 a.m.

ONTARIO GOVT. TO CUT EDUCATION COST 50 P.C.

FRENCH PINCERS CLOSING ON TRAPPED NAZIS

Notices Being Sent To School Boards Explaining Details

'Enormous Variation' On Assessment in Localities

Toronto, Nov. 25 — (CP) — The Ontario government in 1945 will assume 50 per cent of the gross cost of education in Ontario, Premier Drew told the annual dinner of the public school trustees and ratepayers association last night that on Dec. 15 the government is sending notices to school boards, explaining the system under which the province takes over half the cost.

Premier Drew did not discuss details, except to say that "the amount to be paid to each school board will assure as far as possible equality of educational opportunity throughout the whole of Ontario."

"There are those who seem to think that this has been a very simple problem," said the premier. "I need not tell you how difficult it actually is. Quite apart from the solution of this particular problem however it is important that the people of Ontario know some of the reasons for this difficulty."

The Premier then reviewed the educational set-up in Ontario, stressing that there are 5,527 school boards "hardly any two of which have exactly the same local problems." He also mentioned an "enormous variation" on the assessment in the various localities.

"It is doubtful if any similar number of people in the world have anything approaching that number of administrative units of education," he said. "In England and Wales there were up to this year 461 administrative units carrying out the educational system for more than 40,000,000 people."

Premier Drew remarked on the large number of township areas formed this year, 1,419 school sections having been combined to form 61 township areas. "I hope the advantage of these larger administrative units will become apparent and that next year a very much larger number will be formed," he added.

He also made brief reference to introduction of religious education in the schools and said there was no thought of having anything in the nature of denominational teaching. "The wholehearted support we have received throughout the province has been most encouraging," he said.

RUSSIANS CLEAR GERMANS FROM GULF OF RIGA

London, Nov. 25 (CP) — Russian amphibious forces virtually eliminated the possibility of sea escape for thirty German divisions being pressed against the Baltic in western Latvia today by completing conquest of the fortified Estonian island of Saare (Osel) and gaining control of the Gulf of Riga.

Saare, only 17 miles across the mouth of the gulf from Latvia, fell yesterday after a two months' siege and Red airmen sank four enemy warships offshore and damaged four others, including a heavy cruiser, Moscow announced.

Berlin declared the Russians had begun a huge new offensive against the German troops pocketed in Latvia, making gains of undisclosed depth along a 50-mile front between Lielauce, 70 miles east of the Baltic port of Liepaja, and Priekule, 20 miles from Liepaja.

Berlin said the Russians were using heavily-reinforced tanks, planes and artillery forces in an effort to crush the Latvia pocket and release hundreds of thousands of troops for a drive on East Prussia.

New Gains Recorded

The Moscow bulletin said new gains were made by Red army units in eastern Czechoslovakia and Hungary. The Berlin radio acknowledged a German retreat in Slovakia, west of Ungvar.

Gen. Ivan Petrov's 4th. Ukraine army troops yesterday seized nine localities on the 25-mile front west of Ungvar, Moscow said, and with the capture of Monca, nine miles southwest of Ungvar, were within 35 miles of Kassa.

Berlin reported that Russian troops, crossing an eastern arm of the Danube south of Budapest for a landing on narrow Csepel Island, had advanced four miles and reached Tokol, a town on the western shore of the island seven miles south of the Magyar capital.

Moscow has not confirmed this operation, but yesterday's communique said Soviet troops fighting at the northern approaches of Budapest had captured the village of Bag, 15 miles northeast of the capital.

The rifle jammed, but policeman Harry De Cotton, equal to the emergency, pulled his pistol and fired. The skunk was dead all right. It was stuffed.

CONFIDENCE VOTE MAY BE ASKED BY PREMIER KING

Conservatives Will Move Amendment Asking for Total Conscription

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Nov. 25 —(CP)— Members of parliament today looked back on three days of political excitement with the uneasy feeling that the tensity of discussions in the Commons next week will be just as great.

On Monday, Prime Minister Mackenzie King will ask what amounts to a vote of confidence when he moves that the House declare it "will aid the government in its policy of maintaining a vigorous war effort."

An amendment to this motion may be moved by the Progressive Conservative Opposition, asking the House declare itself in favor of total conscription which would make all the 60,000 effectives in the home defence army available for overseas service.

By an order-in-council announced on Thursday, authorization was given the sending overseas of 16,000 men now in the home defence army.

Yesterday, Defence Minister McNaughton, a guest in the House where he as yet has no seat, continued his explanation of policies he plans to follow.

He said that remarks he had made on Thursday had been interpreted in some quarters as meaning that he intended to use general service men overseas even if they were not as well trained as home defence army troops. That impression was wrong.

"What I desired to convey was that I hoped National Resources Mobilization Act men would volunteer for general service soon enough and in large enough numbers so that it would not be necessary to send them overseas by compulsion," he said.

Authority had been given for the dispatch overseas of 16,000 N.R.M.A. men and this power would be used to the extent that adequately trained men, whether now in the N.R.M.A. or not, do not come forward as volunteers sufficiently rapidly to meet the numbers required.

First 10,000 Called

The units to comprise the first 10,000 of the N.R.M.A. for dispatch had been selected and would shortly be moving to concentration areas in Eastern Canada.

"The men who wish to volunteer will be given every opportunity to do so," he continued. "The others, the whole units, including those men, will be dispatched on the dates which at the present time are being arranged.

"The 16,000 that are to go in December, January and the succeeding three months are to be taken out of the N.R.M.A.?" asked J. R. MacNicol (P.C.-Toronto Davenport).

Gen. McNaughton: "That is right, sir. There will be included a few other personnel, naturally, because the officers are not in that category. There are officers and N.C.O.'s who are general service and must go with them."

The House yesterday still was restless and noisy.

The voices of members rose high when Wilfrid LaCroix, member for Quebec Montmorency rose at the opening of the sitting, said he opposed the conscription policy and crossed the floor.

Third to Leave Ranks

He was the third to leave the Liberal ranks since the overseas conscription order was announced. Others are J. F. Pouliot (Temiscouata) and Charles Parent (Quebec West).

Mr. King announced he had received the resignation of Air Minister Power, a Quebec cabinet member, but he did not wish to recommend its acceptance to the Governor-General until he had considered the matter further.

Gen. McNaughton said in answering questions that the movement overseas of N.R.M.A. troops was in essence based on the sending of the best trained personnel in infantry that could be dispatched up to the numbers for which transportation could be obtained.

"Therefore I do not think there is any invidious discrimination in the choice of individuals," he added.

Several Hundred Zombies Stage Protest Parade in B.C.

Vernon, B. C., Nov. 25 — (CP) — Soldiers from Vernon military camp in the rugged British Columbia interior staged last night the first anti-conscription demonstration in Canada by uniformed men since the Dominion Government was authorized Thursday to send drafted home defence, or "Zombie" troops to the fighting fronts of Europe and the Mediterranean.

For an hour — the men — estimated variously to number from 300 to 900 — paraded four abreast through the streets of Vernon, 200 miles northeast of Vancouver, shouting "down with conscription," and "conscript wealth and industry as well as manpower."

At one point of the parade, some of the marchers shouted to civilians standing by silently on the curb that "This is only the beginning." The soldiers threatened to "tear down" the new Canadian Legion hall here.

One Violent Incident

The demonstration was marked by one incident of violence before the marchers were dispersed by military and city police and ordered back to their camp at the end of a "meeting of protest" in a Vernon park. There were no arrests.

The incident occurred at a main street intersection. An unidentified captain and lieutenant stepped into the middle of the road and confronted the leaders of the parade. The two officers strode into the front ranks, urging the men to 'break it up.' The captain was struck down by one of the soldiers and the lieutenant was pushed roughly aside. The captain suffered minor facial injuries.

Ninety per cent of the soldiers stationed here are home defence personnel called up under National Resources Mobilization Act regulations. The majority are English-speaking with a sprinkling of French-speaking troops. No French-speaking units are stationed at the camp.

Military Decline Comment

Military and city police patrolled the streets for hours after the outbreak on the lookout for signs of any further demonstration but all was quiet.

Military officials here declined to comment and all that a spokesman at Pacific Command headquarters in Vancouver would say for the moment was that, "I believe a captain did get pushed about a bit, but there was no further trouble."

It was the third anti-conscription demonstration in the country since the conscripts-for-overseas order was announced. In a civilian demonstration Thursday night at Quebec, a few hours after the announcement at Ottawa, about 700 youths and university students paraded through the streets of French Canada's ancient capital shouting "Down with conscription," and tearing down bulletin boards in front of the city's English daily paper, The Quebec Chronicle-Telegraph.

Union Jack Torn Down

In Chicoutimi, Quebec, yesterday a Union Jack was torn from its staff at the end of a half-hour demonstration by several hundred youths.

Last night's parade here started in the camp, in the absence of their commanding officers, all attending a military investigation into statements by officers at a press conference in Vancouver last Monday, the men gathered in the camp and marched off to town.

Brig. G. R. McCarter, the commanding officer of a brigade of English-speaking draftees stationed here, and Lt.-Col. John MacGregor, V.C., officer commanding Vernon Camp, are attending an inquiry in Vancouver under Lt.-Gen. E. W. Sansom.

Slated for Overseas

The hour-long demonstration was the first indication of the sentiments of the Canadian 6th. Division, largely composed of draftees and stationed entirely in British Columbia, and which Ottawa spokesmen have indicated will be among the first groups of home defence troops to be sent overseas under the new partial conscription policy of the government.

The parade had only a small beginning, but it swelled in numbers as it wound its way among huts and administration buildings to the camp and converged on the town. The draftees marched through the main streets while groups of civilians, curious but silent, and a scattering of non-participating soldiers lined the curbs.

The marchers stopped briefly in front of the Legion hall, threatened to tear it down, and, after the short episode involving the officers, continued to the park to hold their protest meeting. On the way, some soldiers shouted to the crowds gathered along the streets, "this is only the beginning," and others yelled "blame the government."

The parade started after the soldiers had listened in camp to news broadcasts reporting the government's probable intention to use men of the 6th. Division as reinforcements for Canada's overseas army.

A high-ranking officer-spokesman at the press conference now being investigated by Gen. Sansom said men of the 6th. Division were highly trained troops who would need only a short refresher course in Britain before being ready for front-line duty.

British Patrols Force Germans To Withdraw

Rome, Nov. 25 —(AP)— Armored British 8th Army patrols have reached a suburb of Faenza and have forced the Germans to withdraw from their positions along the Cosina river four miles southeast of the Bologna-Rimini highway town, Allied Headquarters announced today.

Fanning out from the Cosina river bridgehead, one British force cut to the northeast, put a block on Highway 9 and pressed on, reaching Corleto.

A second thrust moved northwest along Highway 9 and advance units reached the Faenza suburb of Borgo Durbecco.

A military spokesman said that this autumn had been the wettest on record in Italy, with most of the fighting fronts veritable quagmires.

To the left of the British thrust, Polish troops cleared all enemy resistance east of the river Samoggia and gained the heights of Monte Chiesuola. Other 8th Army troops took a hill at Castellaccio.

Enemy attacks at infiltration along the Allied 5th Army front were repulsed.

EDUCATION DURING WAR

Ottawa, Nov. 25. (CP)—Because of regimentation necessary to save civilization liberal education has been "to a very considerable degree on the sidelines during the war", Dr. Sidney Smith, principal of University College and president-elect of Toronto University, said last night.

Speaker of House Would Have Suppressed Speech

Ottawa, Nov. 25 —(CP)— Speaker J. A. Glen said on Friday in the Commons that remarks by Wilfred LaCroix, member for Quebec Montmorency, before he crossed the floor from the Liberal benches, should be expunged from the record and no publicity of any kind should be given them by the press.

Speaker Glen spoke after Prime Minister Mackenzie King moved the words of Mr. LaCroix be expunged from the record. Because of noise in the House at the time, Mr. King said he had been unable to follow what Mr. LaCroix was saying. Later, he obtained from Hansard a copy of the words used and they should not be allowed in debate.

Mr. LaCroix had referred to the government policy on conscription for overseas as "treason" (trahison) to Quebec, and made it appear as if the government leader had betrayed someone, said Mr. King.

To maintain the dignity of the House, the words should not be printed in the record, Mr. King said. Both Mr. LaCroix's words and his own (the Prime Minister's) references to them should be expunged. He was not taking the words of Mr. LaCroix as a reflection on himself but on the House.

Mr. LaCroix might have been asked to apologize and, if he failed to do so, he might have been suspended. But at this time Mr. King said he did not feel like moving such action. But if such a situation occurred again he would ask for suspension.

CENTRAL TOKYO LEFT IN FLAMES BY SUPERFORTS

Industrial Section of Japan's Capital Still Burning Hours After Bombers Home

Saipan, Nov. 25 (AP) — Mighty superfortress bombers left industrial sections of Central Tokyo in flames as American commanders today proclaimed the historic bombing the opening blow of a relentless campaign to knock out Japan's war plants.

Flying 3,000 miles round-trip from Saipan bases captured only five months ago, the armada flew high above the capital at more than 400 miles an hour yesterday and placed their bombs with deadly skill.

Reconnaissance photographs showed fires still burning several hours later with smoke rising to great heights.

Two of the superforts were acknowledged lost in this first land-based raid on Tokyo, a city of nearly 7,000,000.

(Tokyo radio last night broadcast an imperial communique claiming five of the raiders were shot down and nine others damaged, and dismissed the attack as ineffective.)

The bombers funnelled a substantial portion of their bombloads on the Musashino aircraft plant, a principal supplier of Japan's army and navy planes. Other choice targets were ripped and razed.

Lt.-Gen. Millard S. Harmon, interviewed at Saipan, said, "we have the whole of Japan under our bombsights now."

Harmon, deputy commander of the 20th. Air Force, added:

"The time is not far now when Japan will be subjected to the combined efforts of air units based from Alaska through the Philippines and over China—a ring of air effort focussed on the imperial empire."

In Washington, Gen. H. H. Arnold, commander of the Twentieth Air Force, said "Tokyo's war industries have been badly hurt by a blow made possible by the Americans who fought and died for the Marianas." He said Japan would be hit from two sides by American bombers based in China and on Saipan.

Japs 'Poorest Specimen Of Man on Earth Today' Says Vice Admiral

San Diego, Calif., Nov. 25—(AP)—Voicing his "utter contempt of the Japanese as a race," Vice Admiral Marc A. Mitscher, task force 58 commander, said yesterday "They are the poorest specimen of man on this earth today, and I have had an opportunity to compare them with the so-called head hunters of the Solomons."

By-Elections In Four Ridings

Ottawa, Nov. 25 — (CP)—By-elections have been called for April 23 in the four Federal ridings of Montreal St. James, Kenora-Rainy River, Weyburn and Sherbrooke, Jules Castonguay, chief electoral officer announced today.

In the two Quebec constituencies —Montreal St. James and Sherbrooke — nominations will be held April 16 while in the western constituencies — Kenora-Rainy River and Weyburn — nominations will precede the elections by two weeks, being held April 9.

FIRST TURKEY THEN PHEASANT

Chicago, Nov. 25 — (AP)—Members of the Harry J. Recks family were partaking of turkey Thanksgiving Day when a three-pound cock pheasant crashed through their kitchen window and landed on the stove. Recks quickly substituted an ax for his fork, repaired to the chopping block outside, and then rejoined his family turkey dinner. Today the Recks will eat pheasant.

Only Eight Miles Separate Columns In Colmar Area

Greatest Battle of West Front on Cologne Plain

By WILLIAM FRYE
(A. P. Staff Writer)

London, Nov. 25 (AP)—The Paris radio said today that French forces were moving toward a junction between virtually liberated Strasbourg and Colmar to the south, swinging shut a trap on German troops in the Vosges mountains.

While the Germans were using every means to pull back across the Rhine to the homeland in the south, the savage resistance of 10 or 12 Nazi divisions in the Aachen sector held the advance of three Allied armies to a slow crawl, but the British 2nd and U.S. 9th and 1st armies fought on foot-by-foot on the flooded flatlands of the Cologne plain.

There an Allied staff officer described every creek crossing as "almost an amphibious operation." The furious resistance was resulting in the greatest battle of the western front.

British 2nd army troops, after losing Hoven and yielding some ground south of Beeck, north and east of Geilenkirchen, held firmly against waves of counter-attacking enemy troops and a hail of artillery fire, and clung firmly to the high ground overlooking Wurm.

House-to-House Fighting

U. S. 1st Army troops fought their way house-by-house into the outskirts of Weisweiler, 6 1/2 miles southwest of Julich, the Roer river stronghold barring the advance to Cologne, 25 miles away.

Bourheim, two miles southwest of Julich, was cleared completely by the U. S. 9th Army late yesterday, a front dispatch said.

The German radio said the Allied attack flared with new intensity today between Geilenkirchen and Julich, with the Americans throwing in heavy new tank formations at Gereonsweiler.

In Strasbourg French armored forces were battling at close quarters to smash the Germans from their last dockfront stand guarding a big Rhine bridge to Germany.

The Paris radio said other French armored units ranging along the west bank of the Rhine from Strasbourg were within eight miles of a meeting with advance units of the French 1st Army surging down the Rhine from Colmar, 38 miles south of Strasbourg. The broadcast said the French and Germans were fighting in the streets of Colmar.

A front dispatch yesterday said Allied patrols were reported to have thrust across the Rhine from Strasbourg, but there was no official confirmation and no further report.

Two divisions of American infantry broadened the Alsatian corridor and beat off a German counter-attack northwest of the Saverne Gap north of Strasbourg.

Steady Progress Reported

The Allied Supreme headquarters communique reported steady progress toward clearing the enemy from the Saales Pass in the Vosges north of Colmar, and off the slopes of the commanding, round-topped mountain called the Balloon D' Alsace north of Belfort.

An admission that German lines in the Central Vosges were "taken back at several points" came from the Berlin radio.

In the Mulhouse region between Colmar and Belfort the enemy was resisting desperately, with isolated battles raging around a number of towns. The Germans clung to strongpoints and the French advance surged around and past them.

In southeastern Holland British troops closing in on the Maas (Meuse) River citadel of Venlo advanced up to 3,000 yards through heavily-mined mud flats.

British infantry captured Maashees on the Meuse 15 miles north of Venlo, and seized the villages of Wanssum and Tienraij south of Maashees. The tommies advanced to within 4 1-2 miles north of Venlo.

Lt.-Gen. Dempsey's troops were fighting their way into the enemy's major perimeter of defences before Venlo, and only a thin finger of Germans remained on the western bank of the Maas.

On the central portion of the western front the U.S. 3rd Army had won a crossing of the rain-swollen Saar, last big barrier to the Rhine, at a point 26 miles south of Saarbrucken.

AMERICAN PLANES DESTROY JAPANESE RELIEF CONVOY

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Nov. 25 (AP)—A four-ship convoy carrying reinforcements for the embattled Japanese on Leyte Island has been destroyed by American fighter planes and an estimated 2,500 of the enemy were killed or drowned, a communique announced today.

The Leyte-based planes, strafing at mast height and acting as dive-bombers, sank three transports and a destroyer escort, bringing to about 15,000 the number of Japanese perishing in attempts to reach the island fighting scene.

In a bombing attack on the Celebes and Borneo, an enemy destroyer and a transport were sunk, and a gunboat and 11 freighters damaged, Gen. MacArthur reported. Twenty-six Japanese fighters and bombers were destroyed on the ground.

Improved weather conditions quickened the battle tempo, and encouraged the Japanese to increased air activity, with the result that 42 enemy planes were shot down, 35 by American planes and seven by anti-aircraft batteries.

"Our own losses were very light," Gen MacArthur said.

On the ground the Americans were doing well. A headquarters communique said the 32nd infantry division had crossed the Leyte river south of Limon, which fell Wednesday, and was showing southward. A counter-attack by the Japanese 26th division "which has now been fully committed southwest of Limon" was repulsed, the communique reported.

Easier Trend In Egg Prices

Reflecting the trend of markets in the larger centres, price of eggs took a decided drop on the Saturday produce market with grade "A" retailing generally at 45 cents the dozen, mediums at 42 cents and pullets at 37. Several vendors, however, asked a lower price of 42 cents for first and 40 cents for mediums.

CONFIDENCE VOTE

Applies to All

Hon. R. B. Hanson (PC — York Sunbury) said he had heard that officers commanding were telling draftees that if they did not volunteer they would not receive rehabilitation grants.

Veterans Minister Mackenzie said that legislation provided that all rehabilitation benefits applied to draftees as well as volunteers, with the exception that they would not be entitled to war service gratuity if they remained in Canada. There would be no discrimination against draftees going overseas with respect to any benefit.

Mr. King said he did not see why the draftee should not be informed of advantages he would get if he became a volunteer.

Gen. McNaughton said that instructions had been issued that the question of volunteering was to be a matter of considerate explanation to draftees.

N. J. M. Lockhart (L—Lincoln) said he had been told a draftee was asked roughly why he had not joined up before and whether he was afraid of the dark or was he yellow.

Gen. McNaughton said he would like to hear specific instances of such actions and if there was justice in such complaints the men injured would receive every justice and rectification.

Urges Closing Of Unsanitary Creameries

Toronto, November 25 — Gasoline stations in Ontario are a great deal more sanitary than some of the province's creameries, Mackenzie Robertson of Belleville told the Ontario Creamery Association in convention here yesterday. He appealed for a clean-up if the industry hoped to retain public confidence.

The Association had just decided to study a proposal to limit opening of new creameries, believing unnecessary creameries might not be in the best interests of producers. Advocating closing up unneeded and unsanitary units, Mr. Robertson, who is the Association's first president, urged closer restriction and greater emphasis on cleanliness.

Cleanliness Standard.

"It is high time," he said, "that we, as dairymen, producing food and particularly butter, at least should try to attain a standard of cleanliness equal to our gasoline stations throughout the province. We buy gasoline to burn but we buy butter to eat. The gasoline stations are a great deal more sanitary and cleaner than some of our creameries." And, he said, the small creameries were not the only offenders.

It may be advisable after the war to retain some wartime regulations as beneficial to the industry, the Association felt, and a committee will study this suggestion. Action on the 48-hour week legislation which eventually will affect Ontario creameries was deferred, James N. Allen stating that the industry is not opposed to it but is concerned only with consideration of its application.

J. O. Herity Marks Twentieth Year Of Unbroken Rotary Attendance

What might be a Dominion record in service club attendance will be established here on Monday if nothing prevents Mr. J. O. Herity from attending the regular weekly luncheon of the Rotary Club.

For on that day, the dean of city service clubmen will mark his twentieth consecutive year of unbroken attendance with the Rotarians.

This does not necessarily mean that Mr. Herity has attended the meetings of the Belleville club for that period of time. He has, however, during his wide travels as District Governor and on private business, attended Rotary meetings in other cities and towns.

While not a charter member of the club, Mr. Herity became a member in June, 1920, three months following the award of the charter to the club here. He missed five meetings in the year following and for matter of record has missed only two meetings during the past twenty-two years.

He was elected president of the club for the fiscal Rotary year of 1927-28 and in 1939-40 was appointed Governor of Rotary District 168 comprising approximately 35 clubs. District 168 was a part of the division of the old district 27th which became too large and unwieldly.

Mr. Herity has the distinction of holding, besides his active membership in Rotary, honorary memberships in the Kiwanis Club and the Y'smen Club when the latter was functioning. He maintains his membership with the Kiwanians.

A well - known after - dinner speaker, he has earned just renown with his oratory in not only the far-flung sections of Rotary District 168 but in other parts of Canada as well. Recently he returned from Excelsior Springs, Mo., where he represented Canada on a special Rotary International Committee.

Urges Intelligent Approach To Post-War China 'A Country More Democratic Than Allies'

Dr. John C. Ferguson, New York, Former Albert College Student, Gives Brilliant Address at Chamber of Commerce Banquet

"The approach of the western nations to China after the war must be on a wide, broadminded and intelligent basis, for China after all, is more democratic than we", Dr. John C. Ferguson, M.A., LL.D., New York, former adviser to the Chinese National Government and a native son of Tyendinaga Township, Hastings County, declared here last night.

Speaking at the annual banquet of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce to a cross section of the city and county's business, industrial, professional and governmental life, the distinguished guest, who is author, lecturer and educator, figuratively warned his listeners not to sell China short.

"We must ally ourselves with those of China who are friends of the type of life we represent and allow them to work out their own problems", he said. "China will not stand for misgovernment. Most of the criticism now being levelled at her is more or less deserved. We shall not be able to eradicate the evil. China will do that herself. There is one thing we can count on up to the day of final victory—and that is the support of the Chinese people".

Terming China "the most democratic nation that ever existed", Dr. Ferguson said her main desire was to be free. The Chinese paid great tributes to Emperors and officials in ceremonies etc., but if they interfered with individual or collective liberties, no more allegiance was sworn to them.

"The Chinese never needed a Magna Charta. They were always independent and stood up for individual rights. Incidents such as the Boxer Movement and the Nanking Ravages are part of movements stirred up by leaders who said the trouble came from foreign influence. In reality it was the free spirit of the Chinese asserting itself".

Japan tried an Imperialistic scheme to put China under military control he said. Had she approached the matter in a friendly way, Japan might have succeeded, but she will never conquer China. Although practically all occupied now by the enemy, her spirit is unbroken and her military needs will be attended to by the Allies.

Asset or Liability.

Querying as to whether China is an an asset or a liability, Dr. Ferguson urged his listeners to remember that on the side of the assets she has steadily been on the same side during and since the last war, and that side is fighting for liberty for the people.

"She has furnished airfields for the Allies and by sending troops to the southwestern provinces and Burma, her influence kept the Japanese from centring their main attack on East India and Ceylon".

Her manpower is always an asset, the speaker asserted, adding that "it would be used when the time comes. Chinese manpower properly trained may be the deciding point against Japan, but they need training and equipment to become this turning asset.

The war against Japan is a major undertaking, he warned, and "not a secondary affair which may be placed to one side and attended to whenever the Allies find time. . . . "Perhaps" Dr. Ferguson said, significantly "the war with Japan may take a longer time for completion than that with Germany".

The Chinese have maintained a steady resistance against Japanese troops and have kept busy large enemy forces which could have been used against the Allies. This has been one of the assets with which relations with China should be credited.

Co-operation Impossible.

"A large group of Chinese who trained here are on our side, while a similar group who trained in Japan years ago find co-operation with the Japs impossible due to their master and servant attitude.

China can also be a liability, Dr. Ferguson pointed out. She needs help along all lines—supplies, equipment and training for her soldiers. She also needs that inspiration necessary to offset the spirit of defeatism which she feels because she has lost all her major battles.

"But this spirit," the speaker added, "has been offset to a large extent by the serenity of her people. They are accustomed to disaster. She has taken defeat, humiliation and her war horrors even better than the famous British people. She has never lost her spirit and is determined to go on to the end which she believes will be victorious."

New Individuals.

Reviewing what he termed the "evolution of China" Dr. Ferguson who incidentally was repatriated to Canada from China on the Gripsholm in December, 1943, after living there since 1887, said a new order of life came with the advent of schools. Now a new type of individual has come to the front through open mindedness and willingness to learn from the outside world.

"The cost China paid in humiliation by the western nations is being well repaid by the ease with which she has moved into this new type of life."

In this oldest nation from antiquity to the present, there has been little change in ordinary life for the past 2,000 years. Empires of Rome, Greece, Mesopotamia and Spain have come and gone but there has been a continuous live government in China for the past 4,000 years. It is a marvellous nation but so populous that it has been difficult to stir itself and adapt itself to a new life. "China will live to see our rise and fall as she has seen others in the course of the ages."

New Era.

In 1911 a period of renaissance saw the fall of the Manchu dynasty. Imperial glories passed away. "A republican government started in error, had the impetus to go on, and tried to build a new type of life that was really a castle in Spain.

"China was urged to co-operate in 1914 with Japan and fight for the Allies. Thus it is that since 1911 there has grown a generation who has never known what an orderly government meant. Chinese people under 35 at present have never known what it is to live as we live now. Is it any wonder then as to the present conditions in China? This generation has not known peace but is accustomed to the vicissitudes of constant changes."

In July, 1937, when the Japs sought to conquer China and use her as a springboard for the conquest of the Far East, Dr. Ferguson was celebrating his golden wedding when the Japs marched in. The Chinese, however, allowed nothing to interfere with the celebration. After Pearl Harbor, things changed. The Japs took control and the Fergusons were confined. Finally they were able to get home on an exchange basis.

In his early remarks, Dr. Ferguson who was described by Dr. Bert Howard in his introduction of the speaker as the most "brilliant student of Albert College" said his mind was flooded with delightful memories.

"In this Tabernacle Church," he said, "I was present when the cornerstone was laid. I was here at the opening service. And here I attended the funeral services of my father and mother.

Roots Are Deep.

"I feel that my roots have struck deep in this community. As one who has lived his life abroad, and as an old student of Albert College, I am grateful for all its influences, and the Christian influence it imparted to my own home. The benign influences of the college have spread through its students to all parts of the world."

The distinguished speaker was introduced by Dr. Bert Howard, Albert College principal, who outlined the life of Dr. Ferguson. "Among his many honors," he said, "are the Order of the Dragon and the French Legion of Honor."

Audience appreciation was aptly expressed by Mr. Charles Dolan. "For many years", he said, "I have been coming to banquets and, like many others, have waited to hear the address I wanted, and the man I wanted to give it, speak. Tonight I have heard both. I have heard an address that was outstanding in its bigness and its simplicity."

President Clare B. Morgan, of the Chamber of Commerce presided for the banquet held in the Sunday School Rooms of Tabernacle United Church. He officially welcomed the guests and paid tribute to Secretary Owen Herity for his efforts in assisting rural residents during the harvest. "We are community builders in places other than the city," he said.

President Morgan introduced the head table guests including Miss Mary Ferguson, who is in charge of all relief going to China; Mayor and Mrs. Harry Rollins, Mrs. Morgan, R. D. Arnott and Mrs. Arnott; Roscoe and Mrs. Robson; J. O. Herity, W A. and Mrs. Morrison, Mrs. Doris Burgoyne, Miss Leona Riggs, and others.

Toast to County

Proposing the toast to the County of Hastings, Mayor Rollins paid striking tribute to its township of Huntingdon, which he said produced such men as Herb. Morton, Owen Herity, Jim Haggerty, Roscoe Robson and others. Styling Hastings, the greatest county in the world, he eulogised the great part it was playing in not only sending its sons and daughters overseas, but maintaining a constant supply of foodstuffs. Together with the sister county of Prince Edward, it had led in enlistments. Its Victory Loan accomplishments were a tribute to its people. He proposed a toast to a county with a "great past, present and future."

Mr. Roscoe Robson, M. P. P., expressed the appreciation of the rural residents of the county to the Chamber of Commerce for its assistance during the year, in his response to the toast. He took pride, he said, in the fact that so many of Hastings' sons were being decorated for gallantry in the war. In appreciation of what the city has done for the rural people, Mr. Robson hoped to repay the kindness by facilitating road travel to the vacation spots of the north country for urban sportsmen. Hastings, he said, had finished second this year in cheese production but hoped she would regain her proper place at the head of producers next year.

Mr. R. D. Arnott, M. P. P., paid sincere tribute to the memory of the late Dr. Harold Welsh, and also stated he was proud to be associated with Mr. Robson, who, he said, was an able legislator.

He sounded a note of warning inasmuch as he did not want to see Canadians lose their individual liberties any more than the Chinese refused to give them up. "We are all proud of this county and of its records of service, manpower and response to appeals.

"Now is the time," he concluded, "if we are to be true to our heritage, to leave aside personal feelings along political and religious lines, and let calm sound counsel prevail. Let there be calm heads, judgment and hearts before any rash decisions are made. Thousands of Canadians are fighting overseas to preserve Canadian democracy. Let us have calm heads to save that democracy for them when they come home."

A Bit of Humor

As Mr. Arnott sat down, Mr. Herity rose to his feet and charged Mayor Rollins with forgetting a very important son of the county in his reference to Huntingdon Township's sons. "I am speaking of our distinguished guest. Dr. Ferguson, who was born in Tyendinaga the home of those two fighting nations, the Irish and the Mohawks."

Had to be Smart.

Mr. Dolan also injected some typical humor when he remarked that he agreed with Dr. Howard's statement that the speaker was a clever student and had matriculated at the age of fourteen. "Any Scotch Protestant who lived and survived among the Irish Catholics of Tyendinaga just had to be smart," he said, amid laughter.

On motion of Mr. R. J. S. Dewar, ten new members were accepted by the Chamber, and were welcomed by Mr. Howard Clarke. These included Messrs. Aubrey Coe; E. H. Hodgins; John H. Haig; Nick Chaggares; S. L. Joss; Dr. A. C. Locke; Messrs. Gordon Robertson; Benjamin Safe; Horace Wright and Abe Simon.

The musical part of the program was outstanding. Vocal solos were contributed by Mrs. Doris Burgoyne and Flt. Lt. I. R. Westmacott, Vancouver, possessors of a splendid tenor voice. Accompaniment was played by Miss Lenora Riggs. The two ladies were afterwards presented with flower corsages by Mrs. C. B. Morgan. Community singing was led by Harold Carruthers.

In closing, President Morgan expressed the unanimous appreciation of the assemblage to Mrs. Embury, head of the ladies organization of Tabernacle Church who supplied the edibles for the banquet.

Pte. Nelson Kiser Suffers Injuries By Land Mine

Despite the fact that he was the only one of his immediate party to come out "in one piece" following the explosion of a hidden German land mine on the Netherlands front, Pte. Nelson Kiser, 29, College Hill, did not come off entirely unscathed.

According to word received by his wife, the former Edaline Ross, he is in hospital in England suffering from lacerated face wounds and rupture of both ear drums. Date of the action was given as Nov. 4, with a more recent letter having been received giving details. He and several others had run on the mine while on operations.

Son of Mrs. George Garrison, Pte. Kiser went to Prince of Wales School and prior to his joining the army worked at the local Coca Cola plant as a checker. Joining the army as infantry support in November, 1943, he trained at Kingston, Camp Borden and Nova Scotia before going overseas in May of this year. He has two children, a girl, aged three, and a young son. Mrs. Wilbert Kiser and Mrs. Stewart Salisbury are sisters.

'Must Prove Quebec Fortress of Respect For Laws of Country' —Duplessis

Quebec, Nov. 25—(CP)—Premier Duplessis told a group of provincial civil servants Friday that "you must prove again that the Province of Quebec is the fortress and bastion of respect for the laws of the country."

Speaking as he congratulated the civil servants for exceeding their Seventh Victory Loan objective by a wide margin, the Premier said that "other provinces are surely allowed to express their opinion on whatever matter they wish, just as the Province of Quebec has the right to express its own opinion."

"In the country now are movements which are considered extraordinary in Quebec," he said, "but we in the Province of Quebec must not forget that those who start those movements have the right to do so, just as we have the right to disapprove of them."

The Premier made no direct mention of Thursday's order-in-council authorizing the sending of draftees overseas.

"During the Victory Loan, you worked for national unity," he said. "Now you and the people of the Province of Quebec must prove again that you are working for national unity in considering the point of view of the other side."

"Please be quiet in everything," he added, "don't take part in any movement that will do any harm to our national unity."

Allied Advance Units Cross Rhine East of Strasbourg

With the U. S. 7th Army at Strasbourg, Nov. 25 — (AP) — American and French advance units were reported Friday to have crossed the Rhine east of the Strasbourg area.

These apparently were reconnaissance elements and not necessarily spearheads of a major drive across the flood swollen river.

However, these detachments were the first Allied troops to cross the great water barrier into the Reich if the report is verified.

Strasbourg is entirely in the hands of the French and Americans except for a small but powerfully defended bridgehead at the western end of the main bridge across the Rhine, which is still intact but heavily mined.

Roads leading from the west into the Strasbourg area were choked almost bumper-to-bumper with thousands of tons of material and thousands of Americans heading toward the Rhine.

The big push now is in high gear. The Germans are in the wildest disorder.

RAF Staging Post In African Desert

By HAROLD FREEMAN
(C P. Staff Writer)

Marble Arch, Tripolitania (CP)—The doubtful honor of being probably the most sand-cursed station of the R.A.F. in Africa goes to the staging post of R.A.F. Transport Command here in the shadow of one of the most grotesque of Mussolini's architectural adventures.

The Arch itself towers 80 feet above the lone road-way through this part of the African desert. It rises magnificently out of the desert sand, but nobody ever sees it except the men of the staging post and the crews of incoming planes who use it as a landmark.

It stands in lone splendor, 24 hours by road from the nearest sizable town. Mussolini erected it to mark the boundary between Tripolitania and Cyrenaica, but apparently something was wrong with his calculations because the true boundary is several miles eastward.

The staging post consists of a dozen concrete-covered buildings, a personnel of about 150—including one Canadian — an excellent air field and an almost steady afternoon sand-storm.

It's the most penetrating sand imaginable, whipped regularly each afternoon by a west wind. It gets into eyes and hair, penetrates the clothing and chafes the skin. It sifts through tightly-closed windows and doors to spread over the floors and into the beds of the living quarters.

WO. 2 Earle West of Shelburne, N.S., is briefing officer at the desolate outpost. A Halifax stevedore in peace-time, whose wife now lives at (33 Commercial Street), Truro, N.S., he has been at Marble Arch for three months after serving as a radio operator aboard Transport Command planes being delivered to India.

He thinks Marble Arch isn't so bad, although like everybody else at the post he can talk for a long time about the disadvantages of living in a perpetual sand storm. He'd like to get back to flying though, "and most of all I'd like to get back home."

Unknown to his superiors, an RCAF lad, on a 96 hour leave, wangled an air trip back to Canada with a friend.

Now he's got a bit of explaining to do. He's on the verge of fatherhood and officially he's not been near home for over three years.

Canuck Airmen Spot Elusive German Convoy

(Written for the Canadian Press by Flt. Lt. Don MacMillan, RCAF.)

With the RCAF in the Middle East (CP) — In the Middle East, along the sandy shores of the Mediterranean Sea, at lonely desert stations, and in cafes and clubs of Egypt, they're telling the story of three young Canadians who were the key men behind one of the biggest trouncings a German convoy has suffered in the Mediterranean theatre in this war.

The principal actors in this drama above the grim and sullen waters of the Aegean Sea were "Gus," "Ges" and "Hod"—the pilot FO. Louis Gossen of (4236 Triumph St.) Vancouver; second pilot Elmer Gesner of Moncton, N.B., and navigator WO. Bruce Hodgins of Clandeboye, Ont.

The airmen were over the Aegean, on the night of May 31 in a Wellington from a well-known RAF desert squadron in search of an elusive Jerry convoy. This convoy had been the object of intensive search for a long time and English, Australian, New Zealand and South African fliers had all had a "go" at finding it but its whereabouts remained a mystery.

Around midnight, the Canadians and their RAF flying mates noticed some black specks on the moon path on the water below them. They were the phantom convoy.

"We stooged around and counted seven ships," "Gus" remarked. "Then we signalled back to base that we'd found the convoy and gave its position. We decided we wanted a better look so we dropped some flares. They must have been waiting at their guns because they opened up on us then."

Tried Bombing Attack

"We kept hanging around and then decided to try a bombing attack. I don't think we scored any direct hits. But I'll bet we shook them. Anyway, we stuck around until our gas got low. Then we sent a final fix and hit for home."

So accurate were the signals sent back that, at dawn, Baltimores Beaufighters and other aircraft took off and arrived over the convoy at the precise spot where "Gus", "Ges" and "Hod" said it would be.

What happened then made Mediterranean history and, right in the thick of things were two more Canadians—FO. Ted MacIntosh of Lumsden, Sask., and FO. Hiram (Steve) Stevenson of Chipman, B.C.

The attack on the convoy was spectacular and successful and when the smoke cleared, there just wasn't any convoy worthy of the name.

High praise and decorations have been given for the effort on the convoy, but an RAF wing commander who has been in the desert practically since the war began summed things up when he remarked: "The actual attack on the convoy was so spectacular that it would be very easy to overlook the fact that if it hadn't been for Gossen and his crew there wouldn't have been any attack."

War Incidents Lead To Odd Reflections

By ALAN RANDAL
(C.P. War Correspondent)

With the Canadians in France and Belgium (CP) — Things you remember from watching this war:

The fellow who wanted a German helmet for a souvenir, having only recently come to the front, and suddenly found himself at a street intersection of Le Portel which is a suburb of Boulogne and it seemed as though most of the German army had gathered here and divested themselves of their steel toppers. You'd need a truck to take them away . .

The cool courage of men of the Highland Light Infantry who had an observation post which seemed to look straight down into the mouth of the great Cap Gris Nez cross-channel guns. Even while the attack was on, or at least getting teed up, these guns fired occasionally and the lookout men said you could almost feel their hot breath up there in their post. The Germans had their position well taped for mortar fire so the boys asked that we drive away slowly so as not to raise too much dust and draw the fire. O.K. Joe, that's o.k. with us . .

The tremendous size of the cross channel guns at Sangatte, east of Calais, taken out by troops from the Maritimes. And their extensive and carefully laid mine fields. And the soldier who said be careful and caught a mine himself a few minutes later—and how badly you felt . .

The tricky little issue flashlights carried by German prisoners with three slides enabling them to shine yellow, green, red and blue light as occasion demands . .

Also the man who said he had found the reason for the German army's alleged low morale. He said it was the issue teaspoon which has a hole in the bottom. Only on investigation it proved to have a degree of merit, being not a tea spoon but a tea cooler. You pick up a teaspoon full of hot tea and let it dribble back into the cup and eventually get the whole thing to drinkable temperature. Very nifty but hardly geared for war . .

Or the man in Antwerp, who, when you asked "which way to the war?" said, "first to the right, then two blocks to the left, go straight ahead—and you are there, at the war—goodbye."

MARMORA

Surprise Party Given Couple

Marmora — About twenty-five Deloro friends of Mr. and Mrs. Albert McKenzie favored them with a surprise party at their new home in Madoc on Tuesday evening and presented them with a beautiful bedspread. An address was read by M. J. Corrigan and the presentation was made by Mrs. H. R. Hancks. The evening was spent in games and refreshments were served. Mr. McKenzie retires at the end of the month after twenty-two years of faithful service with the Deloro Smelting and Refining Company Limited.

Euchre Party.

Nine tables of euchre were in play at the weekly party held in the Parish Hall on Wednesday evening. Lorne Laing was eventually awarded the gentleman's prize after tying with Lloyd Williams. Mrs. William Leonard won the ladies' prize. Refreshments were served at the close.

Kinsmen Ladies' Night.

"Ladies' Night" was observed by Marmora Kinsmen on Thursday evening. Twenty-two persons partook of an excellent repast at the Royal Hotel at seven o'clock served by the hostess, Mrs. H. Neath, and staff. Later adjournment was made to Deloro hall for bridge and dancing.

Madoc

Madoc — St. Peter's Mission Band held its regular meeting in the club room of the church on November 20th. The theme of the meeting was "Sharing Knowledge of Jesus and Our Loving Father With Our Neighbors in Southeast Asia." The new course of study was introduced climaxing with the folk tale "Ori and Pinggong" which was chosen because it gives something of the tropical setting and the non-Christian atmosphere. The offering was dedicated with a new song after which the attention was drawn to the picture of Christ embracing and surrounded by children of all nations which graced the worship centre.

Food Big Problem At Leopold Canal

With the Canadian Army in Holland (CP) — In this war the generals know the soldiers' troubles. This story comes from a general and concerns the feeding of the men of famous Western Canada infantry regiment as they held "by their claws" to the Canadian's thin bridgehead on the Leopold Canal.

From here on, it's the general speaking:

"This outfit was doing some hot fighting and the least we could do was to give them hot meals. Well, we decided to get the stuff across the Leopold Canal at night in rubber boats. That worked. Then we heated up the tins of food in dugouts under the lee of the far bank of the Leopold.

Remember we got the stuff across at night and it was heated in daytime when a little smoke didn't mean much. The sergeants or corporals would take these cans of hot food and race along under cover of the canal and toss them over to troops in our narrow bridgehead like grenades.

And I'll never forget the fellow who said (at least three words censored here), "Must I always wind up with a tin of hot jam?"

London — (CP) — The wartime ban on using hoses for watering gardens, washing automobiles and cleaning pavements has been withdrawn.

Folkestone, England — (CP) — The naval ensign flown at Cap Gris Nez by the commander in charge of the 15-inch cross-Channel gun battery has been given to Folkestone.

Mutual Aid and Victory

"Lend-Lease and reverse lend-lease are a system of combined war supply. They should end with the war. But the United Nations partnership must go on and must grow stronger," said President Roosevelt on Friday.

He was speaking of one of the great instruments of Allied policy in the use of lend-lease. The United Kingdom has supplied to all the Allies no less than $4,318,592,000 in lend-lease since the war began and of this $2,437,062,000 was received from Britain by the United States in the year from July 1943 to June 1944 in goods and services. Besides, according to the British statement on lend-lease, British ships carried more than 865,000 United States troops to Britain among whom were 320,000 carried on the Queen Mary and Queen Elizabeth. Australia and New Zealand and India furnished $911,065,000 for a grand total of $3,348,127,000. The United States furnished to the United Kingdom in the same period ending June 30th last a total of $9,321,549,000 of lend-lease and to all the Allies a total of $28,270,351,000.

This indicates something of the vast resources of the Allies poured into the stream of power that has shown its result in the breaking-down of the enemy, with the war approaching the final stage which will be the defeat of Germany in the European war. But as the President said, dollars cannot give the true measure. "Neither the monetary totals of lend-lease aid we supply nor the totals of reverse lend-lease aid we receive are measures of the aid we have given or received in this war. That could be measured only in terms of the total contributions towards winning victory of each of the United Nations."

The true ideals of democracy are shown in these words of the President. They are so far from the attitude of the aggressor nations. Here the nations of the Allies have all given mutual service. Of this service Mr. Roosevelt said, "there are no statistical or monetary measurements for the value of courage, skill and sacrifice in the face of death and destruction wrought by our common enemies." Of British aid in reverse lend-lease he said that without it "we would surely have been forced to delay the invasion of France for many months." He cited figures to show what this has meant. "It would have required a thousand ships to send across the Atlantic what we received for our men through reverse lend-lease from the United Kingdom." The same Allied cooperation and friendship in the glorious cause of the Allies are also shown in the effectiveness of the Allied efforts in the war on the Japanese.

La Marseillaise

One hundred and fifty-two years ago, France's national anthem, La Marseillaise, was written by an officer of engineers in the French garrison of Strasbourg. He composed the words of the song under the title of "Chant de l'Armee du Rhin," (Song of the Army of the Rhine.) It received its present name when sung by volunteers of Marsailles when they entered Paris and at the storming of the Tuilleries. It was forbidden under the Restoration and Second Empire and became the national song during the Franco-Prussian War in 1870-71.

This fact is interesting in the light of the liberation of Strasbourg on Thursday by a French tank force after a dash of eighteen miles to the Alsatian capital.

So comes the freedom of France by liberation.

The words of the song "Allons, Enfants de la Patrie, Le jour de gloire est arrive" bring again the day of glory to France. The day of glory has come with the Hun driven out and retreating to his lair.

To the French in the words of the song the day of glory has arrived.

Aegean Clean-Up

A series of naval operations have virtually cleared the Aegean Sea of the enemy. In 1941 the Germans, with the aid of the air superiority they enjoyed, got control of most of the Greek islands, and up to a year ago they maintained approximately 110,000 tons of shipping in the Aegean. These islands formed a strategical outer bastion to Hitler's Fortress Europe, while their inhabitants starved.

In the early stages of the campaign to recover them, the Allied navies operated a small buccaneering fleet from a secret base at Castelrosso—the most southeasterly of the German-held Dodecanese. Only light craft were available, and motor torpedo boats, motor launches and submarines were supplemented by island schooners and caiques. Colonel Lord Jellicoe's Royal Marine Commandos took a leading part in the work of raiding supply lines and harrying shore garrisons and installations. Food was also left for the local inhabitants. Gradually it became possible to spare larger fleet units, until a formidable British force, assisted by some vessels of other nationalities, was built up. The commander, until October 6 last was Rear Admiral Thomas Troubridge. He flew his flag in the new cruiser H.M.S. Royalist, and a powerful cruiser squadron consisting of Ajax, Argonaut, Black Prince, Aurora, Sirius and Colombo came under his command. Also with him was a flotilla of fleet destroyers of the new Tumult class—including appropriately enough, the H.M.S. Troubridge. Escort carriers, minesweepers and considerable numbers of smaller craft were also employed.

Within a recent six weeks the score of the surface craft and carrier and shore based aircraft included 31 enemy warships and transports sunk (among them 3 destroyers) and 40 small craft sunk. In addition, 16 warships and merchant ships and 15 small craft were severely damaged. It is believed that, in sum, the Germans have lost 101,000 tons of shipping out of the original 110,000. The bravery and skill shown by the Royal Navy, in the days when it did not seem as if its battered remnants in the Eastern Mediterranean could possibly withstand the far superior Italian forces, have had their reward.

Not the least of the immediate results of total naval victory in the Mediterranean is the increased speed with which Greece can be fed without enemy interference with the relief ships. In no country have the Germans carried out a policy of starving the population to the extreme that they did in Greece. Prompt steps have been taken by the British forces to save the situation. No time is being lost in waiting for the perfection of a properly organized supply system. Improvization is being freely applied.

British troops in Greece are on half rations so that army food can be diverted to the Greek population. Warships of the British Navy, as Mr. Eden told the House of Commons on November 8, have themselves taken in 600 to 700 tons of urgently needed supplies in emergency passages, and 200 tons have been delivered by air.

The work of putting the supplies ashore has been taken in hand by the Royal Navy and the Royal Engineers. By the end of October the rate of unloading at Piraeus alone had reached 3,000 tons daily.

Schiller

(Norwegian Information Service)

A Norwegian patriot through force of circumstances had met a German. Choosing a fairly neutral topic for conversation, they chatted about German culture. The German was naturally bragging about it, whereas the Norwegian voiced critical objections.

"For instance, take Schiller," said the German. "There is a writer for you."

The Norwegian admitted that Schiller was not too bad a writer, but that Schiller had not written his plays about or for Germans. "Schiller wrote his Maria Stuart for the British," he stated, "William Tell for the Swiss, Fiesco and The Bride from Messina for the Italians, The Virgin of Orleans for the French, Wallenstein for the Czechs, Iphigenie for the Spaniards.

"But certainly he must have written something for the Germans," said the son of the Reich.

"Right," retorted the Norwegian, "he wrote his first play about and for the Germans. The title of it was—The Robbers."

Became the Famous 8th

The great function which the Home Guard performed was to release the regular army for service overseas. They enabled Mr. Churchill to send out the only fully equipped armored division in Britain to Egypt even while the Germans were massing for invasion. Out of that strategy of offensive grew the whole design for United Nations victory. That division eventually became the victorious Eighth Army.

ARGUMENT

They stood upon a little street,
Two men of different views,
Discussing with ill temper's heat
A bit of morning news.

A pretty child went romping by,
The trees were red and gold;
Some wild ducks crossed the northern sky,
Young lovers past them strolled.

Nearby there was a singing bird
And good things everywhere,
But none of them they saw or heard
While they were bickering there.

NUGGETS OF KNOWLEDGE

When Stonewall Jackson criticized the profanity of General Jubal A. Early, the latter said to the Confederate commander: "General, you do the praying for this army and I'll do the cussing."

In his famous Milan Decree, issued from Italy in 1807, Napoleon Bonaparte forbade the use of the English language on the continent of Europe.

The "Jersey" in "New Jersey" is derived indirectly from the surname of Julius Caesar. The State got its name from the Isle of "Jersey," which is believed to be a corruption of "Caesar."

"Sardine" is not the name of a species of fish and there is no such thing as a living sardine. Fish, whether fry or adults, do not become sardines until after they have been cured, preserved in vegetable oil and packed in tin or glass.

It is supposed, though not established beyond question, that the sardine was originally so called because fish so cured were abundant in the waters around Sardinia, second largest island in the Mediterranean, or because they were first caught and packed on that island.

The bones in canned fish are softened by heat, not by oil as popularly supposed. Canned foods are processed after the containers are sealed. Processing is heating for a certain period at temperatures sufficiently high to kill all organisms that cause spoilage. It is this heating that softens the bones in canned salmon, sardines, kippered herring and similar fish products.

Weather experts say fog is not a dependable weather sign. A fog is merely condensed water vapor and differs from a cloud only in being closer to the ground.

The popular notion that a rising fog is a sign of fair weather and a settling fog a sign of foul weather has only a slight basis in fact. Sometimes a fog, especially on high ground, settles until rain actually begins; at other times a fog lifts until finally cleared away. Oddly enough, many people believe that a rising fog indicates foul weather because the moisture rises and must fall again, and a settling fog indicates fair weather, because the moisture comes down and clears the air.

The Man Who Came Back

By Henry C. James

(BBC Press Service)

London, by Mail—A week or two ago I was in a place in London where a lot of Australian Air Force men congregated. Some of them have been over this side for a long time, and some of them have just arrived here. It's a place where one doesn't see many girls. There seems to have been a quite spontaneous decision to keep the place, for the most part, as a masculine club — a place where they won't be bothered by the feminine sex. If one of the boys has a date, well, you'll notice that he quietly detaches himself from the group he has been talking to and goes. He might leave a few understanding smiles behind him, which might even be caused by envy, but I doubt that, because there's a lot of satisfaction in a gossip between men who have done the same thing in different places, and who have come from the same place a few thousand miles away.

But occasionally a few girls do get there, and it was a girl in the uniform of the Waafs who, quite without knowing it, introduced me to the man who told me this story.

It happened like this. I was standing at the bar with my foot up on the rail, gossiping to a bloke I had not seen for many months, when I noticed a Waaf come in. She was quite young and the boys, most of them, turned to look casually at her. After all, just because they keep the place fairly strictly as a masculine club as it were, it doesn't prevent them from taking surreptitious glances when an attractive girl does walk in.

I looked at her too. I saw her stand suddenly stock still and then put her hands, one on each shoulder of a six-foot Australian in dark blue uniform which had on it the wings of a pilot. The girl didn't say anything, she just looked at the man, then her eyes went hazy. She swayed a little bit and, before even he could catch her, she crumpled up on the floor.

Somebody said quietly, "She's out like a light." But there wasn't any fuss made of it. The boys who congregate in that place don't fuss, and they prefer to ignore incidents like that rather than take the risk of embarrassing the principle parties in it. Particularly as the tall pilot and the bloke who was with him handled the matter quite competently and quickly. They picked up the Waaf and sat her on a chair. They loosened her collar and tie, bathed her forehead with water, and, when she came round, they took her between them out into the fresh air. And behind them life went on again with a deliberate normality, except that I wanted to know the story behind it, because, after all, girls in Waaf uniforms don't pass out very easily these days.

* * *

I made enquiries through the usual channels about the tall Australian pilot and it was nearly my undoing. Because it got back to the ears of the pilot that somebody wanted him to talk, and that's a thing Lancaster pilots don't do very much of or very easily as a rule. So, when I went to look for him, all I got was the information that he'd gone bush. However, the R. A. A. F. has quite a long arm, and even the leave that you get when you've just come back from a personally conducted tour of Germany, comes to an end sooner or later. That's what they told me about this pilot, that he'd just come back from a personally conducted tour of Germany, and they ran him to earth for me finally and gave me permission to tell the story. Here it is.

He said, "We were about fifty miles from the target when we met a twin-engined fighter head on. We evaded him but not before he got one of the starboard engines. I had to feather it immediately, and then we went on and make a good bombing run. But five minutes after the bombs had gone, the mid-upper gunner saw some tracer bullets coming at us. I didn't see the fighter, neither did anybody else, but it must have been one because there wasn't any flak about and, before we knew it, there was an explosion inside the kite and the whole of the fuselage from the middle turret to the rear gunner was a mass of flames.

"We were up about sixteen thousand feet. We went into a spin." He paused at that and swallowed a mouthful of beer. I said, "Not a very pleasant moment." He grinned and said, "I thought we'd had it. I told the crew to bale out and, after I'd given them what I thought was long enough, I got ready to go myself." He stopped abruptly as he said that, and I asked, "What's the matter?" He blushed and said, "Well this might sound a bit as if I'm shooting a line." I asked, "Why?" He said, "Well, I was just getting ready to go when I found out three of the crew were still in the crate. Two of them, their parachutes were burned, so were they, and the other one the explosion that caused the fire had blown his parachute out of its packet." I said, "So you got back into your seat and tried to get the plane under control again?" He said, "Yes, I managed to get it straightened out at about three thousand feet and turned back towards the target. I knew we were near Switzerland, I was looking for Lake Constance. I found it. I could see it all right from that height but when we got down near the surface, I could not see anything. The crate was behaving pretty badly and I just had to take a chance and hope for the best. He smiled then at the memory of that moment, and said, "I ditched her all right and we all got into the dinghy. We had a bit of a flap unloosening a wire that had got itself tangled round the navigator's leg, but we got it off all right and then the crate sank. We took a compass course south and I said, Here we go boys. To Switzerland we hope." He added, "We got to the shore, crawled into a wood and dressed the burns as well as we could and waited for daylight." I asked, "What happened then?" He said, "There was an old farmer working about fifty yards from us. He just, quite casually, directed us to the nearest village." I said, "Directed you? Didn't he escort you?" The pilot smiled, and said, "No. He just went on farming." I asked, "What happened in the village?" He said, "An American Swiss, or rather a Swiss who spoke American, interrogated us and then took us to a hotel. A doctor came and dressed the two blokes who were burned, and we all had a good meal of cheese and cider and white bread, and decided that, as far as the rest of the

* * *

I asked, "What did the Swiss think about it all, the war I mean? The Germans and the English?" He said, "They seemed pretty fed up with it, and I suppose this is as good an indication of what they think about us as you can want. As we were being escorted to the hotel, we passed a place where I saw some bananas. I hadn't seen bananas for two or three years, and I said to one of the other blokes, 'Cripes! Look—Bananas.' The Swiss, who was escorting us, heard me and went straight over and bought half a dozen for us."

I said, "How long ago was this? How is it you are not still in Switzerland?" He said, "Well the first indication I got that I might get back came a few days after we'd got out of quarantine, they put you in quarantine over there for three weeks. I'd gone to the funeral of some of the boys who'd crashed that night and hadn't been as lucky as we were and a few days after I was escorted to the German border and I found that a few of us were being exchanged for some German night fighter pilots. We were given civilian clothes and met by a German captain and two corporals. The German captain was stiff and formal. He didn't speak English at all but one of the corporals had been educated at the London University and Oxford. We got in the train at the border and then the captain came in and stood stiffly at attention and talked in German at us for three minutes without a break. The corporal said the same thing in English immediately after him, and all it amounted to was that we were not to look through the chinks in the blinds which were drawn. But we saw a little bit for all that. We saw, here and there, girders twisted and uplifted and we saw railway trucks and carriages overturned and burnt out that made us wink at each other. We saw something else too, we saw a lot of German civilians on the railway stations. They were nearly all old people, and all through the whole journey through Germany we didn't see one face with a smile on it. That was what we noticed more particularly I think, than anything else. We didn't see one smiling face, not even amongst the soldiers, the German soldiers who were sharing the same train with us.

"We got a laugh over them, because we were sitting back in a first class carriage and stiff, Nazi German officers were standing in the corridors, or sitting on their luggage."

I said, "What about food in Germany?" He said, "Well it wasn't too good, the couple of meals we had. At Baden Oos." He grinned and said, "I can't speak German, but that's near enough, it was a little place not for from Baden Baden, where we had to change trains. We had a meal there of soup, fish and custard and coffee. The coffee was filthy. One sip of it was enough for all of us, but we had some good wine with that meal." He grinned again. "The next meal, I remember was in Paris. We had soup and pressed meat and salad and fish and steak and asparagus tips and a basket of cherries and coffee and rolls and red and white wine.

"From Paris we went down to Bordeaux, and then down to the Spanish border. Once we got over that, it was pretty straight sailing of course. I saw a bull fight in Madrid, six bulls killed. And a fiesta. And a lot of apparently very poor people."

The Australian pilot paused again then, and said, "That's really about all there was to it," but I remembered something else I was curious about. I asked him, "What about the girl who put her hands on your shoulders and passed out, the Waaf?" The boy said, "She was the fiancee of one of the boys who baled out. All she'd heard until she saw me was that we hadn't come back that night. So I was a bit of a shock to her. I hadn't had time to contact her. I'd just arrived myself." I asked, "Has she had any word of him since?" He said, "Yes. He came down all right. He's a prisoner of war in Germany now. But I reckon she'll wait for him till he gets back to this side, and then another English girl will eventually become a good Australian."

FRIENDS

Our thoughts, so often wander, about the path of life,
We recollect, but faintly, the tribulations—strife,
And then we take another turn, the road has many bends,
Of all the memories of life, the sweetest is of friends.

Friends in childhood, youth and age, friends all along the way,
Of all the treasures in my life—for friends I pray.
True friends paint many pictures on the memories of life,
True friends are not forgotten in trials and in strife.

Sometimes we falter by the way, the pebbles hurt our feet,
Then some kind friend will come along with consolation sweet.
Then just a little way ahead, we find more bends.
The hills seem easier to climb, because of friends.

We must not idle be, nor dream, nor drift,
We have much work to do and loads to lift.
The work is easier, loads seem lighter near the end,
Because around the bend ahead, we find a friend.

Then as we near the eventide, the sunset of our life,
Horizons seem much brighter, pleasures seem so rife.
The last chapter of the book is reached, we near the end,
The finale will be pleasant, if we have one friend.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

EVERYBODY'S MECCA

A reader writes, I am 65 years old and I have had chronic bronchitis—

Perhaps it is ill-bred to interrupt like this, but as I was brought up in a sawmill it is only in the last few years that I have acquired any urbanity to speak of, and I thought it might be of more interest to some of you if we mentioned here that familiar names for chronic bronchitis are "winter cough" and "bronchial catarrh," or even—but, no, I hate to think the dumbest reader of this column is so blankety-blanked dumb as to call it you you-know-what on the chest—that's out.

I have had chronic bronchitis for years but recent examination of chest shows no activity. Believe the present condition is called bronchiectasis—

Hang onto your hats, folks, we're off again. Bronchiectasis is dilatation or expansion or ballooning of one or more of the bronchial tubes.

I have to live in a dry climate to enjoy any degree of comfort—

That's the hellovit—the quest for a dry climate, I mean. There are about 125,000,000 invalids, near-invalids and molly-coddles in the United States, I estimate, who descend on the elusive dry climate like a swarm of locusts if any one ever discovers such a climate.

Believe it or not, the correspondent lived in Mecca when he asked for directions to the nearest dry climate. Not Mecca, Arabia, but even a drier, healthier Mecca, near Bagdad, in the Mojave desert, Southern California. He mentions having resided for short periods in Los Angeles, Banning, Desert Center, Death Valley Junction and Mecca.

Have been afflicted with right middle ear infection since childhood, and more or less throat and sinus trouble (I used to call it catarrh.) Had tonsil and adenoids removed many years ago.

The correspondent, like those 124,999,999 other misguided ones, now seeks an equable, dry climate.

There may be such a climate in the next world, but I believe it makes no difference in what part of North America an invalid or a healthy person lives. The only thing that matters is this: how much of the time do you live outdoors? How much exposure to direct or indirect sunshine (daylight) do you have?

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Potential Diabetic

My mother's sister has diabetes and her father had it. Does that make me more liable to get it or is there anything I can do to prevent it from developing?

(G. P. E.)

Answer — Yes, Diabetes is hereditary, not directly but the potentiality or tendency is inherited, more often from a grandparent, the parent carrying the tendency in recessive form but perhaps not having diabetes himself or herself. Dr. Joslin estimates that nearly 25 per cent of the entire population of the U. S. are now carriers of the tendency and may pass it on to children.

One-Ton Bombs Lie Under Airport

By HAROLD FREEMAN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Cagliari, Sardinia, — (CP) — There's an R. A. F. Transport Command staging post operating in the Corsica-Sardinia area that has two 2,000-pound bombs buried somewhere down beneath the station headquarters.

There's another staging post whose personnel have watched their tents — the only shelter they have — blown out to sea or washed away by torrential rains time after time.

Still another staging post was so recently the scene of battle that residents of the flattened town nearby who fled during the conflict haven't yet ventured down out of the hills to find out who is occupying the air strip.

Despite conditions like these, Transport Command ground crews are doing trojan work in establishing new air ways so that urgent supplies can reach the battlefields of southern Europe quicker. The landing fields on Sardinia are largely make-shift as yet — the living conditions of the ground crews are definitely so — but already transport command planes are moving 1,000,000 pounds of supplies a week through these fields.

Establishment of the staging posts on Sardinia-Corsica, coupled with the Allied occupation of France, round out a vast network of airfields throughout the Mediterranean area so that rush supplies can be moved quickly to any point in the Middle East, from Britain or from North America.

Getting back to those two 2,000-pounders, nobody at the airfield in question pays much attention to them, the ground crews working on the theory that if they haven't gone off yet they probably won't. Innocent incoming passengers—like me—sleep soundly at the station throughout the night and are told about the bombs as they leave next day.

The bombs were dropped by British planes when the airport was in German hands. Landing in front of the headquarters as they slanted down, they plunged at an angle into the earth and ended up under the main building on the field. There the British found them some weeks later when the field was occupied.

And there they will remain until more urgent matters are dealt with.

Believes Post-War Bright for Women

London, Nov. 18 —(CP)— Miss C. A. Rees, first woman manager of a government employment office in Britain who retired Nov. 4, is optimistic about women's employment prospects after the war.

Just under 60, she said in an interview that the war has taught employers an important lesson: not to consider that a woman is "too old" at 40.

She expressed belief there will be a big swing-over from the exclusive Court dress-making business to the high-class wholesale trade in clothing, and that will mean more work for more people.

Shops and luxury trades generally will provide plenty of work for women, she said. A large proportion of the girls she transferred into war work from her employment office would return to their old jobs.

Miss Rees has managed for 20 years the all-season employment office in Great Marlborough Street —still the only one in London. During the war she has also managed the Women's War Work Bureau, established she found jobs for 1,000 women a week.

Beecham's Barbs Still Have Sting

London, Nov. 18 — (CP) — Sir Thomas Beecham, the famous British conductor, has worked up quite a reputation for stirring up fireworks in musical circles and London musicians have learned — to their sorrow — that his spell in North America hasn't changed him any.

A reception was held in his honor at headquarters of the London Philharmonic Orchestra and he took advantage of the occasion for one of his scathing speeches.

"Musical institutions here are still walking in the same dear old morass of reactionary unbelief," he said.

"Orchestras are playing as badly as ever. You can take this with a pinch of salt — but not too large a pinch."

He didn't blame the Philharmonic entirely. It was a scandal, he said, that it had no assistance from State or industry.

"The New York Philharmonic Orchestra has £200,000 a year (about $900,000) from the U. S. Rubber companies. This enables it to have the right number of concerts and rehearsals.

"Organization in the United States is 50 years ahead of what it is here."

See Britain as Fashion Centre

Leicester, England, Nov. 18 — (CP) — The Women's Advisory Committee of the Trades Union Congress suggests there is great scope for women in the dressmaking sphere after the war.

It's annual report said:-

"Hitherto Paris has been regarded as the centre for exclusive dress and fashion, although in the immediate pre-war years America was increasingly becoming the centre for popular fashion.

"Efforts should be made to establish this country as the chief centre for design and fashion."

The report said large numbers of women will have been trained in drawing designing, planning and tracing. The textile industries would do well to plan now to engage women with this basic experience for training in dress designing and fashion generally.

In addition, women's wartime training and experience in branches of engineering could be used with great advantage in many branches of housing and furnishing, the report said.

Poultry Population Increase in Canada Means Chickens for Cooking Purposes

Canada's poultry population has increased so much that we now have chickens to spare.

There is no problem when there are more grade A chickens than we can eat at home for Britain whose meat supplies have been so limited for so long is glad to have what we can send her and so is the United States. But the increase is not only in the top grade birds, there are more grade Cs too and, since Canada's export markets are built on a reputation for quality food products, the surplus grade Cs stay at home.

At present there are unusually large numbers of grade C chickens on Canadian markets and they offer a real bargain to the wise shopper and the clever cook. A yellow grade tag identifies these birds; they will not have such good appearance or be so plump as birds that carry the red A or the blue B tag, neither will they be so expensive. For chicken stews, pies, fricassees and for braising they are excellent buys.

The Consumer Section of the Dominion Department of Agriculture gives directions for cutting up a chicken and recipes particularly suited to grade C birds.

To Cut up a Chicken

1. Clean, wipe and singe the chicken.
2. Separate legs from body, cutting through the thigh joint.
3. Separate drumsticks from thighs at knee joints.
4. Remove wings. Cut through skin around the wing close to the body, pull the wing back to disjoint, then separate. Cut off tip end of wings and use in soup or gravy.
5. Cut through ribs on either side to separate back from breast. Split back in half crosswise, cut each piece in half.
6. Cut breast bone with shears so that it can be divided in half.

Braised Chicken

1 chicken, about 4 lbs.
¼ cup flour
1 teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons mild flavored fat
1½ cups hot water or scalded milk
Salt and pepper
Paprika
Cooked noodles

Cut up chicken as directed. Place flour and salt in a paper bag with pieces of chicken and shake until chicken is coated. Brown in the hot fat. Remove browned chicken to a casserole, sprinkle with salt, pepper and paprika. Dot each piece with a bit of fat, add the water and cover closely. Bake in a moderately slow oven, 325 degrees F. for 1½ to 2 hours, or cook in a heavy pan on top of the stove. Remove chicken to a hot platter and surround with a ring of buttered noodles. Thicken remaining liquid with a little flour, stirring until smooth and adding a little more liquid if necessary. Serve over chicken. Six servings.

Chicken Virginia Style

1 chicken, about 4 lbs.
6 thin slices uncooked, smoked ham
Whole cloves
1 tablespoon flour
4 tablespoons brown sugar
½ cup hot water.

Cut up chicken as directed and remove bones, using a sharp, pointed knife. Wrap each portion in a slice of ham, tie securely or fasten with toothpicks. Stick 4 cloves in each roll and place in a greased baking dish. Sprinkle with flour mixed with brown sugar and add hot water. Bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees F. for 1 hour, basting every 10 minutes. Garnish with slices of glazed apple. Six servings.

Chicken Fricassee

1 chicken, about 4 lbs.
1½ cups milk or water
⅓ cup flour
2 teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
⅓ cup mild flavored fat
¼ cup minced onion
Or ½ teaspoon onion salt
1½ cups water.

Cut up chicken as directed. Dip each piece in milk and coat with mixture of flour, salt and pepper. Brown in hot fat in a heavy frying pan. Remove pieces to a casserole. Cook onion in remaining fat, blend in remaining flour. Add the rest of the milk and the water, stirring until the mixture thickens. Pour over chicken, cover casserole and bake in a moderately slow oven 325 degrees F., for 1½ to 2 hours. Six servings.

Jingle—or Jangle On the U.S. Air Waves

By Al Graham in the New York Times Magazine.

The announcer tells you that the following is transcribed. A mixed quartet breaks into a snappy little ditty. You try to catch the words. They sound something like this:

Are you feeling low-low-low?
Get some Wamzi-Pamzico!
Wamzi-Pamzico is swell!
Wamzi-Pamzico rings the bell—
Ding,
Dong,
Dang!

Being a daily listener, you sense what has happened: another singing commercial has been added to the record-breaking crop already on the air.

Is there (you ask yourself) no saturation point? And what will eventually come of all this? Will it turn us into a nation of jinglers? Will we gradually go ditty - mad and start writing rhyme by the iambic (or trochaic) yard? Will America's Byrons—if any—rebel ere this doggerel has had its day?

A minor poet, recently pondering these questions, decided to do a little research. He came up with a number of facts and a poet's quota of fantasy — the jingle's past, present and future. The facts appear to be these:

* * *

Jingle advertising was old stuff even in 1910 Sunny Jim and Phoebe Snow had long been forgotten before the first radio station was ever opened. With the dawn of network broadcasting in the Nineteen Twenties, the jingle came to life again—in the form of a theme song.

Among the radio idea men haunting local stations in 1935 were (a) a certain live wire from Chicago answering to the name of Allan Kent and (b) a somewhat quieter, keen-minded British tunesmith who called himself Ginger Johnson. (His full name: Herbert Austen Croom-Johnson.) The pair met at NBC, eventually teamed up to specialize on producing musical commercials, which were slowly becoming more popular with advertisers.

The first Kent-Johnson job was a series of twenty Mother Goose parodies which sold to a bread sponsor for $600. The series was no great shakes. In fact, the boys did only moderately well until the radio world suddenly began to buzz about them late in 1939.

In the Spring of that year Edgar Kobak, then an advertising agency strategist, now executive vice-president of the Blue network, encouraged the pair to try their hand at a jingle that would sell a 12-ounce bottle of cola for a nickel. Johnson thought something could be done with an old English hunting song, "John Peel", which was in the public domain. Kent whipped up some rhymes: "nickel" and "trickle", "spot" and "lot", "too" and "you". Fitting the words to the music was a cinch the boys claim the jingle was completed in ten minutes.

It sold the company on first hearing, caught on quickly with the radio audience, has stayed caught on ever since. To date it has been played more than 1,000,000 times on the air, is still heard daily on some 350 stations.

By early 1940 Kent-Johnson were in demand. Up went their prices; they got $2,500 for an eight-line gasoline jingle, later received $3,000 from the same sponsor for a second ditty. A cigarette advertiser paid them $7,000 to tune up his slogan. They "lease-lent" a soap-powder song to a leading manufacturer for a $20,000 retainer. All told, they have now turned out some 250 strictly commercial jingles, sold more than 100 of them.

* * *

With some 900 stations airing anywhere from one to 20 or more daily, Americans are unquestionably getting an earful. Guesses at the national volume (including repeats) range from 5,000 to 50,000 daily "performances".

A local station, WNEW, told the investigating poet that it was airing some 80 singing commercials every 24 hours and was toying with the idea of a jingle hit parade—15 minutes of the things. In two instances the bard had ditties crooned to him over the phone—by business men he had never met.

And what does a working poet think of the jingle technically? Is it fair-to-midding verse? Do the commercial lyricists appear to know anything about the rules of rhyme and scansion?

According to this fellow, most of the jingles he has heard are not even good tripe.

A Stupid Punishment Stopped

(An Editorial in the Ottawa Journal)

Navy Minister Angus Macdonald took a sane step in the right direction in abolishing pack-drill as a punishment for ratings in Canada's Navy. The Minister happened on two ratings at Headquarters in Ottawa engaged in this dismal chore under the eyes of a petty officer, carrying packs loaded with bricks and rifles at arms' length over their heads. He stopped the fantastic two-man parade, sent the officer packing and issued his edict of no more pack-drill. He wants no Captain Blighs in His Majesty's Navy in Canada.

Pack-drill is one of the obsolete survivals of a by-gone age when harshest punishment was meted out even for minor naval and military offences. When civilians were shanghaied into the Navy by brutal "press-gangs," mutiny forever simmering on the lower deck, barbarous penalties such as tricing a sailor to the rigging and flogging him to unconsciousness, or keel-hauling, were believed necessary. More often than not this cruelty defeated its own purpose and the practice was abandoned. Indeed even pack-drill was largely abandoned except for some officious commanders of the Colonel (or Commander) Blimp variety, in favor of extra guards, unpleasant fatigue duties or confinement to quarters.

Angus Macdonald, the fighting Scot from Nova Scotia, is no "softie" and knows full well the value of discipline, as a soldier in the First Great War, an educator, a member of a political party. But he has set his face against the harsh and stupid punishment of pack-drill even as he would be against flogging, "pegging out" a recalcitrant sailor, or lashing a man to a gunwheel. In his stand, the Minister will have the whole-hearted commendation of the Navy and people at large.

PICTON

Tomato Growers Endorse Principle Of Grading Crop

Picton, Nov. 24 —A resolution endorsing the principle of grading tomatoes and paying by grade, was unanimously endorsed at a meeting of Prince Edward County tomato growers here Wednesday night. It was further suggested, that the price be 75c per bushel for first grade, 60c for ungraded and 50c for second grade.

Such a policy was recommended by A. Walker, a member of the Ontario Tomato Growers Marketing Board, Toronto. He referred to the situation in Indiana where the grading system has been in existence for 16 years, with success. He emphasized that quality must be maintained and raised in order to hold a place in post-war markets where there would be keen competition. Export markets will be necessary and these can be secured only with high quality goods.

Grading of tomatoes is the only fair way, Mr. Walker believed. Poor tomatoes cost more to process and the canned product from them was not satisfactory. The best is needed now for the fighting forces and after the war the best will be needed to secure markets. Grading would be done by government graders, who would be moved from district to district. They would be specially trained. A complaint that present contracts limit production per acre from 225 to 250 bushels, and that of deliveries, is being dealt with by the Board, Mr. Walker said. He also promised that there would be consideration for the complaint that canners here do not pay farmers for produce until December 1st., though manufacturers of cans, coal dealers and laborers receive payment monthly.

Those taking part in the discussion backed the plan of grading as necessary and fair to both canner and farmer. A committee composed of Sherman Young, Harold Foster, Harold Bonter, W. Walmsley, J. I. Thompson, Harold Spencer, D. O. Reynolds, J. Suttaby, A. Cunningham, G. Ackerman, W. O. Striker, Oscar Parks, J. Wilkinson and Harry Wattam was named to attend a meeting in Belleville on Dec. 9th., when the matter will again be discussed.

"NO SURRENDER"

Today the U. S. Marine Corps revealed the story of the marine who wouldn't surrender. He is Reid C. Chamberlain, 25, of El Cajon, Calif., shown here. When Corregidor gave up, he refused to make his escape by boat. After 28 days of hunger and thirst drifting in the China Sea, he returned to the Philippines, landing behind the Jap lines. He served with guerilla units for two years, being commissioned a lieutenant in the American army by one of his leaders on the islands, an American colonel. He escaped from the islands again, re-enlisted in the marines, demanded combat duty, and is back battling the Japs. He has been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross.

Washington, Nov. 18 — (AP) — More twins, triplets and quads are being born in the United States since the war began than before.

The Bureau of the Census figures are: multiple births in 1933 — 24,220, and in 1942 a rise to 29,421.

At first glance it looks at if Mars is adding romance and mystery to war marriages. Investigation supports the romance, wipes out all the mystery, and gives Mars a bad score when it comes to producing multiples.

The reason there were more multiple births in 1942 than in 1933 was because many more babies were born, because the U. S. birth rate went up. More girls got married; a rush to the altar, which it will be recalled, started with the adoption of Selective Service before we entered combat.

Along with the rising birth rate there naturally were more twins and other multiples.

That is not special credit to Mars. What's his discredit in this multiple baby business is that the percentage of multiples actually declined. In 1933, of all babies born in the United States, 11 and a fraction per cent per thousand were twins, triplets or quads. That percentage stayed at 11 until 1940.

Percentage Dropped

Beginning with the latter year, the percentage dropped to 10.8, went down one decimal point the next year and again a similar decimal point in 1942, the last year of completed census figures on babies.

The medical reason for the percentage decline in proportion of multiples is not clear. But an explanation which comes from statistics of birth rates is entirely clear.

This is the explanation. First born are not as likely to come in pairs or multiples as are children born later to the same mother. The American increase in babies during this war is largely among new mothers, girls having their first babies.

In round numbers, the babies born in the United States in the last 10 available years were 2,000,000 in 1933, a step-up to 2,100,000 in each of the following four years, then to 2,200,00 for two years, to 2,300,000 in 1940; 2,400,000 in 1941; 2,700,000 in 1942.

Triplets were 220 in 1933 and 277 in 1942.

Quads were five in each of those years. But in 1941, which in marriages rates as a war year, America had 12 sets of quads, which was twice as many as in the biggest previous year of the decade.

Morotai Is Lovely But Not to G.I.'s

With MacArthur's Forces on Morotai —(AP)— The island of Morotai is a travelogue cameraman's dream. To the eye it is strictly a National Geographic Magazine island, with its groves of towering coconut trees, its profusion of brilliant tropical flowers, its exotic fruits, and its unbelievably colored birds flashing through the tropical foliage.

The very things which would delight a peacetime tourist on Morotai annoy the life out of the soldier.

The coconuts drop on his head. The flowers are attached to vines which block his path, trip him up and force him to fight his way with a machete. The bananas and pawpaws are mostly green, and give him the stomach ache. The insects alternate between humming and chewing on him.

The mysterious rivers have just enough crocodiles to make bathing in them a form of suicide. The coral reefs cut his feet into tatters when he attempts to swim in the soft, warm combers that curl on the beach. The glistening sand is inhabited by billions of sand fleas. The dazzling sun blisters him. The rains soak him. The bush growth of the jungle wilderness contributes to jungle rot. His home is a hole in the ground just big enough to provide stretching-out room for him and his buddy.

He works from sun-up to sundown. If he isn't on the line, guarding against the enemy, he clears areas of brush, or unloads ships, or totes rations, or pulls KP, or cleans weapons, lugs water, or digs latrines.

Yes, Morotai is a lovely, lovely place.

Saves General's Life

Maj. Gen. Basil Morris, commander of the Australian-New Zealand Administration Unit, has been rescued from a blazing plane at Cape Gloucester, New Britain, by his native chauffeur, Carl, the Australian Bureau of Information reports.

Arriving at Cape Gloucester by air, the plane with General Morris and his staff was sidewiped just as it was landing by a thirty-mile gust of wind and overshot the landing strip. It careened along, leaping a stream where American soldiers were bathing and crashed on the far bank.

One engine burst into flames. All except the general escaped by the after hatch. General Morris, with a broken arm, got his head and shoulders through the forward skylight opening when his foot caught and he was stuck fast. Carl, who had a deep gash in his head, climbed into the fuselage, hauled the general out and, with Nu, another native who had a cut arm, helped American ambulance men carry him back across the stream. As the rescuers got across the plane exploded.

General Morris is recuperating in an Australian Army hospital.

Carl, 30 years old, was a taxi driver in Rabaul before the Japanese invasion and then a carrier on the Kokoda Trail. He is now a member of Royal Papuan Constabulary and has been General Morris' chauffeur for eighteen months. He was on his first plane trip and had previously visited his people in Manua Island after an absence of eleven years.

Mrs. Lydia Way, 90 Years Old, Still Active Despite Her Age

Still retaining faculties of good hearing and eyesight and with mental alertness indicative of a woman decidedly her junior, Mrs. Lydia Way, grand old lady of Thurlow township on Sunday will celebrate her 90th birthday. She resides with her son, Mr. Blake Way, 4th concession of Thurlow.

Born in Tyendinaga township and daughter of pioneer residents of that district, the late Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Besonday, Mrs. Way has lived in Thurlow township for the greater part of her 90 years. As a young girl she lived with her grandparents in Prince Edward county, but since her marriage to the late Mr. Irvine Way she has lived continuously in Thurlow. She is a member of Bethany United Church. Her husband died in 1901.

Maintaining an independence surprising for her advanced years, Mrs. Way lives in one half of her son's home, does her own housework and prepares her own meals. Her home is always neat and tidy but she still has plenty of spare time to knit for the Red Cross and do needle work, a pastime which she very much enjoys. She likes to entertain visitors and gets great enjoyment in visiting relatives and friends. Last summer she spent several days in Belleville and also visited relatives in Prince Edward County.

Besides the son at whose home she stays, there is another son, Mr. Garnet Way of Saskatchewan while there are two step-children, Mr. Horace Way of Picton and Mrs. William Casey of Thurlow.

V.O.N. Supervisor Miss Dawson Pays Visit to Meeting

Miss Dawson, national V.O.N. supervisor of this district, was guest of honor at the monthly meeting of the Victorian Order of Nurses in the Chamber of Commerce on Friday evening. The meeting was presided over by the president, Mrs. Fred Frederickson, who conducted the usual routine of business.

Miss Ethel Gordon in submitting the nurses' report to the assemblage, extended first a warm welcome to Miss Dawson. She then went on to say that one of the local V.O.N. nurses had attended part of the Canadian Health Association Convention which was held in Toronto on November 6, 7, and 8. Dr. Vivien was guest speaker at the annual dinner at the Royal York Hotel, and at the Public Health Nursing Section, Canadian nursing leaders were heard as well as Miss Dorothy Deming, consultant in Public Health Nursing, New York. From the executive of the Canadian Nurses' Association, reports were heard from the committee on Post War planning for nursing at home and abroad. The U.N.R.R.A. plan was also discussed. Miss Smellie met with all the V.O.N nurses in attendance at the convention for a Round Table Conference. "To sum up", said Miss Gordon, "the attendance at the convention was refreshing, instructive and stimulating".

509 Calls in October.

During the month of October, the nurses made 509 calls. At the Well Baby Conference, there was an average of thirty-five babies and pre-school children every Friday. The fall whooping cough clinics got under way, 85 young citizens attending. Miss Johnson, one of the supervisors from the Ontario Department of Health, visited the Baby Conference. Miss Gordon expressed appreciation on behalf of the V.O.N. for the second car which has recently been purchased. In conclusion, she spoke briefly on the subject of pre-natal classes which the V.O.N. is planning to start in the city.

Miss Dawson, in a short address, stressed the scarcity of Public Health nurses. "This year, however, there has been a larger attendance at the Universities taking this particular course, a large part the result of more scholarships being given. A large number of married nurses are also being employed as public health nurses." A decrease in the number of maternity cases in all districts has been noticed", stated Miss Dawson. There has been, however, an increase in visits to older people and to people with acute illnesses. More industrial nursing has been taken on this year. Miss Dawson complimented the local V.O.N. for its fine progress during the past year.

Mr. T. D. Ruston, on behalf of the members present, moved a vote of thanks to Miss Dawson for her attendance at the meeting and for her very interesting address.

Mr. Gordon Barclay, hospital administrator, on behalf of the hospital staff, expressed appreciation to Miss Dawson for the help and cooperation of the V.O.N. nurses with the staff of the hospital in rushed times when nursing service was so scarce.

Tea was served at the close of the meeting, when all the members had the opportunity of meeting and talking with Miss Dawson.

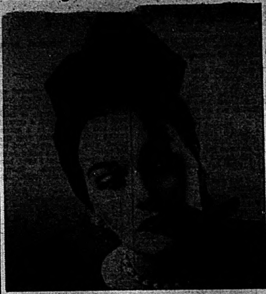
Towering Turbin



By ALICE ALDEN

IT'S ALWAYS high season for the oriental charm of the intricately draped turban, so becoming to so many women. Depicted here is an ultra sophisticated turban designed by Jeanne Tete. It is of felt and satin all black without a hint of color or sparkle to dim its lustrous beauty. The black satin headband clings tightly and covers the hairline while the soft, high felt crown gives it the current "more hat" look.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Good Looks in the Home.

Today's preachment has to do with the mother who fares forth from her home looking like a fasion plate, cute as can be, beautifully groomed, and who trails around her domicile looking like the wrath of heaven in a ragged bathrobe that isn't too clean. Why should she doll up for friends, even strangers, and not care a hang how she looks when she's with Daddy and the kids? As for that, she should endeavor always to appear her prettiest for her own sweet sake.

We know what she will say. She has housework to do, hasn't she? Three times a day a pile of dishes to wash. Beds to make. Babies to bathe. She chases the carpet sweeper over the rugs, shampoos the kitchen range, washes the windows. Well, what of it? Other women do all these things just as well with hair nicely arranged. And a smart little house frock can be bought for a song.

Housework isn't an easy job. It is the same old grind, day after day. You plan meals, you eat them, you wash the dishes; then, next morning, you start all over again. Nothing stays done. But don't forget this, my friend; beautiful women make beautiful homes; and beautiful homes make a beautiful world. There's something in that thought. Suppose you remember this if housekeeping has got you down, if it is growling at you, threatening to put its heels on your neck.

It is observed all too frequently that many a good-looking young wife goes suddenly to seed after the first baby comes. There are reasons. She has taken on a job that is new to her and she feels it is a terrible responsibility. The family cherub is her whole world. She gets up half a dozen times in the night to see if he is still breathing, though he may be as healthy as healthy can be. Robbed of sleep, she loses complexion bloom, gets jittery. Husband comes home at dinner time to find a tired wife who talks about nothing but the child. He loves the baby, too, but feels rather out of things. Time was when he was her one absorbing interest.

For him she curled her hair, put on her prettiest frock, made herself attractive. Now look at her. Her hair fuzzy, complexion fading, figure getting dumpy. It doesn't make sense.

It won't do to skip good-looks chores at any time of life from sixteen to sixty. I don't know of anything that makes the home job more discouraging than a reflection in the mirror of scrambled hair and an untidy house dress.

Why not give your hair a bit of attention when arising? Why not touch the lips with carmine? Only takes a minute. Why not arrange the shopping budget so a certain amount goes for pretty house clothes? Wash dresses are easy to launder and iron these days. They're smart and young-looking.

Children take pride in pretty mothers. It isn't fair to them to fall short of the pulchritude standard.

Advice to the Lovelorn

College Girl Thinks Job as Mother's Helper a Good Practical Education

It's such a joy to get a letter from someone really happy, devotedly and legimately in love with the man or woman to whom one has made the solemnly binding marriage vows, and whose only problem is how to be sufficiently grateful for that blessing. Such a letter came in the morning's mail.

I wish every word of it could be given. It took Evelyn W. twelve pages, typewritten at that, to tell her story, so readers of this column will have to have a much boiled-down edition. A graduate of one of our best co-educational colleges, she is 23 years old, an age when girls have usually lived down harum scarum impulses.

Doing war work she fell in love with an enlisted man of her own age and wanted to marry him. Her family acted up and threatened disinheritance. They were what passes as the aristocracy. The enlisted man came from the wrong side of the railroad tracks. He had character, ambition, was good to look at, and Evelyn preferred him to the dancing men she'd met at the country club.

She knew a good deal about biology, mathematics, had majored in chemistry, and it would take too long to get a job teaching these things. Besides, colleges had completed their staffs when the girl took the bit in her teeth and decided to take a job. She married her enlisted man, accepted a place as maid in the large mid-western city near the camp where her husband was stationed.

Now the girl writes me this delightful letter, telling me that as a mother's helper she's learning a great many things not in the college curriculum. She's learning to cook very well, not the dreary, unappetising stuff so often taught students in domestic science classes. But appetising, well-seasoned dishes from less expensive cuts of meat, well-flavored vegetables and fruit desserts.

She's distressed over the tons of apples and pears left to rot in orchards while their prices are higher than the average family can afford at even the chain stores. Before this happens next Autumn she hopes to enlist college girls who majored in economics to do something intelligent about it.

Meanwhile she's very happy with her enlisted man whose weekend passes provide a belated honeymoon. And when he goes overseas, she will take a teaching job on the staff of her old college. But the education she gets as a mother's helper, she writes me, is just about as good as her college education.

Fashion Flashes

NICE TO LOOK AT even if one doesn't own it is a slim suit of smooth black woollen, its one-button fitted jacket trimmed with collar, pointed notched revers and bracelet cuffs of snowy ermine.

IDEAL for dress-up wear with a suit, or for wear with a separate skirt, is a blouse of white silk jersey beautifully draped and embroidered all over with crystal and white bugle beads in a feathery design.

It's not easy to choose from the wide variety of coats shown this season. A good choice might well be a belted full-length coat on easy fitted lines in gray, red or blue needlepoint woolen with a curved line of cartridge pleating across the chest. Gray Persian lamb for turn-down collar and broad cuffs.

There are many street-length dinner dresses around despite the emphasis on full-length models. Lustrous silver gray satin makes a street-length dinner dress cut on form-fitting lines and highlighted by scattered mother of pearl paillettes. An inverted sweetheart neckline adds interest and charm.

No need to overload fur trimming on a suit. The smartest models use fur discreetly, as does a fitted jacket suit with small collar, high pointed notched revers and two buttons—all of black Persian lamb.

Maybe you would like something with a newer look than your fur jacket. If it is still good, chances are that a furrier can convert it into a smart ascot scarf and muff to dress up an untrimmed suit or coat.

Baptist Church Young Men Hear Inspiring Talk

The men of Victoria Avenue Baptist Church and congregation heard an inspiring and challenging address given by Mr. Frank Inrig of Toronto at a banquet held Friday evening in the church parlors. Mr. Inrig spoke of the men's task in the church and the necessity for Christian witness by winning the world for Christ.

Mr. F. E. Gheaber performed the duties of chairman very capably and an admirable program of music was thoroughly enjoyed by the large gathering. A quartette composed of Messrs. Harry Moorman, Jas. Bankier, H. Evans and F. Jobson, sang two Negro spirituals, "Steal Away" and "I Know The Lord Has Laid His Hands on Me", also Pincutti's "In This Hour." Mr. Ronnie Moorman, clever young cornetist, played two numbers, "Danny Boy" and "I Will Take You Home Kathleen". Mr. James Bankier, tenor, sang "The Blush Rose" and "Without A Song The Day Would Never End". Mr. S. Also Gordon was accompanist of the evening.

Rev. H. O. Eastman, who introduced the guest speaker, spoke in glowing terms of Mr. Inrig's contribution to the work of the Baptist convention. A busy manufacturer, he had found time to give outstanding service to the church and had been President of the Ontario-Quebec convention.

Mr. Inrig touched on the experience of St. Paul in Ephesus, where the church did not seem to be taking root very successfully. But when Paul challenged the men of the church with the question "Have Ye Received the Holy Spirit?" and they subsequently acknowledged and received His power, the church grew and prospered.

"The greatest organization in the world today, bar none, is the Christian Church," asserted Mr. Inrig. It is the greatest in numbers, greatest in power and accomplishment. Jesus said He loved the church and gave His life for it. In spite of everything to the contrary, it is true that the government is upon His shoulders and of the increase of His Kingdom there shall be no end.

"We have a conviction that the Baptist Church has a message and a mission for this hour. The outstanding message in our church is the necessity for regeneration, the emphasis that you must be born again. It is only on that ground that we will have a worthwhile peace. Men must accept Jesus as Savior and Lord. We Baptists put emphasis on the rights and privileges of the individual. We believe in the priesthood of every Christian and his right to present himself individually to the Throne of Grace. That carries with it the thought of responsibility. We should not stand back and ask the pastor to do all the work in witnessing for Christ. It is our church and it is our business to see that it grows. We can give all that we have and all that we are, without reserve, knowing that it is acceptable to the Living God."

Mr. Inrig stated that the Christian Church in Brazil was growing in leaps and bounds because the men are taking active part in all branches of the church, particularly in missionary work. "There is nothing that will move this old world more than Jesus Christ and His Gospel."

The Marry Go Round

The Beard—A Wartime Calamity

The beard is returning to popular fancy, if a London dispatch is to be believed. Last summer, when I spent some time near a naval base, I met several tanned sailors on furlough, each wearing one earring and hiding behind a full-grown hedge of chin-foliage.

They were highly enjoying their piratical make-up, and grinned good-naturedly when civilians turned around to stare at them and giggle. But I thought it just a joke, and not one of the real calamities of war.

I was wrong! What George Bernard Shaw and Monte Woolley failed to accomplish, a few months at sea, or in Iceland have managed to do. Beards are threatening to become the vogue! Good-bye Romeo, Casanova—even Frank Sinatra—all you beardless gallants!

But WHY this new "frightfulness"? Why are men retreating behind this venerable barrier of defence? Are they tired of being a "temptation" or weary of being kissed? Or is this just the last attempt to show the world and the women WHO and which is the Dominant Sex?

Women have helped themselves to everything that was once exclusively man's — his jobs, his trousers (slacks), his haircut and most of his sins and pastimes. But a woman cannot grow a BEARD! That is the last symbol of masculine superiority left to the He-sex! Do you blame him for proudly clinging to it?

However, there is something about a man with a beard which baffles and defeats a woman. In her mind a beard is confused with all the awe-inspiring figures of her childhood — Grandpa, the doctor, the bogieman, Santa Claus and Father time!

Moreover, with his chin completely hidden and only his eyes to give him away, he is a complete mystery—like the veiled ladies of the Orient. How can a girl know whether the man behind that hirsute camouflage is weakening or rebelling — yearning or only yawning—laughing with her or at her?

It's not fair! Give me the smooth Sinatra chin or even the Clark Gable mustache. For if the eyes are the window of the soul, the mouth and chin are the door to the character. And how can a girl know whether the total stranger behind the Rip-Van Winkle disguise who walks to the altar beside her in a caveman, a Prince Charming or a mollycoddle? She can't even tell whether he has a dimple in his chin or an "iron-jaw."

No, I do not think beards are any more likely to come back into popularity than are hoopskirts. In this streamlined day they are just as grotesque and bunglesome as hoopskirts, plumed hats and curled wigs would be.

Besides, kissing a man through a beard is as unsatisfactory as kissing a woman through a veil. No girl wants to fight her way to romance, through a facial defence. So all those men who have brought back beards from Iceland may be well shave them off before Santa gets around with the mistletoe.

Women's Activities

U.P.E. — BELLEVILLE WOMEN'S CLUB

A most delightful afternoon was spent recently by over thirty members of the U.P.E. Belleville Women's Club when Mrs. Graham opened her home on Albert Street.

Assisting Mrs. Graham was her sister, Mrs. Schryver, both of whom spent their girlhood days at Big Island in Sophiasburg.

Mrs. Boyd's group displayed a finished crib quilt which was greatly admired.

In keeping with the Armistice thought Mrs. Weese read "A Mother's Reverie" and "Ode to the Fallen".

Mrs. Boyd gave a sketch of the early life and military career of General McNaughton, now Canada's Minister of Defence. Readings by Mrs. Lent and Mrs. Anderson were given. Miss Jones paid tribute to the life and character of Canada's beloved author and naturalist, the late Jack Miner.

The Club was pleased to welcome Mrs. Norman Montgomery, who gave an interesting paper, "The Autumn of Life". The program closed with old community songs and a contest.

Refreshments were served by the hostesses and assistants and a hearty vote of thank extended them.

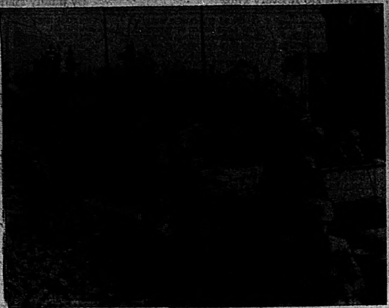
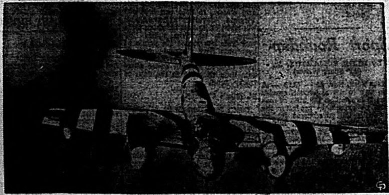
BRITISH TANKS AND U. S. TROOPS AFTER THE ENEMY



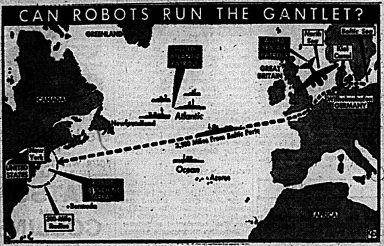
British tanks accompanied by American troops of the 9th Army plow through muddy roads to enter Geilenkirchen, Germany. Their appearance took the Germans completely by surprise.

NEW BIG-GUN MOSQUITO—POWERFUL R.A.F. WEAPON

Seen in flight in England is the new version of the R.A.F.'s famous Mosquito, the Mark XVIII, which carries a six-pounder gun slung beneath the fuselage, with a firing rate of one shot per second. The use of this new plane has been so effective against U-boats that the Nazi underseas craft now need an escort of flak ships. The Mosquito also carries four 303 machine-guns.



HERE IS THE NEW R.A.F. MOSQUITO IN FLIGHT



The question has been raised recently whether Germany might be able to launch some of her new V-2 robot bombs against this continent. It has been suggested that the Nazis might try launching a few of the huge projectiles from U-boats lying off the coast, but the map above illustrates some of the difficulties that such an attack would encounter from Allied defences.

WILL GROUND PLAYFUL PILOTS

WIN CANADIAN CHAMPIONSHIPS

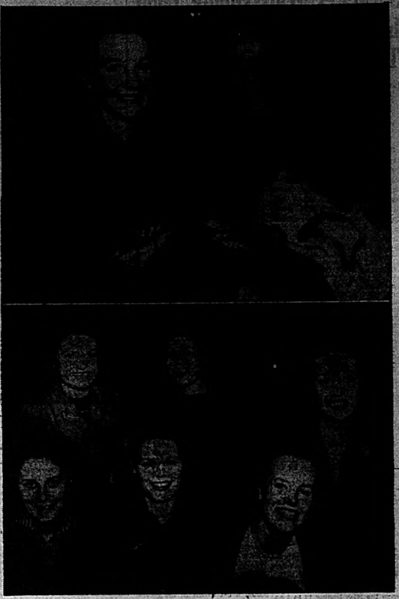
Winners of the Canadian championship cup in the beef cattle judging competition were announced at the convention of the Canadian council on boys and girls club work at the Royal York Hotel, Toronto, Ont. They are pictured here—Bud Gessner of Heffley Creek, B.C., and Bernard Donchi of Vensulla, B.C.

British Columbia entries also carried off the cup in the poultry judging. They were Betty Slater of Walnut Grove, B.C., and Thelma Tuey of Enderby, B.C.

DO YOU SEE DOUBLE?

Doctors at the Fort Logan, Colo., convalescent hospital here thought they were seeing double when the Bartley twins from Keystone, Oklahoma, walked into their office. Pictured here are the identical twins, Boyd, left, and Lloyd (OQ), right. Only way they can be told apart when in uniform is by the Purple Heart medal which Lloyd wears. The staff sergeants have been in the army air forces together since their days of training. They flew all their B-24 missions in the same bomber. Lloyd was right waist gunner and assistant radio operator while Boyd was left waist gunner and assistant engineer. They even married sisters.

R.C.A.F. BRITISH WAR BRIDES ARRIVE IN CANADA



It will be their first Christmas in Canada for forty-two British girls who arrived recently to join their R.C.A.F. husbands at points across Canada. In spite of the long trip, they were a happy group and interested in their new home. All were impressed by the plentiful and varied food received since their embarkation and by the bright lights of Canadian cities. (Upper group) It's a small world as Mrs. Marie Bertrand (left) and Mrs. Barbara Owen found when they embarked for Canada. Both were members of the W.A.A.F., and at one time worked at adjoining teletype machines on the same station. Neither knew the other had married nor left the service until they met on the draft for Canada. Mrs. Bertrand and baby Michael were met at Ottawa by WO1 L. H. Bertrand. They will make their home in Botha, Alberta. Mrs. Owen was also met at Ottawa by her husband, Sgt. J. M. Owen of 331 McGregor St. Sault Ste. Marie, Ont. The friends find it hard to realize that they will be living in the same country and yet be so many miles apart. (Lower group) left to right, front row: Mrs. Eileen Miles, wife of F/Sgt. SHOWING HOW V-2 BOMB IS HURLED FROM PLATFORM

Here for the first time, is an artist's conception based on authoritative analysis and reports, of how V-2 may be hurled from its portable platform, a tracked' vehicle that is towed to the site by a powerful truck. In this drawing the launching ramp, adjustable, has been raised to a 45-degree angle which gives maximum range. Within the armored flash shield the electric firing mechanism is housed. The platform rests on hydraulic jacks which absorb the recoil. The platform has to be cooled by water jets to prevent the heat from distorting the framework. It has been suggested that V-2 could be employed on the decks of submarines to bomb cities on the east coast and for several hundred miles inland.

CONFUSION SWEEPS TRAPPED GERMANS

Allied Headquarters, Mediterranean, Nov. 24 —(CP-Reuter)— German columns caught by British troops and partisans in a pocket on the border of Yugoslavia and Albania "do not know which way to turn," according to Balkan Air Force pilots returning from missions over the country through which thousands of Germans are trying to escape to the north.

Some German vehicles were reported to be moving north and some south inside the pocket.

Allied planes continue to plaster the Germans in the Balkans day and night but an important part of the Luftwaffe is now on this front.

St. Mikes Wins Quinte Loop Interscholastic Football Title Beating Stirling 20-1

Losers Prove a Courageous Team; Scanlan Sustains Broken Ankle With Other Injuries Seen.

FITZPATRICK STARS

St. Michael's Academy won the Bay of Quinte COSSA. football championship beating Stirling High School 20 to 1 in a sudden death game played on the Albert College campus yesterday. The local "Irish" carried too much power along the line and were sparked by their leader, Quarterback Dick Fitzpatrick, who moved the Irish into an early lead with a lone touchdown against a smaller and lighter Stirling squad.

Uncorking some fast plays Stirling took the kick off and moved to the offensive in the initial quarter only to be held on the Irish 21-yard line from where Nelson neatly booted a lofty point to give Coach Powell's lighter squad the opening point. However, Coach Jack Doran's St. Mikes crowd mixed their plays with running passes to add Bob Wilson's overhead effort, that brought the oval far into Stirling's territory from where Fitzpatrick called a fake reverse and himself scampered over for a major try that put the Irish up 5 to 1 from where they were never headed. The courageous Stirling squad came back strongly with extended runs, but were halted at the mid-field stripe from where the Irish took over with Fitzpatrick firing to Moher for a gain, that saw the latter retire with an injured ankle. Fitzpatrick then booted for a single point as the half ended 6-1 for St. Mikes.

Injuries Aplenty

The game was not devoid of accidents as Centre Bernard Scanlan sustained a broken ankle and had to be hospitalized after being examined on the field by club physican Dr. F. R. Ross. Jerry Moher was also a game casualty.

Early in the second half Bob Wilson ran amuck in a double reverse play that netted him some 39 yards for a touchdown, that Fitzpatrick converted with a perfect drop kick moving the Irish leading 12 to 1 as Coach Doran's line was showing its power over the lighter Stirling squad. Lugging the ball overland Gord Donovan crashed over the visitors' goal line for a third St. Mikes try, that Fitzpatrick again made good in a convert.

Come Back Strong

Stirling came right back to show they were far from a defeated squad and went to the air on the offensive to carry the play to St. Mikes' 19, where they were held by a heavier line. Coach Doran's "Young Horsemen" of Wilson, Donovan and Lucy trampled over and around Stirling, but were halted promptly on the latter's 21 yard line from where a kick resulted in a safety touchdown with practically all of the Irish linesmen through on the kill for two points. Duffy, McAuley, Green and Meagher broke through for the final scoring points.

Even in victory the St. Mikes team, now champions of the Bay of Quinte COSSA. group, were high in their praises of the courageous efforts of their lighter and more deadlier tackling opponents, as the losers showed a stronger effort of tackling all along the line.

The line-ups:

Stirling High School — flying wing, Lavender; halves, Haslett, McInroy and Nelson; quarter, Eggleton; snap, Stapley; insides, Hermiston and Thompson; middles, Bush and Stocker; outsides, Lanigan and Bastedo; subs, Brooks and Fanning.

St. Michael's Academy — flying wing, J. Moher; halves, B. Wilson, Donovan and Lucy; quarter, Fitzpatrick; snap, Scanlan; insides, G. Wilson and Duffy; middles, McAuley and B. Moher; outsides, Green and Meagher; subs, Kelleher, Peets, Lorimer, Bradden and Brian.

Referee, Eddie Schreider; Umpire, H. Stevens; Timer, Dave Price.

TUNNEY TO TRY TEAM WRESTLING

Signs Watson and Collins to Meet Rasputin and Dunlop

What may happen at the Hume Arena next week cannot be predicted or even so much as suggested. At any rate wrestling fans of the district can rest assured there will be more action than has been seen in the Market St. sports palace in many a moon. The reason for this is the fact Matchmaker F. Tunney is going to present "team wrestling" to the patrons. Once before this battle royal business was attempted in the local palace de sport with resounding effects. As a matter of fact the grappling pachyderms all but ruined the place.

"There has been a lot of ill-feelings between certain wrestlers appearing in Belleville, so in order to give the boys an opportunity to appease themselves we've signed Ivan Rasputin, the mad Russian and arch enemy of "Whipper Billie" Watson, to team up with the villainous Al Dunlop to form one team. The fans will doubtless be pleased to hear Watson has been teamed with Tom Collins, the fighting Irishman who went to Watson's rescue the other night," stated Promoter Tunney in announcing the next week's show.

For one of the semi-final wrestler Tunney is endeavoring to sign Chief Thundercloud, the full-blooded Iroquois Indian chieftain. There will be the usual two preliminaries.

Cornwall Cookies Regain Leadership

Cornwall, Nov. 25 —(CP)— Cornwall Cookies last night regained leadership of the Interprovincial Hockey League following a 6-3 victory over Shawinigan Falls Cataracts. The Cookies moved two points ahead of the Valleyfield Braves.

The Cookies had to come from behind a 3-1 deficit in the second period to win the game. Proulx gave Cornwall a 1-0 lead in the opening frame which was equalled when Bisson scored on a penalty shot for Shawinigan.

Going into the second period, Trudel and Lafond added other goals for the Cataracts but toward the mid-way mark, Andy Perron and Burr scored making a 3-3 deadlock. Gravel scored the winning marker in the third and before the game was over, Lauzon added two more. Lauzon and Gravel were making their first appearance with the Cookies.

Sport Shorts From Britain

London, Nov. 25 — (CP)—Trainers at Epsom, world-famed as a turf centre and peacetime home of the Derby, have banded together into a co-operative society to develop a scheme they believe will save them thousands of dollars each year in travelling expenses.

Before the war Epsom's 550 flat racers, jumpers and ponies, were carried thousands of miles to race-tracks in all parts of Britain and an authoritative estimate is that for each animal travelling expenses throughout the year averaged about $115.

Recently the trainers formed the Surrey Trainers' Transport Company, and each subscribed for a number of shares. They acquired a horse transport firm with seven horse-carrying trucks and expect to have 15 to 20 when the scheme develops on peacetime lines.

Any profits from this expense-cutting scheme will return to the shareholders. Originator of the plan is Owner-Trainer William Smith who is acting general manager.

Danny Webb, Montreal Negro featherweight is the latest sensation in Britain's boxing world.

Practically unknown before he beat flyweight champion Jackie Paterson in a non-title bout recently, Webb has had many offers since then but his army duties have prevented him accepting most of them. In one of his latest, Danny took a points decision up in Bristol over Boyo Rees, a veteran who formerly held the Welsh lightweight championship. It was Rees' first defeat in Bristol in 14 years and he has fought 80 bouts there.

On the same card, a fellow Montrealer, Harry Hurst, drew with Joe Hyman of British Guiana over 8 rounds. Harry, a corporal in the Royal Canadian Air Force, weighed 140 pounds — 10 1/2 pounds less than his opponent.

Ben Duffy, Royal Navy petty officer who at one time gave every indication of climbing to title rank in the boxing field, took probably the worst beating of his career when he tangled with Al Phillips, a hard-hitting lightweight whom East Londoners call "The Tiger." It was the fourth time he had been beaten by Phillips, chief contender for the British featherweight title.

Duffy lasted the eight rounds but hit the canvas four times during the bout at London's Queensberry Club.

Up at Wolverhampton, Middleweight Vince Hawkins, a railway fireman, won his 62nd professional bout without defeat when he bested Johnnie Clements of Glasgow on points over 10 rounds.

On the same card, Wales' Ronnie James, in his first fight since he won the British lightweight title a couple of months ago, trimmed Scotland's Jimmy Watson. The fight was stopped in the sixth round.

Watson holds the Scottish lightweight title. James became British lightweight king by beating the holder, Eric Boon, at an open-air park in Cardiff.

Toronto, Nov. 25 — (CP) — This year's Grey Cup final, so-called, is being played today, but elsewhere in this broad domain there are discontented people who refuse to believe the winner will be the real champion. Hamilton Wildcats and Montreal Navy are playing because their leagues filed entries and posted the necessary bond with the Canadian Rugby Union, but supporters of Toronto Navy and Winnipeg R.C.A.F. Bombers aren't satisfied their favorites are less worthy than those officially blessed.

Rumors are rife that Toronto Navy may challenge Wildcats, assuming they win, in a war charity game. The Tars are reported practicing and would like a crack at the winners of the series, since they already have trimmed Montreal Navy very decisively.

Winnipeg airmen also have a strong team, and fans there are lamenting the fact service restrictions on athletes prevent them challenging for the Cup.

Much the same situation arose last year when Halifax Navy had a strong squad that many thought would have given Wildcats a run for their money, but no entry had been posted, so the Cats left the field with the honors.

Here and There:

The fisticuff boys in Vancouver have settled their differences without bloodshed. Promoter Jack Whelan has been given the green light to hold Saturday night wrestling shows, although the Vancouver Boxing and Wrestling Commission had refused him permission. Whelan just went ahead and held his shows anyway, so the Commission had to give in after a few vague threats . . . Navy Lieut. Bobby Pearce, Canada's ace sculler, has been transferred to Hamilton, Ont., and his place as sports officer at H.M.C.S. Donnacona, Montreal, has been taken by Lieut. Ian Barclay, outstanding athlete of Montreal and Ottawa. Barclay was a member of the schoolboy cricket team that went to England in 1939 . . . The fans around North Bay, Ont., will be blinded when the Olympics hockey squad takes the ice. Their colors are maroon and gold, and the arms are being adorned with magnificent checks of the same colors . . . Former Detroit Red Wing star, Sid Abel, has been transferred to Montreal, and is playing hockey with Lachine R.C.A.F.

LEAFS FACE REAL TEST IN BRUSH WITH CANADIENS

Have Chance to Regain Top Spot by Beating Habitants in Toronto

By The Canadian Press

Toronto Maple Leafs, who each year are noted for their burst of speed in early-season games in the National Hockey League tonight face a real test and a chance to regain top spot in the six-team circuit when they meet Montreal Canadiens at Maple Leaf Gardens.

The prospects, however, are not bright as the Leafs will be without of the services of their ace winger, Dave (Sweeney) Schriner, injured a week ago when he crashed into his own goal post, and Bill Ezinicki, rookie acquired from Oshawa Generals, last year's Canadian Junior champions, who has joined the Canadian Army.

Coach Hap Day's charges, who won their first six games in the 1944-45 campaign before going down to defeat at the hands of Detroit Red Wings in two successive games and then dropped a 5-1 decision to Boston Bruins last Thursday, clash with last year's Stanley Cup champions twice this weekend in a home-and-home series.

Canadiens, who currently lead the league with a one-point margin over Toronto have dropped two games to Toronto — the only contests they have lost in 10 starts. They played to a 3-3 tie with Detroit last Thursday.

In the only other game tonight the cellar-dwelling Chicago Black Hawks play Detroit Red Wings at the Border City.

Hawks, with only one win and a tie game in nine starts, have their work cut out to take the Red Wings, who will be gunning for a double victory to give them a better hold on third place.

FAVOR WILDCATS TO WIN GAME FROM MONTREAL

Joe Soyka, Due to Injuries, Will Not Play for the Champions

Hamilton, Nov. 25 —(CP)— Hamilton Wildcats, favorites to win their second successive Dominion Football championship and the 10th in the city's history, take the field here today against H. M. C. S. Donnacona of Montreal.

Only one of the season's regulars, Joe Soyka, who was injured last Saturday in the Ontario final against Toronto Balmy Beaches at Toronto, will be missing from the line-up. Otherwise, the Cats will field a strong aggregation against the Sailors, winners of the Quebec Rugby Football Union title, who dropped a 12-1 decision to Toronto's H. M. C. S. York for the Canadian Navy championship at Toronto last Saturday.

Win or lose, the Cats will bid farewell after the match to one of the team's oldest and best ball handlers. He is Jimmy Simpson, 38-year-old veteran and only active survivor of the Hamilton Tigers club which lost out in the Canadian finals to Winnipeg Blue Bombers in 1935.

Simpson, who retired after his team won four successive Ontario Rugby Football Union titles and two Canadian championship, returned to the field when his teammate, Brian Timmis, took over the Wildcats in 1943.

After this game, however, he has stated he will retire for good.

THREE JUNIOR B CLUBS ACCEPTED AT O.H.A. MEETING

Lindsay Will Have an Intermediate Team in Coming Season

Toronto, Nov. 25 — (CP) — The executive of the Ontario Hockey Association at its final meeting here last night before the annual conference today accepted three junior "B" and four intermediate clubs into the membership.

F. W. Moore of Port Colborne, president, presided.

Junior "B" clubs accepted were: Port Credit, Etobicoke Athletic Club and Victory Aircraft.

Intermediate clubs were: Lindsay, Oakwood, Arsenal and Omemee.

It was decided to give the Oshawa junior "B" club, which plays in the South Ontario League, a bye into the play-offs.

Jack Fulton, of Timmins, Ont., newly-elected president of the Northern Ontario Hockey Association, and secretary Bob Crosby of Schumacher, Ont., attended the meeting and discussed revision of the juvenile affiliation with the O.H.A. and president A. A. Morrison of the Ontario Minor Hockey Association. The two organizations agreed to "thresh out" their differences at a meeting here during the week-end.

With Hamilton, Ont., out of the junior "A" competition, it was decided that the remaining seven clubs would play a double schedule with the six top teams to enter the play-offs. The first and second teams will play a best-of-five series and the third and fourth and fifth and sixth a best of three series with the winner of the last two meeting in a best of three series for the right to play the victor of the other series in a best-of-seven final.

Transfers Approved

The executive approved a number of transfers within O.H.A. territory. All were confined to junior "A" clubs.

They were: to Toronto St. Michael's — Leo Gravelle from Port Colborne.

To St. Catharines — George Edwards, from Brantford.

To Oshawa Generals — James Davis from Stratford; Barry Sullivan from Kingston; Phil Metcalf, Ronnie Matthews, from Toronto Marlboros; Sam McNabney, Sid Smith, from Toronto De La Salle; Bruce Gallagher, from Kirkland Lake.

To Galt: Alec Bariko from St. Catharines; Thomas Pollock, Robert Lickie, George Potter, from Timmins; Edward Small from South Porcupine; William Adamo, Martin Pavelick and J. Krmpotick, from Sault Ste. Marie.

The executive made a satisfactory settlement with the St. Catharines Saints and the Hamilton senior club regarding their trips to Kingston last year. Details were not made public.

It was announced the O.H.A. referees meeting will be held here Saturday, Dec. 2 and the O.M.H.A., which holds its annual meeting here the same day, have been invited to attend.

What's Doing in Sport

By The Canadian Press

Winding up his exhibition tour while on leave from the U. S. Army, Sgt. Joe Louis, world heavyweight champion, last night drew almost 9,000 fight fans to Chicago Stadium to watch him pummel Dan Merritt, 209-pound negro of Cleveland, in a three-round display during which the titleholder sank his opponent four times.

After having his Canadian Army draft status reportedly clarified at Victoria, B. C., Alex Ritson, a forward player, is expected to report to the New York Rangers of the N. H. L. in time for the scheduled game with Detroit Red Wings Dec. 7, it was announced at New York last night. Ritson formerly played for Indianapolis.

Two features, the $25,000 Waldron handicap for two-year-olds and the $25,000 Pimlico Cup race at 2½ miles, are on the closing program today of the 22-day joint meeting at Pimlico under the auspices of Maryland's combined race tracks.

Sport Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
(AP Sport Writer)

New York, Nov. 25 — (AP) — A sure way to dry a football coach's tears is to mention the kind of material he expects to get after the war, with the government footing the bills under the "G. I. Bill of Rights." . . . For instance, how about this trio of 18-year-olds who are performing for service teams this fall? . . . Johnny Donaldson of Jessup, Ga., rated the most sensational runner uncovered this season at the Jacksonville, Fla., naval air station; Orville Baker, 212-lb. fullback at the Marine Officers' School, New Orleans, (on a weak team he has stood out in every game); Charley Justice, high scoring scatback of the Bainbridge, Md., Naval Training centre (a standout against the toughest kind of competition).

Conflicting Opinions:

Greasy Neale, watching the Redskins taking a licking from his Philadelphia Eagles: "They're ruining their biggest asset — Sammy Baugh. He's the second best football player in the league — Luckman's the best — and they're misusing him with the T formation."

Dud de Groot, Redskin coach (before that game): "Baugh has to be back in Texas every week. He has done a magnificent job under unfavorable conditions. He is the most valuable to Washington of any man, including George Preston Marshall."

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

A golfer has just completed a very successful round and gave his caddie threepence as a tip.

"Thank you, sir," said the caddie, "I can tell fortunes with pennies. Would you like me to tell yours?"

"Yes, go ahead."

"Well, sir (looking at his hand with the three pennies on it), the first tells me you're a Scotsman."

"Right."

"The second that you're a bachelor."

"Right again."

"The third that your father was also."

Ohio's Test.

The big game in American football today is the Ohio State versus Michigan game on which hinges the championship of the Big Ten. In eight games this season the Ohio "Buckeyes" have yet to taste the bitter dose of defeat. The team from Columbus has scored 269 points while their opponents have scored but 65 against them in the eight games. On the other hand Michigan has won eight of its nine games this year, bowing only to Indiana by a 20 to 0 score. In their nine games the "Big M" team has scored 190 points as against 73 scored by opponents. While all of this is going on Army and Navy are resting up for the picture game at Baltimore next Saturday when 70,000 fans will jam the Maryland bowl for this 1944 grid classic. If Yale can beat the Virginia "Cavaliers" at home old Eli will boast of its first unbeaten team since 1923. In seven games this year Yale has scored 114 points as opponents have scored only 26 against them. However, the Elis have enjoyed a much easier schedule than they did in the days of Ducky Pond.

St. Mike's Champs.

Coach Jack Doran's St. Michael's Academy gridders hung up their second consecutive Bay of Quinte senior COSSA. Interscholastic rugby football title by beating Stirling High 20 to 1 yesterday.

It is to be hoped that the Quinte Interscholastic loop will be ready to step out into full COSSA. competition in 1945. After all it appears as though there are as good secondary school gridders in Belleville as elsewhere, despite the fact this city has three schools contending for such honors. In years past Belleville held its Interscholastic football head high and there is no reason why such shouldn't be the case in 1945.

As for yesterday's Quinte championship game, Coach Powell's lighter Stirling squad did themselves a glorious effort and were in no degree disgraced. On the other hand Skipper Doran's local "Irish" held up in the line and were blessed with the strong work of Dick Fitzpatrick, their quarterback, who has proven himself as one of the best Interscholastic football players seen in Belleville for these many years. Of course Dick has such backfielders as Bob Wilson, Gord Donovan, Jerry Moher and Bob Lucy to depend on. And that quartet seldom let him down on his calls. (That's football.)

Peterboro's Views.

Regarding the Interscholastic rugby football in Belleville, Sports Editor Fred Craig seemed quite pleased to hear Belleville would not be in the COSSA. playdowns this year. Fred commented as follows:

"Belleville's St. Michael's Academy team won the interscholastic championship of the Bay of Quinte city yesterday when they swamped Belleville Collegiate 26 to 0. The Irish team played smart football, sparked by Fitzpatrick, accurate-passing quarterback and were much too good for the Collegiate who had previously defeated Albert College 6 to 0. Had the St. Michael's team elected to go on into the COSSA playdowns they would undoubtedly have been strong opposition for Peterboro C.V.S. whom they were to have met in the semi-finals. The Belleville students played six-man rugby all season but their convincing win over the Belleville Collegiate in the orthodox brand yesterday showed that they have adapted themselves to the 12-man variety without much trouble. St. Mike's will play Stirling High School for the Bay of Quinte COSSA title and then call it a season."

Trouble Ahead.

After the hectic terminations of recent wrestling bouts at the Hume Arena, Promoter Frank Tunney stepped in and gave all concerned just what they've been leading up to—team wrestling.

However, it looks as though Marse Tunney really put his team of Tom Collins and Billie Watson over the well known barrell when he signed them to meet Bunny Dunlop and Ivan Rasputin in the season's first team wrestling go. Rasputin is recognized as the No. 1 hate of Watson and with Dunlop on his side it looks like a rough night for the ladies' favorite.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 541

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

An expert is a player who can make mistakes as well as you. If your idea is a whiz, it could be just as good as his. So, any bid can be in season if backed up by conclusive reason.

Enter a discussion over this hand:

♠ Q 3
♥ A K Q J 10 8 6 2
♣ A 6

This hand came up in a duplicate tournament, where all tables play the same hands. Different openings were one heart, two hearts, three hearts, four hearts, five hearts, six hearts.

After the contest I was asked to decide the correct opening. Before giving my opinion, I asked each player to give me his motive for selecting the bid he did.

Few players spend a generation trying to learn bridge. Like me. Not all players have had a chance to learn Horse Sense. Like you. We must be tolerant of the views of others.

So, when a player picks out a certain bid, he may have his own reason. His reason may not be a good one. But it must seem good to him. Else he would have made a different selection.

You may be interested in the reasons given by each player for his choice. So, in this series, I will discuss the virtues of each as it applies to this hand.

An opener must determine his first bid without knowing what is held by partners and opponents. To select the opening, consider two factors: What you show partner; what you want him to show you.

If you strictly follow good rules, the rule you use has already taken both these factors into consideration. It is like applying a predigested group of efficient estimations.

If you are a "natural" player, your instinct may tell you. If you are a "psychological" player, you may decide by inference.

Any method of deciding is good if it is correct.

O.H.A. RE-ELECTS ALL OFFICERS FOR NEXT YEAR

S. R. Burrows of Belleville Again Becomes Member of the Executive Committee

Toronto, Nov. 25 —(CP)— Re-election of officers of the Ontario Hockey Association was announced today by President F. W. Moore of Port Colborne in his address to the Association's annual meeting.

"It has been decided that due to the uncertainty of the present times, no change in your officers be made this year," he said. "Present indications again point to a season of unusual conditions."

There were many difficulties and uncertainties last season. The Senior series was disrupted three times by the withdrawal of service teams and there was a scarcity of entries for the Intermediate and Junior B series. However, the Junior A clubs enjoyed a highly successful season.

The report of treasurer George Dudley showed that receipts last year amounted to $11,347.51 and a bank balance of $2,350.24 Oct. 1, 1943, brought the total to $13,697.75. Expenditures totalled $9,779.26 and the bank balance last Sept. 30 was $3,918.49. The receipts included $8,891.25 in revenue from play-offs, the Junior A series accounting for $5,867.71. The balance sheet showed assets of $13,918.49 with liabilities of $30 of payable current accounts.

The report of the executive committee, over the signature of Secretary W. A. Hewitt, described the seventh consecutive championship for Oshawa Generals in the Junior A series as the feature of the association's fifth wartime hockey season. The Generals, who also won the Memorial Cup and the Dominion title, established an all-time record for major competition with their seventh title. Hamilton won the Senior title, St. Catharines the Intermediate A title and De La Salle Oaklands the Junior B title.

HAMILTON MAJORS OVERCOME LEAD TO BEAT TORONTO

Five-Goal Splurge in Last Period Wipes Out Goal Lead for Opposition

By The Canadian Press

Hamilton Majors copped their opening senior O.H.A. fixture of the season 9-5 at Hamilton last night by taking Toronto Spaffords into camp with a roaring five-goal final-period rally to overcome a 5-4 lead held by the visitors in the second session. By their victory, Majors went into a first-place tie with St. Catharines Saints with one win apiece.

Dillon Brady proved to be his old scoring self for Hamilton with a total of five goals and a couple of assists while Doug Runions accounted for a brace, Johnny Conick and Robertson notching one each. For Staffords, Dafoe beat goalie Childs on two occasions, and other visiting net-bulgers were Carr, Moorehouse and Drummond.

In the junior "A" series, St. Catharines Falcons captured their second straight game to lead the western group by winning out 5-3 at Port Colborne after the neighborly rivals had been deadlocked 3-3 going into the last period. The teams were tied 1-all at the finish of the initial frame. White was the scoring star for the Falcons, shooting their first counter early in the fray and winding up with both tallies in the closing round for a total of three. Falcons' other scorers were Hockings and Davis. Bowen, Savicky and Zeppa counted for the losers.

At St. Catharines, the senior Saints overwhelmed Toronto Army 11-3 in an exhibition affair.

MIKE TURNESA LEADS PARADE IN GOLF TOURNEY

Slammin' Sammy Snead, Just Out of Navy, in Second Place

Portland, Ore., Nov. 25 — (AP)— The forgotten man of the tournament, Mike Turnesa of White Plains N.Y., was leading the Portland Open today as a crack field of professionals and amateurs teed off in the third round of the 72-hole Open, $13,500 war bonds event.

Less spectacular than many of his fellow-pros, Mike put together the two most consistent rounds for a 36-hole total of 142 and no. 1 position in the parade.

Heavy footing underneath and greens made more tricky by water failed to affect Turnesa's game. He racked up a 36-35—71 first round to take second place. Identical nine-hole scores yesterday enabled him to pass the opening day's leader, Sam Snead of Hot Springs, Va.

Snead trailed Turnesa by two shots as he went into third round. After a two-under-par 70 for the first day, Slammin' Sam lost his putting touch yesterday to take a 74, for a 36-hole total of 144.

Only Turnesa had shaded par figures (35-37—72) at the half-way mark and Snead had equalled par.

The field was trimmed to the low scoring 51 pros and 28 amateurs for the last two rounds, the final eighteen to be played Sunday.

RAY ROBINSON WINS DECISION

Detroit, Nov. 25 — (AP) — Ray (Sugar) Robinson, New York welterweight, won a unanimous decision last night over Vic Dellicurti, another New Yorker, in a 10-round bout before 7,833 spectators at Olympia.

Robinson, who weighed 149 lbs., spotted his opponent nine pounds, but he balanced that disadvantage with fast footwork and rapid punches, battering the outclassed Dellicurti with hooks and jabs, right crosses and every other type of blow until his rival was groggy and crimson.

In a preliminary bout, Al Ellis, 118, Detroit, knocked out Chuck Ackworth, 120, Toronto, in the last round of a six-rounder.

Little Benny's Note Book

We were eating breakfast and ma looked at me and pop and shook her head sad, saying, Such a family. Really, William I mean really, I dont know which is the most aggrevating, you or Benny.

I plead innocent, pop said, and I said, Aw G, ma, what's a matter, what am I doing except just sitting here drinking my milk without even spilling any?

I declare the 2 of you together are enough to exhawst the patience of a proverbial saint, ma said. You've made some wierd bids during the course of our bridge life, William, but I must say you topped your highest climax by bidding a small slam with not even a queen in your hand and then bursting out laughing and apparently expecting everybody else to think it was just as funny, she said, and pop said, Hay, what's all this, when was all that?

And what did I find when I came home? ma said. I found a gleeming streak of toothpaste all the way from the dining room to the door of Benny's room, and when I woke him up he had the audacity to calmly explain that he was playing a game called Commando Trail, she said, and I said, Aw G, ma, when did that happen? You're just imagining things, I said.

There was no imagination about it, I actually dreamed both those gastly incidents last night, ma said. Oh dear, what a way to start the day wrong, she said, and pop said, But for Pete sake you're not actually blaming us, are you?

Certainly I am, and with just and accurate cause, because William Potts if you hadn't trumped my good trick while we were playing with the Hewses the other night such a thing would never of occurred to me, even in a dream, and the same thing applies to Benny persistently leaving the top off the tube of toothpaste, ma said, and pop said, Yee gods, and I said, Good night.

Being the end of the subject on account of pop being late for his office and me being almost late for school.

Kenesaw Mountain Landis, Baseball Commissioner Since 1921, Dies in Chicago Hospital

Death Closes the Career of One of Country's Outstanding Sports Leaders

Chicago, Nov. 25 —(AP)— Kenesaw Mountain Landis, 78, commissioner of organized baseball since 1921, died at St. Luke's Hospital at 6:25 a.m. E.D.T. today.

Landis' death followed an illness of about seven weeks. He entered the hospital Oct. 2, suffering from a severe cold and went to the hospital for a rest and physical check-up.

Last night his physician reported his condition as "low" but there was no indication later during the night and early morning hours that death was imminent.

Members of his family were at his bedside when he died.

The death of the white-haired, colorful baseball chief ended the career of one of the country's outstanding sports leaders.

His enforced stay in hospital prevented him for the first time in his almost 24 years as commissioner from attending a World Series, his physician advising that he not go to St. Louis for the annual fall classic.

His death came just one week and a day after a Major League Baseball Committee had recommended that at the expiration of his current term, Jan. 12, 1946, he be re-elected for a seven-year term. He observed his 78th birthday last Monday.

Mrs. Landis, who also had been confined to the hospital having recently suffered a fractured wrist, and Leslie M. O'Connor, his secretary, were at his bedside when the end came.

Mr. O'Connor announced that in compliance with Landis' wishes, no funeral services will be held.

During his tenure as commissioner of baseball, he ruled the national sport with an iron hand, calling into play his years of experience as a jurist, including a term that gained him national prominence on the federal court bench. Into his rulings went years of intimate relationships with baseball, as an ardent fan, as an intimate of players, managers and club owners, and as an idol of the fans who wanted fair play in dealings between clubs.

Physicians explained his physical set-back as the result of hours of hard labor in a Victory Garden, and in the grounds, at a new home he purchased for his family last summer.

But even in hospital, he could not miss the 1944 World Series and a radio was by his bedside as the Browns and Cardinals fought for the world title.

In New York, Ford Frick, President of the National League, said: "It is a great shock to be," when told of Judge Landis' death.

V. Dupuis Denies Report of Statement

Ottawa, Nov. 25 —(CP)—Vincent Dupuis, Liberal member in the Commons for Chambly-Rouville, last night denied a report quoting him as saying that he would "never be able to be elected as a Liberal in my riding" as result of the government's action in authorizing dispatch overseas of 16,000 draftees.

The Canadian Press Thursday night quoted Mr. Dupuis to that effect in a story describing the reaction of members to the government's conscription policy.

"I never said such a thing," said Mr. Dupuis. "I would not say any such thing before the question is finally settled in the Commons."

Dana Porter, Provincial Minister of Planning and Development, said in an address here last night.

He described the work of his department and said plans were being made for the rehabilitation of returned men and war industries workers.

GYPSY BLOOD

By MARGARET NORRIS

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN.

Anna hadn't meant to tell Jim so much—it all just tumbled out because he was so kind and understanding and had started the confidences. She expected him to look crestfallen at this astounding revelation to find that his princess for a night was only Cinderella in rags. But he didn't even look surprised. Instead he smiled more kindly than ever.

"You funny little Anna from Poland! Don't worry about the Prince. In the end he always marries the peasant girl and life is stranger than the fairy tales. And remember now, you promised, you're my princess for tonight. Speak out, fair lady, your orders? What shall be our plan? while our faithless loves dance on at the Baldwin house, we shan't be desolate."

"You really mean that?" asked Anna.

"Cross my heart and hope to die."

"Then you shall take me on the most wonderful party I've ever been on in my life where there are music and flowers and dancing and such people as I've longed to dance with."

"No sooner said than done, my Princess."

He stepped on the gas again.

Anna and Jim sped toward home in the car. It was very shockingly late — rather it was shockingly early, as proved by the moon in the sky, a very old, sick looking ghost of a moon, three-quarters eaten away, hurrying fast to get out of the sky before the sun should obscure it completely.

"It's three o'clock in the morning."

"I've danced the whole night through," sang Anna in a gay little treble, slightly off key, perhaps.

"Well, you don't look it," said her dancing partner. Jim took his eyes off the road and as though inviting calamity turned them full on the face of the girl. "You look fresh as the dawning and starry eyed as the night."

"Very nicely phrased—and that's just how I feel. And you—are you tired, Jim?"

"I could lick the world with one arm tied behind me."

"That makes it unanimous (to quote yourself). Shall I tell you a secret, Jim?"

"Go ahead, you've already told me several tonight."

"Yes, isn't it dreadful—I've poured confidences in you as though you were a well. I've told you just whom I'm in love with and why and how foolish I know it is, but of course I expect you to behave like a well and let none of it all leak out."

"Don't worry about that—and this other secret?"

"It's not much of a secret at that. It's that this has been the most wonderful party I've ever been on in my life and that you are the most wonderful prince pro-tem that any girl could have."

"Then as a prince for a night I'm no failure?"

"You're utterly perfect, Jim."

"But only of use as a pastime. No good for a permanent prince?"

"Don't joke, you don't even want that role. Harry's my own true love. He doesn't know it himself, of course, but some day he'll find out."

"If I have to tell him myself" added Jim. But she put her hand over his mouth.

"Sh! that's my dearest secret. You promised not to tell."

"But I have to be bribed to keep it."

"How?"

"I'll be satisfied with a kiss. You haven't given me one tonight. Do you think that is quite fair?"

"Of course you've behaved very wonderfully and if you can't be happy without it—"

"I can't—not when I look at you." And then Jim accepted his bribe.

It was not an unpleasant sensation. Anna emerged flushed, wondering why she could love one man and enjoy being kissed by another.

"That's a custom that grows on me" said Jim. He kissed her a second time.

"Don't spoil it" said Anna. That's rather enough." He was pastmaster in the art. "You must have had lots of experience to do it so very —nicely. I think that means we must say goodnight."

They had turned in the tree bordered driveway that led to the Baldwin estate. The house was dark and that twilight gray which marks the witching hour 'twixt night and dawn shrouded the world. It was the hour when even the strongest is weak.

"You're making it hard to remember that I'm only second choice," said Jim as he brought the car to a halt in front of the big House by the Sea.

"You're a very nice Prince but remember this: things always look very different in the morning."

With this Anna slipped quickly out of the car and disappeared round the driveway to the path that led to the gardener's cottage, her humble quarters. Jim mounted the steps of the big house and she heard the door shut behind him.

The big house was dark—not a sign of light. The revels of the evening were over. The last guest had gone from the party to which Anna had not been invited. Rather wearily and with mingled emotions she stood and gazed at the big gray world upon which the sun was so soon to rise—this world which was treating her so strangely. And not so badly, after all. She had had a wonderful evening.

Anna wondered in which room Harry Baldwin slept, in the big white house in the shadows. Did one wee, little, wispy dream of herself ever disturb his radiant slumbers? Probably not, or his attitude toward her would be very different. But why worry now?—as Jim had said, she was far too young to mourn.

Anna turned to go when suddenly a curiously flickering light shone through one of the windows of the House by the Sea. It was not electricity nor was it a candle. It was a reddish strangely insistent light, but veiled as though by smoke. It seemed to grow brighter as she watched, more powerful, redder and blacker.

Then a volume of smoke appeared mingling with the gray light of the dawn.

Anna knew that the light meant fire!

The House by the Sea was on fire and nobody knew it but herself!

Anna tried to scream but no sound came forth. She tried to run but she could not move. For a second that seemed an eternity she stood as though turned to stone then—

"Fire!" she screamed at the top of her voice. "Fire! The house is on fire!"

Like the wind she ran toward that part of the house where the crazy dancing light was each moment growing brighter and stronger, under the sleeping porch. She tried the door, but it was locked. She tried to break it down, hurling against it all the strength that was her peasant heritage.

"Fire! Fire!" she screamed again. "Don't you know the house is on fire?"

The fire department, the gardener's help, the hose to attach to the waterpower—all these were of secondary importance to rousing the occupants. Why didn't they hear her? Were they already dead? Were they drunk with sleep or smoke? If only she could waken the servants. But it was as though everyone were dead.

Anna ran to the front of the house, up the steps of the broad verandah and once more pounded on the door. But it too, refused to open. In the extremity of the hour, she seized a porch chair and raising it high crashed it against a front window. There was a shiver of glass, then a jagged hole with needle sharp, ugly projections, which Anna measured for her body as a cat measures space with its whiskers. The opening looked small but she would take a chance. Carefully she wedged her way through, but a sharp pain and the sound of cloth ripping told her it had not been wide enough. But what matter—she was in at last.

The room in which she found herself was ghostly dark and, unfamiliar with its layout, she groped her way, feeling ahead with her hands, the sharp tang of smoke in her nostrils. She felt as though she were exploring an unknown peril.

She knew that the house was full of guests, the young people of Louise Baldwin's house party, and that the sleeping rooms were on the second floor. After an eternity of stumbling during which the smoke grew denser, she felt the balustrade of a stairway beneath her hand and mounted, still screaming, "Fire!" Her voice rang out in the dead hush of the night like the screech of a motor siren.

She pounded on one door and opened it. "Fire! The house is on fire! Get up!" Sleepy voices answered. There were startled movements from indefinite forms silhouetted dimly in the gray light of the dawning. Assured they were roused, Anna ran on to the next. The long row of rooms seemed endless and each one was occupied.

Frightened forms in careless negligee gathered in the hall. They all looked alike, the boys and the girls; Anna could recognize none of them. There was a shouting of names like the calling of role, a well mannered stampede down the stairway.

"Turn on the lights"

"But they won't go on!"

"Is everyone out of the house?"

"Where is Louise? shouted someone. Then everyone took up the cry—

"Louise! Louise! Where are you?"

"Dear God! She's on the sleeping porch!"

There was a rush of young men toward the stairway, but smoke had cut off the approach; it was like a volcano in action and even the most courageous fell back, baffled by the futility of it.

Everyone was running about half crazed; the girls in the party were crying; Mrs. Baldwin was moaning and wringing her hands. "We've got to get her somehow!"

"Here get a ladder!" called one of the boys; "we'll get her from the outside. Run a ladder up to the sleeping porch." Everyone started that way.

"Look!" shouted Harry Baldwin.

On a second verandah, veiled in a screen of smoke, stood Anna in torn, smoke-blackened garments holding in her arms the limp form of Louise Baldwin. With her burden slung over her shoulder she was striding the balcony rail, feeling with her foot for the pillar that led down to the ground.

"Wait! You can't make it! We'll get a ladder!" shouted the terror stricken crowd below. But the flames were already singeing her hair; there was no time to hesitate. To remain was sure death; to come down was a hopeless task.

A grape vine, old as the house itself, had overgrown the pillar, its woody tendrils were like rope. Anna balanced her foot on one of them; by blessed chance it supported the burden. Slowly, as though on a ladder, she lowered herself step by step, one arm clutching tightly the unconscious girl, the other gripping the pillar.

It was silent as a cinema drama for the crowd below held their breath. Some of them closed their eyes and prayed, fearful of what was to come. One of the boys climbed to meet them; the rest held outstretched arms from below.

"I got her!" said Anna triumphantly, as both of them dropped to the ground. A paean of praises rose to their lips—but Anna heard none of it. She lay in a pitiful heap on the ground.

"Hurry!" cried someone. "Get a doctor! The girl is hurt!"

The sea was singing in Anna's ears when she opened her eyes to the world again and the sun was streaming through the window of her room in the gardener's cottage. It seemed just like any of the summer mornings to which she had been awakening here until the jagged pain and the bandages reminded her it was quite different.

When Anna closed her eyes she could see again in the crazy light of the fire, and feel herself sway on her perilous descent, Louise Baldwin in her arms.

She sat up in bed and examined herself in the mirror on the opposite wall. The face that tried to smile back at her had a bandage over one eye and was topped by curiously ragged hair, bitten off by the flames. But there was still a pansy-like sauciness to the one good eye exposed and to the pert little nose and mouth. At least, it might have been worse she told herself consolingly.

There was a knock on her door. "Come in," Anna called.

Mrs. Baldwin and Harry entered, their arms overflowing with flowers, their faces expressive of mingled emotions, love gratitude, anxiety.

"How are you, my dear, this morning?" Mrs. Baldwin leaned over the bed and put her hand, very gently, on Anna's strangely ragged hair. Harry remained at a proper distance, smiling down at the invalid with a look that made her forget the jagged pain and the bandages. The situation pleased her mightily. It was very easy to muster a smile.

"I'm feeling splendidly, thank you," she lied.

"I told you how plucky she was!" Harry flashed the assertion at his mother with all the pride of ownership.

"Oh, my dear, my dear!" said Mrs. Baldwin, "If words could tell you how grateful we are—"

But Anna waved her aside with a careless gesture as though saving lives were just part of the day's work. "The house—did it go completely?" she asked in an effort to change the subject.

"It's the most beautiful pile of ashes you ever saw in your life," said Harry. "One might call it 'Ashman's Delight' instead of the 'House by the Sea.'"

"And Louise?"

"Not a burn, thanks to you, dear child. Merely suffering from shock. But it's you we've come to talk about. We want to know your plans."

"Plans?" laughed Anna. "I never had a plan. I'm the child of fate and chance."

"Then will you let us help you make some?"

"I'm sure they'd be nice ones, if you should."

"But ours are only suggestions. We are moving at once to town. We'd like to take you with us."

"We shall insist on that," added Harry.

"You mean—for keeps? To live with you?" Cinderella in the Fifth Avenue mansion? The vision was dazzled the bandaged eye.

"Of course; why not?" said Harry.

too glittering to contemplate. It

"Careful, son; Anna may have ideas of her own. Where would you like to live, dear child?"

"Really — I'm not quite sure. Since I came to America I've not lived any place. I've just perched here and there."

"Why not call our home yours and then go to schol, with American girls your own age?"

"One of those schools where they finish you off, interrupted Harry.

"And not go back to jobs in stores or factories or the like?"

"We're going to adopt you!" cried Harry. His mother laughed in spite of herself. "Don't listen to him, Anna."

But she didn't realize that Anna would rather listen to him than to the music of the spheres.

"We'd like to take you back to town as soon as you can be moved and then you can think over your plans for fall. All of us owe you so much—"

Again that painful gratitude stuff! Anna struggled to wave it aside. Again Harry saved the day.

"What I want to know, young lady, is that party you went on with Jim. He's boasting about the good time you both had, and I'm jealous. You have to explain!"

But Anna only laughed happily. Things were getting along very well.

"We mustn't stay longer," said Mrs. Baldwin; "we'll tire her. Come along Harry."

Mrs. Baldwin pulled her reluctant son by the arm and led him out of the room. The door had closed safely behind them when it was opened again. Harry's head appeared in the opening. He grinned at Anna and blew her a kiss.

Anna caught it full on the mouth. What was a fire and what was a few bad burns but a blessing in disguise? Still smiling she dropped to sleep again. After all, Fate was kind.

The situation was a difficult one to explain to her mother and father. Realising this, Anna had postponed the meeting until it could not be postponed any longer.

"So," said her mother, "you are an American girl now and too grand to live with us."

"It's scarcely fair to put it that way, mother."

"Yes, she is an American girl," added the father, "while we are only poor immigrants. She is what over here they call 'high hat.'"

"Oh, please!" Anna begged; "you don't understand. I have changed, perhaps, but I am not high hat; I have just grown up. It's much better if I do not live with you."

"You are 17 and not married. You should work and live with your parents."

"She is disobedient as she has always been—a disobedient and ungrateful daughter. I tell her she can sleep in the parlor and still she is not satisfied."

Where Hitler Hides With His Big Shots

(From an article by Harry Vosser, writing from London, in the New York Times Magazine.)

* * *

Tucked away down in one of the most picturesque and beautiful parts of Southern Bavaria is a six-mile stretch of countryside which, according to recent reports, has now become the Reich's most heavily fortified and closely guarded area. It is the area surrounding Adolf Hitler's country house, the Berghof in Berchtesgaden, to which he has been wont to refer bashfully as his little mountain bungalow.

In reality it is less a bungalow than a large and wealthy modernized country mansion, and in this same area is Hitler's fantastic "Eagle's Nest"—a pavilion perched high on a sheer rock which rises abruptly out of a hillside. The "nest" contains a reception room, a kitchen and a glassed-in balcony from which Hitler may look out over the mountains into his native Austria.

The entire area between Berchtesgaden and the hamlets of Hallturm and Gmain has been cleared of its civil population, mainly farmers and peasants, and the personal bodyguards of the Fuehrer have been billeted in their cottages and bungalows. Their officers live in the hotels of this famous corner of Germany.

Nothing has been spared in an effort to make the area impregnable. Russian and Polish prisoners of war, under the supervision of one of the leaders of the famous Todt organization, have blasted the natural caves of the Untersberg, a mile away from the Berghof, converting them into a fortress.

* * *

These caves are accessible in only two ways. You enter either from the flat top of the mountain—and to reach that a helicopter would have to be used—or from an entrance blasted half way up a sheer drop of rock 3,000 feet in height and leading to a small rock platform.

The "Eagle's Nest" itself is reached by a road with innumerable hairpin bends, about nine miles long, hewn out of the mountain rock. The road ends at the entrance to a tunnel which is closed by heavy double bronze doors. At the end of the tunnel is a spacious lift, the walls of which are covered with sheets of copper. It ascends some 350 feet to the Fuehrer's eyrie.

In the Untersberg caves huge stores of food, water, tools, arms and ammunition have been accumulated. The caves have also been fitted with air-conditioned living quarters for about sixty people. Under the Berghof itself a bomb and gas proof air raid shelter has been constructed, connecting with all the surrounding office buildings of administration by underground corridors. The leaders of Germans have left nothing to chance.

On another mountain chain opposite the Untersberg, called the Lattengebirge, anti-aircraft guns have been mounted, and the small secondary railway which connected Bad Reichenhall with Berchtesgaden and Lake Koenigsee is now closed to all civilians. The trains that run are manned by SS guards chosen among the Fuehrer's most trusted men, and the only passengers carried by the railway are officials on duty at the Berghof.

* * *

In Salzburg, on the eastern side of the forbidden area, and in Reichenhall, on the western side, the Gestapo have taken further precautions. Specially picked men watch these approaches to the Fuehrer's place of retirement.

Every traveller arriving at either of the stations is thoroughly questioned as to the purpose of the visit, and ordered back by the next train if the visit appears not to be essential.

As a further precautionary measure the entire district, to a depth of 15 miles and 21 miles in length, is mined, and can be blown up by the pressure of a finger on a button. It is said that this fate-button is on the desk of Himmler's underground office, just under the rocky ground of the Fuehrer's bungalow.

Allied Wounded in Scotland

By GEORGE BLAKE

London by Mail: Blake
(BBC Press Service)

Four wounded soldiers came to tea in my house the other day. They had all got their packets in Normandy, and all in that bitter fight for the Falaise Gap which led to the thundering advance across France to the Low Countries. All but one had landed in France on D-day. Three of them had been wounded by German mortar-fire; one had been in a tank which was scuppered by an 88-millimetre gun; and for both of these German weapons all parties concerned had developed a healthy respect. These were men who had fought in battle, real battle, and they didn't think that war is any sort of glorious or sentimental fun at all.

These four visitors of ours formed an interesting group; they were a real cross-section of two Allied Armies in France. I never got round to catching their surnames, but the oldest of the lot was a lad called Cecil — an intelligent and darkly handsome young man from th Yorkshire city of Bradford, but a private in the Black Watch all the same and (for that matter) one of the Black Watch battalions attached to the famous 51st (Highland) Division. So I had the pleasure of hearing an Englishman declare that there was never a division like the 51st. Then there was a big fair lad called Harry. He came from Solihull near Birmingham. He had been a skilled worker in structural engineering before the war, but now he isn't ashamed to be a private in that fine old English regiment, the Royal Warwicks. Then three was another Harry, a tiny little Scots chap from Dundee, now serving in the Royal Signals; and I imagine he was just a schoolboy when war broke out. Finally, there was a big, heavy lad with the broad brow and the high cheekbones of the Slav. He was, in fact, a Pole of the dashing Armoured Division which is working with the Canadians up to Channel Coast into Belgium and Holland. He couldn't speak English very well, but he said that he could understand what the rest of us were saying; and since we couldn't make head-or-tail of his name, we just called him Bob.

* * *

I hope you can see the rather comic little picture we made in the sitting room of my house — these four lads in the bright blue suits, white shirts and red ties of the British wounded, sitting at the tea table with my wife and me, while our little daughter and our two small evacuees from London peered round the edge of the door at those mysterious but alluring strangers. I think you may be able to imagine the natural, charming awkwardness of these four soldier lads facing a polite middle-class tea, with meat sandwiches and tatty doylies and all the doings, after pigging it in the battlefield with biscuits and bully beef. I trust you appreciate the concern with which my wife and myself sought to put the boys at their ease and keep the conversation going. Above all, I should wish you to realise the sheer drama of this odd little meeting of two Englishmen, one Pole and one wee Jock in a quiet drawing room in a village in the very heart of Scotland. I could almost write a play about it.

But it's really more to the point to explain how those lads came to us. They are, in fact, patients in an auxiliary hospital in our near neighborhood. The hospital is actually the home of probably a world-famous breeder of Aberdeen-Angus cattle, but he has given up most of the castle to the wounded. When all this was being arranged in anticipation of D-day, somebody had the idea that people in the district might be willing to entertain the convalescents now and again. So they made up a list; and when the matron of the hospital sees that some of her patients are getting a bit bored, she rings up a house like ours and, everything being convenient, brings a bunch of the boys along to us. If they can walk, they come by bus and footslog the rest of the journey. If they can't, some private car-owner will be given enough petrol to bring them to us.

* * *

Now, I'm not going to assert that this is the complete solution of the problem presented by the wounded soldier; and don't forget that every wounded soldier is a problem. I'm myself much too old a soldier to imagine that a cup of tea, a sandwich you could put in your eye and a cork-tipped cigarette make the perfect answer to the British Tommy's prayer. For most of the boys who make an Army it's probably only one way of passing the time, slightly less boring than lying in the old bed or reading a book on a hard bench in the hospital grounds. It's at least an outing. All the same, I am inclined to think and believe that this system of visiting or entertaining (whichever way you look at it) has one special virtue.

This can be described quite simply. It's just that the lads have the chance of getting into a Home, as distinct from the inevitably bleak and overcrowded institutions of the Services. For people like my wife and myself, it's the opportunity of trying—no more than trying—to be fairly decent to the lads who are defending our Home; just as we piously hope that other people are being tolerably decent to our own boys in the Navy. At the lowest, it's a fair bargain.

Oddly enough, when I was talking to those four guests of ours—telling them, with all the envious and inverted pride of the soldier of the last war, how we managed things in 1916 or thereabouts — I made the point that, in those dim and distant days, the medical services of the Army weren't anything like what they are now. I took the middle-aged liberty of reminiscing telling these lads that, when I got a crack on the knee and a blowing up by shellfire in Gallipoli, it was a fortnight before they got me to Egypt by stretcher, mule ambulance drifter and hospital ship, with three shell-bursts on the tented hospital on W-beach thrown in; and that when I was in Alexandria at last I was still about two thousand miles from home — and feeling every inch of it.

* * *

I do hope I wasn't the jolly old middle-aged bore to our guests, wounded in the latest and fastest war of all, but one of the words I kept using is really the key to the whole problem of the sick or wounded man — the word Home. When you're lying useless and perhaps in pain, that's where the mind keeps turning — back to your own people, back to the familiar scenes and the simplicities of the family circle. I told our guests the other day that, when I was lying in the Deaconesses' Hospital in Alexandria in 1915, waiting my turn on a hospital ship, I used to drive myself nearly dotty with sheer hunger to get back, not to the actual home of my parents, but to a certain small farmhouse in the West Highlands where we used to spend our family holidays. That is: I was subconsciously yearning for the peace and simplicity of a place where I had spent the happiest days of my life. And Cecil, the Yorkshire lad in the Black Watch, supported me: telling us that when he lay for a day or two in hospital in Bayeux, with the English coast just across the way, so to speak, he deliberately kept himself in the mod of a man who is going on a holiday; and he said that he went through in his mind all the motions of packing, and catching the train, and arriving in Scarborough, and taking his first walk along the front.

As it happened, all these four boys wounded in Normandy had the same experience of being passed from the front to hospital in Scotland in exactly four days; through the dressing and the clearing stations and the base hospital; then across the Channel, and then up the length of Britain in a train. Not bad going, and these lads heartily agreed that the Army medical people were doing their stuff in first-class style.

So the British soldier in France and the Low Countries is pretty lucky in that one respect; and we ought in decency to remember that the Pole or the Norwegian or the Dutchman hasn't yet got that certainty of a return to a safe place among his own people. Then think of an American lad from the Middle-West or even California, wounded on the Siegfried Line and something like 6,000 miles from his home!

* * *

The American authorities, as it happens, have worked out ways and means of getting at least a proportion of their more seriously wounded men back to the States in pretty quick time, back among their own people. I myself have seen this system working at close quarters but couldn't talk about it until now, for the story has only been released for general consumption. I know quite a lot about this traffic since the United States Army is using an airport in my own part of Scotland—in fact, the big transatlantic airport at Prestwick on the flat, sandy, fog-free coast of Ayrshire.

This is an air ambulance service on the grand scale. Huge big carrier planes fly the wounded from bases in France direct to Scotland. When they come in, the boys are taken in the Red Cross ambulances to a group of hospitals in the district, and there they are vetted by their own medical officers. If the wounds are light, and the man is likely to be able to fight again, well he's go to stay in a British hospital — or in an American hospital in Britain — until he is well again. If his case is serious, and especially if he is likely to be discharged from the service in due course, they fly him across the Atlantic.

If there were time, I'd like to give you a description of these great ambulance planes and their perfectly marvellous equipment. If there weren't the need to keep old Jerry guessing, I could give you a stunning story of the way in which those planes cross the Atlantic. I was standing outside the Flying Control on that airport one morning, when a grizzled pilot of the transatlantic service turned on me and said: "It's queer to think that almost all our passengers may be seeing their own mothers tomorrow night." That was a Saturday morning in Scotland — and the American lads would be home on Sunday night!

There's a perfectly grand story in the girls who go with these big planes as nurses. Quite often they are in full medical charge of a plane-load of wounded: responsible for their dressings, their food, their oxygen masks, the security of the high-pressure cabins, and all the rest of it. The men doctors travel with the more serious cases. It's an extraordinary thought, surely, that quite young women can cheerfully accept those responsibilities; and the U. S. Government must have gone to a lot of trouble to hand-pick and train their nursing officers. If a middle-aged cove may be allowed the observation, those fine girls looked to me to have been hand-picked with a mighty shrewd eye to looks and vivacity as well.

And that, after all, is just how it should be. The boys are going home. An efficient, reasonably pretty girl with plenty of guts is the most heartening symbol of Home that a wounded man could possibly have.

So— If I have made myself clear — we are at least getting round to an appreciation of what war and its consequences are all about. It is not always possible to manage but the principle is now firmly established that the soldier is not just some vagrant bloke you pay to fight your battles for you; that the soldier is the citizen in arms in defence of certain decencies; that he is a fellow who wants to get back home just as soon as may be; and that it's up to the rest of us to make him feel at home as best and as quickly as we can. That's the whole ideal of democracy. The machine may creak now and again, but it's getting there just the same. And then the boys will all be coming Home.

WHERE?
WHY...?
FIND OUT THE ANSWER IN OUR DAILY DISCUSSION GROUPS.

Army and other service counsellors discuss future with returned men, advising them as to career; government-subsidized trade, professional courses and job finding facilities. Outside door other discharged servicemen await interview.

First concern of rehabilitation is helping returned men regain health. Man (left) with neck injury does exercises calculated to speed convalescence period. In centre picture Norman Bowles (left) and Bruce Gould learn to service business machines, get paid while training. Photo (right) shows method used to teach Pte. Ed Gerris to write with artificial hand. He also lost an eye.

Jobs for Returned Men is Primary Concern After Gratuities, Allowances, and Hospitalization

When Sailor Jones comes back from the sea or Airman Smith comes out of the sky and Soldier or CWAC Brown return to civil life, a large number of courses are open to them. They may return to their old jobs or learn a new trade; they may complete their education or get assistance in starting their own business; they may want to own a farm or their own home. Whatever method they choose for integrating themselves in civilian life again, the means of doing so are at their disposal.

In caring for her returning veterans Canada understands that clothing allowances, gratuities, hospitalization, plastic surgery and pensions are not enough, although the Dominion has one of the most advanced schemes in the world for such aid to the veteran.

Most important of all is the problem of finding jobs for the men who are stepping out of uniform every day, skilled and unskilled, but all entitled to work at living wages. Immediate assistance is given by the Veterans' Settlement Bureaus across Canada, placing discharged veterans in positions for which they have been trained or in industry which will train these discharged men in a trade which will guarantee a decent wage.

A number of acts — Post Discharge Re-Establishment Order, Vocational Training Co-Ordination Act, Reinstatement in Civil Employment Act, Veterans' Land Act—comprise the effort. Additional helping legislation may be enacted as general demobilization gets under way.

On discharge, a soldier or sailor or airman will be permitted to keep his uniforms and personal necessities. Clothing grants will be paid the discharged man as well as a rehabilitation grant and a war service gratuity. Transportation home is another service the Department of Pensions and National Health extends to the discharged man or woman.

Bring Home Wives.

Wives or children of the Canadian Forces overseas will be brought to Canada where such servicemen have been returned to Canada for discharge. The same service is available to widows and children of Canadians who have died overseas.

District Rehabilitation Boards, Veterans' Welfare Officers and Citizens' Volunteer Committees have been set up for vocational guidance and job-finding, and a specialized service is provided by the Personal Services Welfare Officers who work in the hospitals of the Department of Pensions and National Health.

Private industry is co-operating, as in the case of Norman Bowles and Bruce Gould, who were given jobs with Marchand Calculators, learning to service business machines. Bowles was overseas with the Third Division, serving in Britain with the Queen's Own Rifles for two years. In civil life Bowles had been a clerk in a delicatessen store and had no desire to return to it. As a married man he wanted some assurance of a better income With Bruce Gould, who left school to join the RCAF and was discharged within a year. Bowles accepted the training job in the service department of Marchand Calculators. The men start at $15 a week, apprenticeship pay, and after their four-year course are earning $40 a week, their wages rising to this figure over the four years.

"I love the work", Gould says, "and it'll be steady. Bad times or good, business machines need servicing. But let's hope there will be no bad times".

An unusual case of vocational training is Gunner F. S. Burd, who did theatrical advertising before he joined up. He was a veteran of the last war, joining the artillery at 14 and being invalided home before he was 16. Now out of uniform again, his ambition was to become a chef, to open his own restaurant. At the Toronto Central Technical School, which trains navy chefs, Burd was enrolled for a few weeks' course. When the course is completed he will get government help in opening his restaurant to the extent of $2,000.

Private Ed Gerris, 10th Infantry Brigade, RCASC, went through the blitz in Britain and was injured when a bomb burst on the other side of a tank on which he was doing some welding. He lost his right arm from the elbow and his right eye. Five other men working with him were killed. Gerris' life hung in the balance, but tiptop hospital care saved his life and he was shipped to Canada.

Shows Soldier's Grit.

Today he is a student at the central college of Shaw's Business Schools, Toronto, learning penmanship and taking a course in primary accounting. Using a glove-covered wooden hand, this gallant amputation case is studying writing with all the grit that made him a good soldier. Principal Eccles has taken a special interest in Gerris and has helped him make progress. Together they designed a rubber-pad "muscle" to take the place of forearm mobility. Together they worked out a metal feeler to fit between the fourth and third fingers of Ed's wooden right hand. A spring in the tube gives Ed a sense of feel when his hand touches the paper on blackboard, so that he can control the pen pressure. Right now, his penmanship is better than most people's handwriting.

Gratuities in addition to the $100 clothing allowance discharged men receive include $7.50 for each 30 days of service in the western hemisphere (except Greenland, Iceland and the Aleutians), and $15 for each $30 days of service overseas, including Greenland, Iceland and the Aleutian Islands. Supplementary gratuities consist of 7 days' pay and allowances for every six months spent overseas, plus a rehabilitation grant of 30 days' pay and allowance immediately on discharge.

A Canadian private, married, with two children, who spends one year as a volunteer in Canada and two years overseas, will be entitled to a rehabilitation grant of $108.12, clothing allowance of $100, basic gratuity of $450 (payable in monthly installments), supplementary gratuity of $135.90 and re-establishment credit of $450; a total of $1,244.02.

In cases of out-of-work and temporary incapacitation allowances the grants expire after 18 months following discharge. Grants provide for the payment of $60 a month to single men or women, $80 a month to a man and his wife when the ex-service man or woman is taking training or completing education. When out of work, temporarily incapacitated, or awaiting financial returns from a financial endeavor the grant is $50 a month to single persons and $70 a month to a man and his wife.

Additional monthly allowances are made for dependents; for one child, $12; second child, $12; third child, $10; for each additional child, $8. An additional monthly allowance of $15 is made for dependent parents.

Where a married person or an ex-serviceman with dependents has to leave his community for a training course an additional living allowance of $5 a week is paid. Where the cost for commuting exceeds regular carfare an additional allowance not exceeding $5 may be arranged.

Fully 47 per cent of service personnel in this war have high school or technical school training as compared with 13 per cent who had such training in World War I. All who qualified for university training when they enlisted or any other serviceman who can qualify within 15 months after discharge, may receive maintenance grants and free university education. No one may repeat a year's work for which benefits have been paid.

After 15 weeks of insured employment following discharge service personnel are then entitled to the same unemployment insurance benefits as though they had spent the whole period of their service in insured employment.

Shows Preference.

Preference in employing civil servants will be given ex-servicemen and provision has been made that in all cases of government war contracts preference shall be given ex-service personnel.

Hospitalization and pension benefits for those disabled were in effect before the war broke out and have been extended.

Truly, Canada's provisions for her discharged soldiers show the nation's desire to see them well established. It is the same spirit in civil life which has made the Canadian forces overseas such an admirable force.

He postponed his marriage because camp ration board rules he could not have gas for a borrowed automobile to drive his bride-to-be to church. "My fiancee won't ride a bus in her wedding dress," the soldier lamented.

British 2nd Army Probes German Defence of Venlo

Americans Enter Hurtgen And Also Capture Frenz

By WILLIAM FRYE
(AP Staff Writer)

London, Nov. 27 —(AP)— Allied armies surged forward along the entire west front today, smashing into enemy lines raked and battered by hundreds of fighters and bombers from southeastern Holland to the Swiss frontier.

Slowly pushing back the bitterly resisting Germans in the Aachen front, the British 2nd Army crowded forward for a 500-yard gain to high ground overlooking Wurm north of Geilenkirchen while the U. S. 9th Army fought toward Julich and troops of the U. S. 1st Army extended their gains beyond captured Weisweiler and in the Hurtgen forest.

A late front dispatch said the 1st Army had entered the town of Hurtgen and captured Frenz, just northeast of Weisweiler, and Frenzerberg in the same area.

Farther north, 2nd Army Tommies probed into the defences of the enemy bastion of Venlo after cutting the once-dangerous Meuse river bulge to three or four isolated pockets of Germans around Venlo itself.

In Alsace, American troops spread out on the Rhine plain through the Saales Pass, cleared yesterday in a swift advance between the Vosges mountains, while in Strasbourg the French captured two enemy generals and held all the city except a pocket of resistance at the end of the bridge across the Rhine.

Despite enemy counter-attacks, units of the U. S. 3rd Army cut through the Maginot Line defences northeast of Metz, extended their lines inside Germany southwest of Merzig, and scored gains up to three miles on their right flank north of Saarebourg.

The 1st. Army's gains east of Aachen, where the Americans were almost clear of the Hurtgen Forest and had cut the Weisweiler-Duren Highway six miles west of Duren, were crowding the enemy back on the Roer River in a slow but steady advance.

Weisweiler fell to the Americans yesterday after days of savage street-fighting.

On the 1st. Army's left, troops of the 9th. Army crowded into Koslar in a house-to-house battle. The Germans fired delayed-action artillery shells into the American lines, and made a feeble, four-plane strafing and bombing attack, but their major counter-effort, a tank-supported thrust, was smashed yesterday with the aid of fighter-bombers.

Except for the 500 yard advance toward Wurm, there was little change in the 2nd. Army's position north of Geilenkirchen. In southeastern Holland, however, the Tommies had cut the enemy remnants on the west bank of the Meuse north of Venlo to isolated pockets with two drives to the river south of Grubbenvorts and north of Broekhuizen. The town of Blitterswijk was captured.

The defences of Venlo lie behind a huge anti-tank ditch in an arc 1½ miles west of the city, and British units have not yet launched a major attack on the fortifications.

As the 6th. Army group's multiple attacks in Alsace spread through the mountains and over the Rhine plain, French armor and American infantry captured 12 forts near Strasbourg and made prisoners of Gen. Maj. Franz Vaterot, military commander of the city, and Gen. Maj. Wilhelm Uttersperen, engineer commander.

16 JAP SHIPS AND 72 PLANES ARE WIPED OUT

American Carrier Aircraft Force Hits Manila Area on Luzon Island

Pearl Harbor, Nov. 27 — (AP) —A Japanese heavy cruiser, a destroyer, 14 other ships and 72 planes were wiped out as American carrier aircraft hit the Manila area and its vicinity Friday.

Admiral Nimitz yesterday announced the results of this fifth raid of the month on Luzon Island.

Nimitz said that in addition to the ships and planes destroyed around Manila, two luggers were sunk and four cargo ships and one oiler damaged.

The attack increased to more than 250 the number of enemy ships immobilized around Luzon island alone in the 11 raids since Sept. 20 carried out by carrier planes of the U. S. 3rd Fleet. This does not include the 58 warships sunk or damaged in the recent Philippines sea battle.

Twenty-nine enemy aircraft were shot down by the attacking force, eight were knocked out of the sky by anti-aircraft guns of the surface ships and 35 were destroyed on the ground.

Ships sunk included a heavy cruiser of the Kumano class which previously had been reported damaged, one destroyer, nine cargo ships, 4 transports and a small oiler.

German Soldiers Fighting on Own Soil Told To Watch Their Behavior

By MARGARET ECKER
(CP War Correspondent)

Somewhere in Holland, Nov. 27—(CP Cable) — Germany's soldiers have to learn a new act now they are fighting on German soil with the eyes of their own people watching them.

The Wehrmacht, particularly its officers, who bullied and pillaged their conquering way across Europe, has been told to be less arrogant on the road back.

In a message from a General Brandenberger, officers of the 7th Army were told plainly that life is tough in their own land and their days of strutting and blustering are gone. The message, marked: "this document must not fall into enemy hands," found its way behind the Allied lines in Holland.

It is the General's own estimate of conditions back home and at the same time an admission that the conduct of German officers wasn't as "correct" as it has been claimed to be.

The preamble reminds the officers that the battle for Germany—"this struggle determining our existence or annihilation" — is the most bitter pill of the war Germany launched. It continues:

"We are fighting directly under the eyes of a people who are fulfilling their duties in lawless manner. They expect and have a right to expect the same from us."

The document urges "exemplary behavior towards the civilian population, especially towards women . . . All habits which may have been understandable in enemy territory must now disappear. The population at home cannot have any understanding for club parties, for intoxicated or flirting officers, or for food 'obtained' over and above regular rations. Food of that kind is simply stolen from women and children.

"Consequently no special privileges granted elsewhere can be tolerated here . . . I forbid all social gatherings and social parties.

"Now is the time for the fulfillment of duty. It is impossible for any officer to have more spare time than is required to write a letter to relatives. Who devotes even one hour to other things than his duty violates his honor."

BRITISH TROOPS PUSH BRIDGEHEAD ACROSS MARZENA

Also Reach Lamone River Three Miles Southwest of Faenza

By LYNN HEINZERLING
Associated Press War Correspondent

Rome, Nov. 27 —(AP)— British troops of the 8th Army, pushing out their bridgehead over the Marzena River with infantry and tanks, have reached the Lamone River about three miles southwest of Faenza, and with other 8th Army forces now are pressing against the new main German delaying position on this front.

British forces captured the village of Belvedere in this push, and farther southwest Polish troops gained a foothold on a ridge between the Marzena and Lamone rivers.

At Faenza there was little change in the situation, with British troops still holding their positions on the eastern outskirts of the town, and the Germans preparing to fight another of their house-to-house battles.

In Close Contact.

Northeast of Faenza other British troops, moving northwester from Eda, occupied Scaldino, and between the Montone and Lamone rivers reached Albereto, where they were in close contact with German infantry.

A bridgehead over Montone was established southeast of Albereto despite many demolitions.

On the Allied 5th Army front it was again a story of patrol clashes, with the Germans probing constantly at the line with forces of varying size throwing in few counter-attacks on a small scale.

British troops knocked back one large enemy patrol near Frassineto on the right, and in the centre a counter-attack northeast of Monterumici which was preceded by heavy artillery was broken up and prisoners taken.

BUNYAN'S HOUSE DAMAGED

Elstow, England (CP) — One of England's historic buildings — John Bunyan's cottage in this Bedfordshire town where the author of Pilgrim's Progress lived after his marriage in 1649—was partly demolished by a 10-ton truck.

NAZIS LOSE 129 CRAFT PROTECTING OIL REFINERIES

Munich Blasted in Before-Dawn Attack and Daylight Sweeps Follow

London, Nov. 27. (CP)—Almost 1,300 American heavy bombers and fighters got into the front line battle for Germany again today with raids on railway yards at Offenburg and Bingen and widespread strafing sweeps over the northwestern corner of the Reich.

Following a night R.A.F. smash at Munich, headquarters of U.S. strategic air forces in Europe said 500 heavy bombers bombed the rail yards at Offenburg, 10 miles southeast of Strasbourg, and at Bingen, 15 miles west of Mainz.

Both Rhine Valley rail centres are vital to German forces battling the Allied Armies on the southern sector of the western front.

More than 250 fighters escorted the bombers, and 500 other fighters ranged over the Ruhr with machine-guns blazing.

The American attacks followed a pre-dawn assault by R.A.F. Lancasters on Munich, and a big air battle yesterday in which approximately 450 German fighters rose to fight off 1,800 American bombers and fighters assaulting the Nazi natural oil refinery at Misburg in a campaign which has showered nearly 7,000 tons of bombs on German oil facilities in 48 hours.

Latest reports today said 132 of the enemy planes were shot down including 16 by bomber gunners. Thirty-six bombers and six American fighters were lost in the Sunday fight. First reports said 50 were lost, but one bomber and seven fighters later turned up safe at friendly bases.

The Air Ministry said the 15-minute attack on Munich this morning resulted in fires over a wide area. One of the British bombers was lost.

More than 6,000 Allied fighters and bombers roved Germany during the week-end, 2,000 fighters working exclusively on frontline targets yesterday.

Seven German planes were destroyed on the ground in strafing attacks and 122 enemy fighters were downed in air combat. The Germans sent up a force of approximately 200 planes to protect the refinery, while the American sky fleet consisted of 1,100 heavy bombers and

New V.C. Winner Says St. Lambert Battle 'Toughest and Best Action'

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army, Nov. 27. (CP Cable) —The Battle of St. Lambert Sur Dives was "the toughest and best action" of Maj. David V. Currie's military career.

"I'll never forget it", the 32-year-old soldier from Moose Jaw, Sask., and Owen Sound, Ont.—Canada's seventh Victoria Cross winner of the Second Great War—told correspondents Saturday. "The results gave everybody a good feeling".

Wearing a one-piece tank suit and a black beret, Currie stood up to a 40-minute questioning which brought forth poised, modest, straightforward answers about the three-day battle which virtually sealed the escape gap for the German 7th Army in the Falaise Pocket.

He did not minimise the importance of the August operation, which he said he realised at the time was the biggest job ever given his squadron of the South Alberta Armored Reconnaissance Regiment.

St. Lambert Key-Point.

St. Lambert was the key point of the Chambois-Trun escape route in Normandy.

The Germans, Currie said, felt that with superior numbers they had a better chance of breaking through than the Canadians had of holding them, but "our fire stopped them.

One shell from a Canadian tank pierced a house and blew up an ammunition truck on the other side.

"Fires started and when the shooting died down and it became fairly quiet, I could hear the shrieks and groans of the wounded Germans", Currie said. "I almost felt sorry for them".

All enemy attempts to smash through the Canadians with counter-attacks were foiled several times. It was touch and go. On one occasion German S.S. Troops clambered atop two Canadian tanks a few hundred yards away from Currie but tank-crews knocked them off by swinging the guns on their pivots.

Another time, at night, the Germans infiltrated to the tank positions, and were captured as they were preparing to set fire to the Shermans over which they had poured oil.

Close Call

"I was much too busy for personal feelings," Currie said; but he admitted he was frightened when a shell from a Canadian medium gun burst three feet from his tank. The Germans were so close that he had to call for artillery support almost on his own position.

The squadron commander, who wore a beret throughout most of the three-day action because he does not like a steel helmet, had no time for sleep and little time for food. He had only one hour's sleep on the 3rd day of the battle and one hot meal daily.

He spoke highly of the soldiers under his command, one of whom, Cpl. Mike Ottenbreit, a gunner from the Alberta outfit, won a Military Medal for his part in the St. Lambert action.

His squadron led the Canadians in Bergen Op Zoom, after the campaign along the Leopold Canal, which Currie said was "a little too tough for us because the country was too flooded."

Currie — whom Gen. Crerar congratulated personally at 1st Canadian Army headquarters Saturday—still is commanding his squadron. He doesn't know what's yet in store for him, but hopes his V. C. won't put him on the sidelines for the closing phases of the war.

At Least 20 Killed In Munition Dump Blast in England

Burton-on-Trent, England, Nov. 27. (CP)—An explosion at a munitions dump near this Staffordshire town killed at least 20 persons today.

Several were injured, and forty others were still unaccounted for several hours after the blast.

Buildings as far away as Coventry, 30 miles from the scene, were shaken by the explosion.

London (CP-Reuters)—Burton-on-Trent, Staffordshire town 12 miles southwest of Derby, was rocked this morning by a tremendous explosion reported to have taken place at an R.A.F. Maintenance depot several miles distant.

Ambulances and fire engines have hastened to the scene.

The steeple of Horninglow church, in a suburb on Burton-on-Trent, was made unsafe and people were warned to keep out of the church yard in case it fell.

All over the town chimney pots were dislodged and fell into the streets.

Burton-on-Trent, with a population of approximately 50,000, is a centre of the brewing industry.

Depot Battalions Of Volunteers to Reinforce 4 Units

Montreal, Nov. 27. CP) —Defence Minister McNaughton has authorized War Services Minister LaFleche to proceed with the formation of depot battalions of volunteers to reinforce four French-Canadian units from the Montreal district overseas, it was announced here today.

The reinforcements are for Les Fusiliers Mont Royal, le Regiment de Maisonneuve, le Regiment de Jeliette and le Regiment de Chateauguay.

"I hope that not a French-Canadian conscript is sent overseas", Gen. LaFleche told officers here. "Reinforcements are needed and should come as volunteers".

FALSE ALARM

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 27 (CP) —A woman rushed into city police headquarters one day last week and appealed to city police to "come quick; there is a man with a child in a bag and he is going down to lose it in the Niagara river" Four officers overtook a man carrying a bag, which they opened. Out stepped a big black cat the man was delivering to a friend. Police admitted the cat's cries sounded "childlike."

Captured Village With Small Force, Cut Off Hun Escape

Armored Unit OC. Battled Enemy for Three Days

Ottawa, Nov. 27 (CP)—A young Canadian army officer whose small mixed force of tanks, self-propelled anti-tank guns and infantry captured the Normandy village of St. Lambert Sur Dives, thus denying the Chambois-Trun escape route to the remnants of two German armies cut off in the Falaise pocket, has been awarded the Victoria Cross for gallantry.

He is Maj. David Vivian Currie, 32, of Moose Jaw, Sask., and Owen Sound, Ont., an officer of the South Alberta reconnaissance regiment. In three days and nights of fierce fighting his force destroyed seven enemy tanks, 12 88-millimetre guns and 40 vehicles, killed 300 Germans, wounded 500 and captured 2,100.

All officers under Currie's command were either killed or wounded during the action, and he had only one hour's sleep in the entire period, yet when his wife, learning from press accounts that he'd been in a "terrific action of some sort," wrote and asked him for more particulars, he replied:

"What is all this nonsense you were talking about the Falaise gap? I've been busy ever since coming to France trying hard to win a medal for keeping my head down! Somebody else, no doubt!"

Defied Enemy Fire to Enter Village Alone.

But the citation covering award of the Empire's highest decoration for gallantry to Currie told a different story. It said he defied heavy enemy fire to enter St. Lambert Sur Dives alone and afoot when his force was held up by a strong enemy resistance, reconnoitred the German defences and extricated the crews of two tanks which had been knocked out by 88-millimetre guns.

The action began Aug. 18 last. The next morning Currie, without any previous artillery bombardment, personally led an attack on the village despite fierce opposition from enemy guns and infantry, and by noon had succeeded in seizing and consolidating a position half-way inside the village.

"During the next 36 hours the Germans hurled one counter attack after another against the Canadian force, but so skilfully had Maj. Currie organized his defensive position that these attacks were repulsed with severe casualties to the enemy, after heavy fighting," his citation said.

Magnificent Example

"At dusk on Aug. 20 the Germans attempted to mount a final assault on the Canadian positions, but the attacking force was routed before it could even be deployed....Maj. Currie then promptly ordered an attack and completed the capture of the village....Throughout three days and nights of fierce fighting, Maj. Currie's gallant conduct and contempt for danger set a magnificent example to all ranks of the force under his command."

Maj. Currie's wife and nine-year-old son, David, live in Owen Sound, Ont.

Chinese Announce Fall of Hochih

Chungking, Nov. 27 —(AP)— The Chinese High Command tonight announced the fall of Hochih, 95 miles west of Liuchow in Kwangsi Province, Southern China, in the Japanese sweep toward Kweichow Province.

Hochih is but 20 miles from the Kweichow border and [illegible] southeast of Kweiyang, Burma Road town in Kweic[illegible] the invaders would be in position to strike at Chungking.

Loss of Hochih was announced shortly after it was disclosed that the last forward American air base in South China, a fighter field at Nanning, had been abandoned Nov. 19 and destroyed by the 14th U. S. Air Force.

There was general acceptance of the Japanese claim to the capture of Nanning, although the High Command still made no mention of the enemy drive southward toward Indo-China.

Cardinal Villeneuve Says Communism Threat to Christian Civilization

Quebec, Nov. 27—(CP)—Cardinal Villeneuve, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Quebec, will speak over a network of French-language stations again tonight, to deliver the second half of a pastoral letter following a two-month trip overseas.

The Cardinal delivered the first part of his letter last night, and also spoke in English over a national network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

In his French broadcast, he said that "on this trip, whatever anyone may say, I had no diplomatic, civil or military mission."

"I was under no obligation to serve either the voluntary system nor conscription," he added in his only reference to the conscription question, "nor to condemn the supporters of a war policy of those advocating a policy of abstention. That was not within my province.

"I went because of one fact; namely, that thousands of our faithful in Canada are on the battlefield."

In his English broadcast, the Cardinal said that the "insidious propaganda" of Communism "is penetrating all people and the highest circle, to the point that it looms as an irreducible threat to religion and to Christian civilization."

He mentioned Communism as one of the "new evils" threatening the world, listing as others "the war, which . . . will be followed by possibly an ephemeral peace; famine, which embraces liberated countries just as those under arms; internal division and revolutions, which replace or are added to the war; the fate of Poland, again tragically cut up, and which remains as the illusory emblem of what men can sometimes call victory and peace..."

Of the war itself, the Cardinal said that "whatever may have been, in its remote or immediate causes—and it must be frankly admitted that some of these causes could have been eradicated—the present conflict has long since developed into one of opposite ideologies; one which tends to dispossess man of his most precious liberties, of his very soul, to make him a blind tool of the state; and the other which fights to preserve, amid the vicissitudes inherent to man's fallen nature, the Christian concept of man's dignity."

Referring to the devastation of war as he had seen it, His Eminence said every Canadian "should thank God on bended knees for having protected our country from it."

He asked that Christians pray, every day, "that God may grant victory to our arms, with peace founded on charity and justice, because that sort of peace is the only one that will endure."

Cardinal Villeneuve declared his recent trip to the Vatican and fighting fronts had "no diplomatic, civil or military mission."

VEHICLE IS DAMAGED BUT HORSE UNINJURED

Hurled and rolled completely over the top of an automobile, after wandering out into the highway, where it was struck, a horse owned by Morley Davidson, R.R. No. 7, Belleville, escaped without serious injury although the animal was hit with considerable force Saturday night. Traffic Officer Chas. Siple investigated the matter and was informed by a Mr. Bowness, of Mountain View, that he was proceeding south on Highway No. 14 immediately south of Rossmore when out of the darkness a horse suddenly appeared directly in front of the speeding motor car. After being struck the animal rolled up the hood, kicked through the windshield and subsequently bounced over the top to crash to the pavement behind. The horse arose and galloped off without signs of serious injury. The front of the car, windshield and top were damaged to an estimated cost of $250.00, the officer stated.

NO SPECIAL PERMITS FOR TRUCK OPERATORS

With highway transportation restrictions still remaining tight no special permits will be granted this season to motor truck operators for the moving of Christmas trees and commercial trucks will not be issued permits permitting them to move trees for a greater distance than 35 miles from their registered address, it has been indicated by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board. Farm trucks, however, are exempted from this regulation, provided the Christmas trees in question are cut on the farmer's own property. Farmers are reminded that the onus to prove the trees are cut on their own farm rests with them.

CHURCH LAYMEN VOLUNTEER TO CLEAN UP PARISH HOUSE

Laymen of St. Thomas' Church will take off their coats, roll up their sleeves and go to work tonight at the Parish House in an effort to rehabilitate the interior and lay the groundwork for decoration.

The building was taken over a few years ago by the Department of Public Works and used in connection with the Ontario School for the Deaf. It housed the superintendent's office and other administrative phases of the school.

Inability of the Department, to secure the services of workmen to do the interior decorating has delayed this work, so St. Thomas' Church officials have been told.

In order to facilitate the taking over of the Parish House and ready it for the work of the church for the coming winter, an appeal has been issued by the Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, to laymen to assist in the cleaning of the building. It is expected a large number will turn out tonight to "lend a hand".

LIGHTED CIGARET BUTT CAUSES $200 DAMAGE TO MOTOR VEHICLE

Damage of approximately $200 was caused to a Renfrew motorist's parked automobile on Sunday when a lighted cigar or cigarette ignited the cushions in the owner's absence. The car was on Front Street near the Belle Theatre when a passer-by noticed the smoke inside the locked auto. Firemen had to force the door of the car to get at the flames, which caused considerable damage to the interior of the car.

In a second car blaze extinguished by firemen over the weekend, the reverse of the usual procedure was seen in that the fire was brought to the firehall. A lighted cigarette or cigar ignited cushions of one of Dafoe's taxis, the car being brought to the firehall to have the blaze extinguished.

129th Anniversary Of Bridge Street Church Observed

Speaking at Bridge Street United Church on Sunday evening, on the occasion of the 129th anniversary of the congregation, Rev. A. Murray Stuart, B.A., of London, referred to the heritage of the church and congregation. "Anniversaries are mile posts," he said. With thoughts of the past the congregation can press on to its reward in blessings upon the church in continuance of its great ministry.

Preaching from Obadiah 1, 17, "the House of Jacob shall possess their possessions," Rev. Mr. Stuart said:

"We all have an acquisitive nature," the minister said, "the desire to possess. We like to say, this is mine. The text reminds us that we may have some things but have not entered into full possession of them. We may have the priceless Christ and yet never possess Him."

Of the gift of the Christian Sabbath Mr. Stuart remarked: "we have it but do we really possess it?" The Sabbath like the high dikes of Holland prevents the wave of secularism sweeping over mankind. Man has sometimes let this barrier down. The Sabbath is linked with the open Book, the open church, and the worship of the Living God. If the sanctions are broken down of this holy day holy things would be trampled under by selfishness.

The church itself is the Body of Christ yet many never think of the church unless they are thinking of a marriage, of baptism or burial. To thousands the church means little. Yet the church is the guardian of the Scriptures. It is the builder and defender of Christian civilization and when the people possess this possession they shall become part of the Body of Christ.

"Do we really possess Christ?" Mr. Stuart asked. To many people Christ is expressed in history, in creed and dogma but they have never felt the clasp of His hand, the breadth of His friendship."

When Wesley came to possess Christ he changed the course of history.

"You can never possess Christ until you kneel at His feet. This glorious heritage is to be had if we accept these blessings from His hand," the preacher said.

Worshipping with the Bridge Street congregation were the congregations of the Tabernacle and Holloway Street churches at the evening service. During the day special music was rendered by the large choir of Bridge Street Church.

R. J. Whitley to Oppose Mayor Cory In Mayoralty Election at Trenton

Trenton, (Special)—December 4th is to see an anticipated colorful election in Trenton when His Worship Mayor H. R. Cory is to be opposed for the first time in several years, having held the office of Chief Magistrate for eleven years. R. J. Whitley who for several years has been a member of the town council has decided this year to seek the Mayor's chair. Three others were nominated but neither of the three qualified.

A large crowd was in attendance at the Town Hall on Friday evening following the nominations when many matters of importance pertaining to the town's financing, etc. were discussed. A financial statement was given which gave a concrete picture of how the taxpayers' money was spent and how the town stands financially as a municipality.

A straight two-way fight for the Mayor's chair was assured late Saturday evening when with the time set for qualification passed only Alderman Frank S. Follwell and ex-Mayor George O. Tice had signified their intention of running for the office.

The one seat in the public utilities commission will also be contested by only two men with the present commissioner Morley P. Duff and ex-Mayor George Reid qualifying to run. For the first time in several years there will be no election for school trustee with only five aspirants qualifying, while the 14 aldermanic seats will be contested by 25 public-spirited citizens.

Publishers Accept Song Composed By Mrs. J. Deacon

The lilting melody and smart lyric of "Whistle While You Whittle" a new composition from the musical pen of Mrs. John Deacon of this city has been accepted for publication by the G. Schirmer Co., Inc. of New York City, one of the United States foremost music publishers.

The new song is known among music circles as an "Encore Song" and its lively rhythms are bound to please those who like their music in a snappy, lively fashion.

The lyric was written by Alice Coutts.

The song is attractively published with a border resembling wood, and will be on sale at the Sills shop in the near future. Mrs. Deacon, who is the organist at St. Andrew's Presbyterian church has written several sacred and other compositions, and her entry into the charmed circle of "Tin Pan Alley" of New York is a definite sign of her ability as a composer.

Anniversary Services Held At St. Andrew's

Large congregations attended the anniversary services of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church on Sunday to hear Rev. J. B. M. Armour, M.A., D.D., deliver two splendid spiritual addresses and listen to an excellent program of sacred music arranged by Mr. and Mrs. John Deacon, organist and choir director. Mr. John Deacon delighted with the solo "How Long Wilt Thou Forget Me," by Carl Pflueger at the morning service. Dr. Armour, preaching in Belleville for the first time in his lengthy career in the ministry spoke on the "Universal Vision" at the morning service and on "Courage" in the evening.

For the morning prelude Mrs. Deacon played Liebestraum by Litz and for the postlude the "Festival Toccata" by Percy Fletcher. The choir rendered the anthem "Glorious Excelsis," by Mozart under the direction of Mr. Deacon and in the evening sang "Love Divine". The prelude at the evening service was "Fountain Reverie" and the postlude "Festival March."

"An anniversary is a great opportunity to look forward and backward," said Dr. Armour in thanking the congregation for the invitation extended to him to be present on the occasion of this anniversary of a church steeped in the tradition of Christian service to a community for a great number of years. "From the founders of this congregation down to the present time," said the speaker "there has always been the living presence of the Church of Christ. Today the Church of Christ is known with more reverence in more lands than ever in the history of the world, because for the church the world is one. It is always an organism, that was and is spreading into the farthest reaches of the world." He stated that the challenge to make the Church of Christ real comes to each one.

800,000 Members.

The speaker showed there were 800,000 known members of the Presbyterian Church in Canada but it is rare to have one-half of the membership out to services of the Church and he made a plea for more regular attendance. "You must know that the world is now divided into two camps, those who believe in Christ and those who do not and the strength of the Church must be shown so that Christianity will prevail" said Dr. Armour. He stated that the church must expand its activities when the veterans return from overseas so that the boys will be able to continue their Christian teaching and become active in the work of the Lord.

This evening the anniversary services will be concluded with a congregational dinner after which Dr. Armour will give a lecture on "Irish Wit and Humor." Miss Margaret Houston and Mr. John Deacon will give the musical program between the dinner and lecture hours.

IN MEMORIAM

FLEMING — In fond and loving memory of Alice Mae Fleming, who passed away November 27, 1942.

We little thought when you left us,
you would no more return.
That you in death so soon would sleep and leave us here to mourn.
We do not know the pain you bore,
We did not see you die.
We only know you passed away
And never said goodbye.

We little knew the end was near.
It is only those who have lost can tell
The sorrow of parting without saying farewell.

ASSEMBLY NOV. 22

Practissime Fortissme:

With a rolling "boogie-woogie" piano instruction, a harmonious three-part chorus, a sprinkling of Russian dancing, a piano duet, some elementary gymnastics, and a mellow clarinet solo by the versatile Sylvester Cavanagh, the quartet gave the assembly an idea of what takes place during a practice of the aforementioned organization at the Beavis residence.

The various episodes of the alleged rehearsal followed one another with such breath-taking rapidity, that the audience hardly knew what to expect next. It was rumored that the entertainers were slightly in the dark about that fact also. The boys are all the more deserving of praise, in that the skit was originated and rehearsed on very short notice.

"Boompa-a-Daisy":

Misses Joyce Cooper and Madeline Walden proved that they were capable of tripping a very light fantastic by appearing on the stage in colorful costumes to dance and sing a highly entertaining duet to the music of that grand (?) old tune "The Bowery."

The girls certainly gave a fine performance and it is to be hoped that we will be seeing them soon in the assembly.

The Maestro Returns:

Once again the student body was treated to a brief recital by Stanley Hagerman, one of Belleville's most talented pianists. For his main selection, Stanley rendered Rachmaninoff's "Prelude in C sharp minor," and the whole assembly thrilled to the thundering chords of this great classic which he played in a truly professional manner.

For an encore which could not be rufused, Stanley gave us a selection by Bach which was equally well received.

Substitution:

In the absence of Mr. Maybee from the assembly today, the band was under the direction of Mr. Youdale and gave its usual fine performance.

BOYS' SPORTS

Junior House League Champions:

On Thursday, November 23, at approximately 5 p.m., Maurice Rollins' team emerged as champions by taking their second straight win over Gord Bankier's team 10-7. Previously they had won Tuesday night by a score of 24-10. Bankier's team started the second game by introducing shifting zone defence to the House League. This defence proved successful as they led 7-6 at three quarter time. However, in the last quarter Graham was injured on a foul and forced to leave the game. From there on Rollins' team went ahead and finally won out, with the game closely contested right up to the last whistle. Bongard and Massey played a good game for the winners, while Lockyer, Graham, Buchanan and Drumm turned in a strong effort for the losers.

This is the first year such a league has been in existence in our school, and a great deal of credit is due Mr. Townsend for his foresight in starting such a fine idea. The worth of this organization has been proven in the fact that six players from the Junior House League are being considered for the junior team, which has been narrowed down to fourteen players. There will be some fine teams representing B.C.I. in the future as a result of this league. Credit is also due to the four seniors and four juniors who coached these teams, refereed games and generally were in a large way responsible for the success of the league.

Junior Basketball:

On Friday, after 4 p.m., two teams composed of the remaining twenty candidates for the junior team played an exhibition basketball game, with a team coached by Maurice Rollins defeating a team coached by Gord Bankier in overtime by a score of 16-14. Great credit is due both teams, especially the losers, who had only two of last years Juniors as compared with the winners who had three former juniors and a junior from Ottawa. There were several outstanding players on both teams. "Silver" Cameron of the losers was the outstanding player on the floor as he went on a one-man scoring spree to score the first seven points of the game as well as contribute a fine effort on defence. He was closely followed by "Fearless" Watson, Bob Vaughan, and George Miller of the winners. "Beaser" Watkin of the winners scored a beautiful long shot as well as some good guarding and ball-handling, while Bob Stebbings scored the winning basket in overtime. Dave Lockyer, Colin Cameron and Gerald Bongard of the losers, all products of the Junior House League, turned in a strong effort. The team has now been cut down to fourteen players, and they will meet the seniors in an exhibition game on Thursday. A good crowd would serve to encourage both teams

Interform Rugby Champions XIIG.:

After four quarters of hard fast football between the teams of IXG and XIIG a decision was finally reached in the interform series for 1944. Jack Dodson's XIIG Tech. boys falling back at the end before the terrific onslaught of a hard-bucking, fast-passing ninth grade team, managed to come through on top of an 8-6 score, and become school champions for the year.

There was no doubt that Earl Bush's younger IXG boys, averaging around 15 years apiece, meant business when, after a surprise touchdown at the beginning of the game by XIIG's Bob Roland, they settled down and kept their heavier opponents on their heels for the remainder of the battle.

With Harris and Burns cracking the twelfth grade line for substantial gains, and the Bush to Young passing combination clicking to perfection, the Lower School champions marched up and over to cut the lead with a touchdown pass, Bush to Burns, making the score 6-5.

After the ninth grade line held to stop many successive enemy bucks, Bush found himself in position to kick for a point and tie the game. However XIIG, still to be reckoned with, advanced the ball to where Jack Dodson kicked a two point rouge, making the score 8-6.

A sneaker play in the waning moments of the game put the IXG boys in position but time was insufficient to permit further score, and XIIG became the champion football team of B.C.I.V.S.

The lineups were: IXG: Snap, Green; Wings, Burns, Bradshaw; Quarter, Bush; Halves, Young, Harris; Alternates, Pearson, Graham.

XIIG: Snap, Gibson; Wings, Fradette, Spafford; Quarter, Dodson; Halves, Freeman, Roland; Alternate, Vickers.

COMING EVENTS

Week of November 27th—December 1st.

Foremost in our minds this week of course is our annual Commencement in the afternoon and evening of Friday, December 1st. There will be the presentation of diplomas to graduates of Lower School, Middle School, and to those who graduated from Upper School last year. School letters will be awarded and several scholarships will be presented to successful candidates.

After the evening ceremonies a dance will be held in the school gym until the hour of 1 a.m. We have been fortunate in securing the services of the fine orchestra from No. 6 R.D. at Trenton, which as you know, is constantly sought after by various other organizations. Dress is optional, either formal or informal as you wish.

Other events this week are:

Wednesday, November 29th.

This may be your last chance to see a B. C. I. rugby game this season. Our Juniors are paired off with St. Mikes in what we know will be a real thriller. The teams have had fine support all season, and we would hate to see it fall down on the last game.

For those interested in the dancing class, the date has been changed from Tuesday to Wednesday. Don't be afraid of being conspicuous; there were fifty-two out last week. The more the merrier.

Thursday, November 30th.

This is the date of the first Junior vs. Senior Basketball game of the season. This annual affair is usually a two-of-three game series and gives the school an opportunity to look over the current season's teams. Two years ago the Juniors defeated the Seniors two straight, last year the Seniors reversed the decision. Thursday night is your chance to witness a real scrap for this year's honors.

Friday, December 1st.

Being commencement, there are no extra-curricular events scheduled.

Warning.

December 7th — Exams!

AD LIBITUM

The theories of some of our philosophers tend to relate that the world has reached the climax of its civilization and is sinking back through the 1890's. Their opinion may explain the return of the extraordinary style of neckwear introduced into B. C. I. V. S. by certain students. Bow-ties! The usual type of cravating still predominates in the school, thus making the latest fashion seem out of place

There is one point that I would like to make clear, however, and that is that "Frank Sinatra" does not wear bow-ties, and has not been seen in public wearing one, to the best of my knowledge. Frankie has been confused with one of Hollywood's latest singers, Dick Haymes, who does wear these strange cravats.

We bolder students may feel that the bow-tie does something for our looks, (not saying what that something is), and would like to form a "bow-tie wearers union" for protection against "anti-bow-tie" mobs. I, for one, think that it would be a very good organization, since I took part in a slight skirmish to prevent damage to my own tie by several fellows of my form.

Well fellows, it's all right, because they create a little variety in the old school and you will all agree that is what we need. A bow-tie is nothing to be ashamed of and is very smart, out-of-the-way, and neat. I can honestly say that because I wear them myself quite often and find them very comfortable.

If any of you would like to know how to tie and wear the bow-tie, you may speak to some one who wears them and arrange for private lessons in the art.

Briton Gives Lounge For Canuck Officers

London (CP) — A lounge for the use of Canadian officers — especially those who have been undergoing hospital treatment in England —has been opened at British Columbia House by Maj.-Gen. R. M. Luton of Halifax, director of Canadian Medical Services whose office is in the same building.

Agent-General A. W. McAdam said the lounge was made possible by the generosity of an anonymous Englishman. While the lounge was open to all Canadian officers it was designed primarily as a rendesvous and place of rest for men in hospital who might have occasion to come to London.

The lounge is under supervision of Mrs. M. Fernie, formerly of (Jericho Country Club) Vancouver, assisted by members of the Canadian Red Cros [illegible] London.

MAYORAL QUALITIES DEFINED BY G.B.S.

Bridgewater, England (CP) — These Bernard Shaw opinions of the essential qualities of a successful mayor were read at a mayoral meeting here:

"The scope of a mayor is infinite. It cannot be summed up in three qualities nor in three thousand. A mayor can do more than a prime minister hampered by the party system. A municipality with a real live mayor and an able town clerk can do more in three months than Parliament in 30 years."

These dimes work their heads off

No doubt you've seen dimes worn so thin that you can't see the heads on them.

That's what happens when money is really passed around.

That's what happens every year to at least two and a half billion dimes that are put into circulation through the life insurance companies. These dimes really go to work.

They come in the form of premium payments from four million policyholders and if you prefer figuring in folding money, they amount to 250 million dollars.

In peacetime these dimes are not idle. They are kept busy through investment in a great variety of local and national undertakings. For the past five years they have been busy in a strictly military sense—backing up our fighting men with more than a billion dollars' worth of Victory Bonds.

These busy dimes are helping to buy security for you and yours—both in the present and in the future—both at home and abroad.

Allied Pressure On Huns

As day after day passes and Allied pressure makes itself felt on the three fronts on the west, east and south, the Allied world is thrilled with the success of the United Nations armies and air fleets. Despite the fierce and determined resistance of the Germans the Allied advance moves on. The superiority of Allied striking power shows itself at every turn. On the eastern front the marked successes of the Russian forces are told in the vast change which has been effected in the Balkans as the western Allies have done in the west.

Allied confidence is high at this time for success as Germany is now all hemmed in, with its sky blasted by the smothering raids which batter into the German war plants, railway lines, canals, and highways and the Allied lines on all fronts pointing directly at Berlin as the centre towards which the United Nations armed forces move irresistibly. More and more German territory is being invaded.

Measures the Japs As Race

The Japanese who the world has found could be villains for all their smiles and grins, have just been called by American Vice-Admiral Marc A. Mitscher "the poorest specimens of man on this earth today. The navy officer said, "I find them vicious, savage, ignorant people, completely without morals or instincts that will fit them to fight fairly under the generally accepted rules of war. There may be some fair-minded Japanese in the world today, but it has not been my privilege to meet them in this war."

Treachery and savagery of the Japanese Government in its pretence of peace and in its sneak blows which the Japanese stabbed at the United States and Britain in December 1941 will live long in the memory of mankind. The Japanese aggressor, like the Hun, is learning that such treachery as theirs has made the Allies determined to bring these lawless Axis states to judgment for their crimes.

History and Germany

Dr. Goebbels the other day said that "history surely cannot be so unjust as to let Germany lose" and that "it would be quite incomprehensible and completely unbearable if this woeful pilgrimage of the German people were not crowned with success."

His twisting of truth has failed. Now he must appeal to the inability of the Nazis to believe that they are headed for defeat to buoy them up rather than to any appeal such as he has hitherto used.

The criminal Nazi feels a miserable self-pity, but that won't save him when he is caught red-handed in his crimes. Germany has been caught in the trap by her crimes—the leaders at least know that—but they like all criminals cannot understand how their belief in themselves is doomed. The criminal grasps at straws and yet does not ward off arrest and punishment.

Hitler himself has been ready to trust to any weapon he thinks might win for him and the Nazis some respite to gain time or to wiggle out of the Allied grasp or faintly trust to war weariness to secure for the Hun escape from the penalty of his crimes.

The confidence of an aggressor that he can win against the laws of men and life is one of the numbing effects of a life of crime, such as that which Hitler and the Nazis have led.

Goebbels moreover can offer no cheer to the Germans, "we do our duty whether we are happy or sad at heart," he says.

The Allies are out to destroy first of all Germany's military machine, the spirit of Hitlerism and Nazism, to crush forever the spirit that dwells in Germany that she can at her own will make war against whomever she pleases and if she loses, plot for another war and seek to escape by denying any war guilt..

History is going to write the doom of Hitlerism, Nazism, German militarism. History's record is going to be that Germany committed the greatest crimes against humanity and that Germany has to be purged through war and punishment imposed upon her by the ideals of nations that love freedom. Germany in a career of selfishness tried to conquer the world of free states, and to wipe out democracy and is being brought to the bar of humanity for punishment for her crimes and Goebbels begins to whine and wail against the approaching doom of Prussianism.

History will write that what the Allies are going to do is for the good of all humanity and that Germany though against her will will be forced to lead a life free from international brigandry.

When the war is done Germany is not going to get away with any false plea that Germany is not guilty of any crimes. She will be put in the position that she will not be able to go to war at any time when it pleases her because she says she has grievance. She will be made to learn that a nation is responsible for what her rulers do. Germany has an age-old record of warring on other states for selfish reasons and this inclination of the Huns is to be purged. History will record that Germany after this war has to behave within the laws of nations.

Royal Navy and Science

The Royal Navy is to have its own permanent service of scientists and engineers engaged on research, experimental design and development, report comes from British sources. The new personnel now enrolled in the Admiralty scientific, technical and chemical pools are to be reorganized as the Royal Navy Scientific Service, reports The Quebec Chronical-Telegraph.

Security considerations permitting, members will contribute to the discussions of the learned institutions, enabling them to further the reputation of the navy for high quality scientific and engineering work, and to contribute to advances in these subjects for the benefit of the nation as a whole. The service represents an important step toward achieving the aim that every ship putting to sea shall in its conception and equipment be the best that modern science and engineering can produce, writes a naval correspondent.

When the war began there were 600 members of the three pools, now amalgamated. Since then, it has increased to 3,000. What the post-war strength will be is not yet known, but it will not fall to the prewar mark. All the fruits of Admiralty research and development have been shared with the United States.

Charming Melancholy

(Detroit Free Press)

We are in the gray month when the skies lower and the sun, when it breaks through the cloud banks, shines mournfully, bypassing us at an ever-increasing distance from the zenith, so that the denuded maples, beeches, poplars and tamaracks cast long, lean shadows across yellowed grass.

Yet there is beauty in these "saddest days" of all the year. Fallen foliage opens wide vistas, exposing lakes and hills kept jealously secreted from strangers' eyes through the lush summertime; and the sombre reds and rich browns of the still clinging oak leaves show boldly among evergreen darkly rich in autumn moods.

To a person of northern blood there's a restfulness in this "melancholy" season that gives it strange charm.

England Experiments

An experiment in pre-fabricated schools is being made at Welling, Kent, where work will begin shortly on a bungalow type school to accommodate well over 300 children. The school is to be a permanent structure, and is being erected in Kent to deal with over-crowding problems. Once the drainage and foundation are installed it will be a matter of days to piece together the concrete sections of such a school. The design is the result of an invitation to leading architects to submit plans.

Fooling the Huns

J. Edgar Hoover reveals how his Federal Bureau of Investigation trapped women spying for the enemy in the United States: "F.B.I. agents who spoke German fluently joined the group of Nazi spies and built a radio station with funds supplied by Gestapo leader Himmler, and for more than 18 months furnished valueless information to Germany. Incidentally, the U. S. A. made a profit of some $18,000 in the construction of this radio station, and turned the funds over to the Treasury Department."

JUST FOLKS

(Copyright, 1944, Edgar A. Guest)

By EDGAR A. GUEST

THE COVER

The song birds all have gone away,
The garden now is still;
Only the sparrows watch by day
For crumbs upon the sill.

Now bare is every vine and tree,
Asleep are rose and phlox;
Dismal the spot that used to be
Aglow with hollyhocks.

In fits of fury falls the rain.
The cold, north wind, unkind,
Lets nothing beautiful remain
For winter skies to find.

But soon, all-merciful, the snow
Will blanket scar and bruise
And all that's ugly, lest they show
And man his faith should lose.

ROSE OF SHARON

The Song of Solomon 2:1 says: "I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys."

"Rose" occurs only once elsewhere in the King James Version of the Bible and there it is also associated with Sharon.

Isaiah 35:1-2 says: "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God."

The true meaning of the Hebrew original translated rose in these two passages is not known for certain. It has been identified by some with a species of narcissus, by others with the meadow saffon, and by still others with various rock roses and tulips.

"Lily of the valley" likewise cannot be definitely identified with any particular species of plant. It may have been a generic name for several plants of the lily type. Most authorities suppose it to refer to an iris common in Palestine.

At the present time a number of different species bear the name "rose of Sharon" and "lily of the valley," but these plants were given these Biblical names without any reference to the originals.

"Sharon," supposedly derived from a Hebrew root denoting "level country," was the name of an undulating plain in ancient Palestine noted for its fertility, luxuriant grass, richly colored flowers and abundant harvests.

Isaiah 65:10 says "And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks," and in I Chronicles 27:29 we are told that over David's "herds that fed in Sharon was Shitrai the Sharonite."

The "garden of Palestine," as the plain of Sharon has been described, is about 50 miles long and from six to twelve wide. It lies northward from Joppa between the sand-dunes of the Mediterranean coast and Mt. Carmel.

Throughout the centuries the sand-dunes have been extending themselves eastward and encroaching upon the plains of Sharon.

U. S. BUZZ-BOMB IS READY FOR USE—IF NEEDED

America's version of the German V-1 robot bomb is ready for use—if needed. Above is one of the first pictures taken of the launching at an undisclosed proving ground of the air technical service command. The bomb was reconstructed in 30 days using fragments of German bombs found in England as models. Its launching ramp is an improvement over the Germans, the A.T.S.C. said. It can be built in four days whereas the Nazis required two weeks.

Malta Still Bears The Scars of War

By HAROLD FREEMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Valetta, Malta (CP) — It is two years since bombs fell on Malta—almost three years since it had a really heavy raid—but this capital still shows plenty of signs of the battering it took when Malta was the most bombed-spot in the world.

The war has moved away from the George Cross Island now, and the little post which for so long was a running sore eating into the Axis war strength has become largely a staging post for R.A.F. Transport Command planes which blanket the Mediterranean area on their runs.

Malta has cleared up the worst of her debris, but there is much yet to be done. Entire blocks remain mere heaps of debris, others have walls standing around gutted interiors, and hardly a house fails to show some signs of war.

Every building is still minus at least a few windows, because glass is one of those things the Maltese haven't got around to replacing yet. Outside the city, herds of goats are beginning to reappear in the fields, but other cattle are scarce and it will be a long time yet before Malta regains her normal livestock population.

Those who passed through the long blockade tell grim stories of the island that wouldn't quit—stories of an entire people living for months on supplies equivalent to 42 per cent of the army field ration; stories of life in Valetta without electricity, fuel, gas, water or heat; stories of hope springing up with the arrival of a provision ship that managed to get through the aerial blockade, and of the disappointment when the ship was sunk at her berth before she could be unloaded.

Now the war has moved away from Malta, and most of the fighter squadrons that had many Canadian aces in their personnel during the critical period, have gone elsewhere. But there are still a few "Canada" flashes to be seen on Valetta streets.

They are worn by chaps like Flt. Lt. Nick Zora of Regina, who has taken over charge of the Western Mediterranean aircraft safety section; Flt. Lt. Edward Sexsmith, of Vancouver, flying control officer at Lucca airport; Flt. Lt. Ted Vout, of Ottawa, who holds a similar flying control post at Hal Far airport, and Flt. Lt. Lee Johnston of Charlottetown, who after ten years in the R.A.F. is meteorological officer at Malta.

THE MAD MAN FROM MECCA

The man with chronic bronchitis and bronchiectasis (that means dilation, expansion or ballooning of bronchial tubes) wrote from Mecca or Bagdad or some such place in the Mojave desert in Southern California—near Palm Springs, you plutocrats will remember—to ask where he might find an equable dry climate.

It is all right for the Mad Man, as it is for any one else, anywhere in North America, to move from time to time if the landlord, the neighbors, the police, the weather or the flora and fauna are not to one's liking. It is fun, too, and puts more money in circulation, for one to go away from wherever one happens to reside at the moment to spend the winter or the summer or a week or two at any time of year.

But the Mad Man from Mecca asked my advice, and this was the advice I gave him:

It makes no difference at all where in North America you happen to live or sojourn. All that matters is how much of your time you live outdoors, how much of your body you expose to sunshine, skyshine, daylight.

Of course if you know better about such things than I do, there is no point in asking my opinion or advice. And I estimate that nine out of ten who read this item believe they know better than I do.

The Mad Man from Mecca said he had been afflicted with middle ear infection since childhood, and more or less throat and sinus trouble which he used to call catarrh. (It was thoughtful of him to pay me such deference. You new readers may not understand, but I go into a veritable furor when a correspondent tries to tell me he or she has "catarrh," for that is a meaningless word, just quack bait, like "impure blood," "run down condition," "lazy liver."

Long continued suppuration (formation of pus) in the middle ear or in a sinus in childhood and youth is a common cause of bronchiectasis. Therefore it behooves parents to have upper respiratory tract infections, particularly middle ear infection and maxillary sinusitis, persistently treated when children with such trouble develop persistent coughing spells bringing up large quantities of sputum.

We'll discuss bronchiectasis in articles to follow. Here I hope to leave in the mind of the reader at least this suggestion: Whatever your ailment and wherever you live, the important question is not how equable the climate nor how fine the weather but how much of your skin can you expose to sunshine, skyshine, daylight every day the year around with reasonable comfort?

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Hand Lotion for Mechanics

You recommended for mechanics and others who have to use harsh solvents, alkalis, etc., the regular use of a mixture of equal parts of lanolin and fresh castor oil on the hands after cleaning up at night, and before beginning work in the morning. It has become standard equipment in the plant now. It certainly keeps the skin in fine condition. (F.R.P.)

Answer — Thank you. Even houseworkers might keep it on hand and apply a few drops to hands or other rough, dry or irritated areas of skin daily. Always apply it only after washing and drying the skin.

Terpin Hydrate for Chronic Cough

My husband has taken terpin hydrate as describe in "Call it Cri" for a week on several occasions in the past few years (he has chronic bronchitis) and it has given much relief. (Mrs. P.E.M.)

Answer—It is a product of purified oil of turpentine (not the crude industrial turpentine) — two or three drops of purified oil of turpentine, itself, in capsule or taken on sugar, twice daily, after food, for a week, will give considerable relief in cases of chronic cough. For the booklet "Call it Cri" send twenty-five cents and stamped envelope bearing your address.

Vitamin C and Allergy

Have you had any significant favorable reports from your readers on their experience in using vitamin C for allergy? (V.D.V.)

Answer — Not enough as yet to consider. Allergy is a condition subject to odd and abrupt onset and termination, and that makes it difficult to judge the effects of remedies. I hope enough reports from readers will accumulate in the course of the year to indicate whether vitamin C has as much value as some physicians believe it has. Any reader may have the pamphlet on "Relief for Allergy" on request, if he provides stamped pre-addressed envelope.

Capital Closeups

By JACK BRAYLEY
(CP Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Nov. 27 —(CP)— Seven sisters: When Count Jean de Hauteclocque — 51-year-old French aristocrat, soldier and diplomat appointed as reborn France's first ambassador to Canada — arrives here soon to take up residence in the spacious embassy he'll need all the rooms to house his large family. He was seven daughters, their ages ranging from eight to 20.

From a famous Catholic family of the Artois Department of Farnce — skirting the English Channel and Belgium and including seaports like Calais and Boulogne where Canadians recently fought — the count has a sturdy background as a French patriot. He hails from a military family and his father was killed in the First Great War. He himself was wounded and was awarded the legion of honor.

English Accent: The forthcoming arrival of Count de Hauteclocque poses a question as to the future of Maj. Gabriel Bonneau, who joined the forces of Gen. de Gaulle as soon as the were established.

After fighting with Free French forces in Eritrea, Abyssinia and Notrh Africa he came to Canada as fighting French representative in February, 1943. He aided in cementing relations between the de Gaulle administration and Canada and saw his efforts recently crowned by full recognition by this country of the de Gaulle government.

Whether Gen. de Gaulle is considering using the Major's great understanding of far eastern problems and planning to send him to a post in that area is not known.

Old Friend: Another item of diplomatic news is that H. A. Jones, who made many friends in the capital when he represented British interests on Commonwealth Air Training Plan councils, may return to Canada as high commissioner, succeeding Rt. Hon. Malcolm Macdonald, reported going back to an active political career.

Mrs. Jones, R. A. F. Chief Public Relations Officers, was decorated and wounded in the First Great War while serving with the Royal Flying Corps.

Urges Improvement Of Maternity Care

London (CP) — Eardley Holland, president of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, said in an address to the London section of the college that Britain should develop a first-class midwifery service.

"We must have in future an absolutely first-class population," he said. "Taking our maternity service all in all it is pretty poor, tho' we must pay a tribute to those people responsible for running it for in spite of all the difficulties of war the maternal mortality figures have fallen in a remarkable way. One of the first things we must do is to distribute evenly over the country the good midwives, specialists and general practitioners."

He urged that midwifery in the home be placed on the same footing as in hospitals.

INVENTS TORPEDO

Johannesburg (CP) — A Johannesburg man, J. Dutton, has invented a tropedo which is guidded to its objective and then released by a midget submarine carrying one man.

TWEED

Mr., Mrs. T. Potts Honored on Eve Of Departure

Tweed — When it was finally known that Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Potts were leaving Tweed for their former home in Marmora, the Rebekah and subordinate lodges and their families held a social evening in the I.O.O.F. hall on Tuesday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Potts have conducted the Huyck Hotel in Tweed for the past eight years, and although help was often hard to get their hotel has always been at the disposal of local organizations.

Progressive euchre was played during the evening and when play had been completed Mr. and Mrs. Potts were asked to take seats at the front of the hall and an address was read by Mr. L. A. McDougal. The presentation of a modern design table lamp was made by Mrs. H. A. Countryman of the Rebekah Lodge.

Mr. and Mrs. Potts were completely taken by surprise and in a few well chosen words they thanked the members for their thoughtfulness in remembering them in this way. Their membership will be left with the home lodges and they hope to visit their friends frequently. "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows" was sung, after which the ladies served refreshments.

FOSSILS FOUND AT GIBRALTAR

Gibraltar (CP) — Tunnellers of the Royal Engineers extending the Rock's famous underground defence system have found fossils of interest to students of natural history 200 feet inside the eastern face of the cliff.

The fossils were several pair of antlers, jaws, complete sets of teeth, many vertebrae and other bones. The 20-foot-wide fissure in which they were located has been sealed up and will be searched closely for more bones after the war.

Now Here Was a 'Hotel'

(Written for The Ottawa Journal by R. J. Deachman.)

* * *

It rained that afternoon in Oxford County — a slow, steady, misty rain which made everything wet, yet left little water on farm fields or city streets. I hopped off the bus and crossed the road to the hotel. The man who sleeps often, in these hostelries, can classify them when his fingers touch the latch. If the latch is loose the door rattles, so, too, does the hotel. Then you will woo Morpheus to the babble of endless conversation, the tramping of many feet, the slamming of doors—and awake, at last, from fitful slumber, wishing that the hotelkeeper had never been born or that he had chosen another occupation.

It was different here. The latch did not rattle, the door flowed smoothly to a cushioned stop. The rotunda looked restful. The lady at the desk was quiet and efficient. "Yes, there was a reservation for me, room 14." The stairs were carpeted, the carpet protected by a rubber-like covering. I knew what I would find before I opened the door. The room was small but neat and clean. Everything was in its place. The lights were arranged to give light where it was likely to be needed. There was a chair beside the bed—a better place for a watch than under a pillow. There was a place to put your bag, a stick to prop the window open. The ash tray contained neither stubs nor ashes. The Ideon Bible was new, a half-morocco cover. Perhaps only saints slept here — they had used it little.

Said I to myself: "Here is a hotel run by a man who has slept in a hotel, before he owned one. I wish that could be said of all hotelkeepers."

Care for the Wounded and Ill —

CANADA'S TREATMENT AND PENSION POLICY

Canada's men and women who have volunteered to serve have done it in the realization that war demands a grim toll. They have known that in offering their lives to their country they have faced the possibility perhaps of coming back disabled, perhaps with health impaired, and perhaps needing long periods of treatment. Canada has recognized this and its responsibility to those who suffer injury or illness, and wide-spread treatment and pension provisions are now in effect and operating.

CONTINUING TREATMENT

For those requiring treatment at the time of their discharge there are special provisions. If treatment is commenced within thirty days, it will be continued as long as required; pay and allowances of rank are payable for at least a year if necessary, but if the disability is found to be pensionable, such payments can be continued beyond that if treatment will improve the condition.

TREATMENT PROTECTION AFTER DISCHARGE

If commencing within a year of discharge or within a year after continuing treatment ceases, every ex-service man or woman may receive in Canada free hospitalization and treatment for any disability within that year except if due to misconduct. Allowances are payable up to $30 monthly if single and $70 if married plus additional amounts for children.

Those who have served outside Canada, who have limited means and are not entitled to treatment from some other source, may be given hospitalization without allowances at any time in Canada for remedial non-service-related conditions.

TREATMENT FOR PENSIONERS

If ex-service men or women are suffereing from a pensionable war disability, not only are they eligible for all the above treatment benefits, but they are also entitled to treatment at any time or in any country for the pensioned condition. While undergoing such treatment they receive hospital allowance at the applicable 100 per cent pension rate less $15 per month, if an in-patient.

THE PENSION POLICY

The basic principle in awarding disability pensions is that they are awarded as compensation for loss suffered. Pensions in Canada are administered by an independent commission, all members being ex-service men. The commission determines the percentage of disability and the rates of pension are fixed by the Pension Act.

THOSE ELIGIBLE

Generally, any ex-service man or woman who served overseas and who, on discharge, suffers from a disability as a result of that service and not the result of their own improper conduct, are eligible for war disability pension. Where service has been entirely rendered in Canada, the disability, in order to be pensionable, must arise out of or be directly connected with military service. However, provision is made whereby pensions may be awarded to ex-service men or women with service in Canada only, if they incur serious disability which is not so related to service, and they are in necessitous circumstances.

AMOUNT OF PENSION

The rates of pension for all ranks up to and including Sub-Lieutenant (Navy), Lieutenant (Army), and Flying Officer (Air), are the same. The 100 per cent pension rates are $900 for the man, $300 for his wife, with allowances for children. If a man's disability is assessed at 25 per cent, he receives in pension 25 per cent of the 100 per cent rate.

WIDOWS' PENSIONS

The rates of pensions for widows and children of all ranks up to and including Sub-Lieutenant (Navy), Lieutenant (Army), and Flying Officer (Air), are: Widow $720, first child $180, second child $144, each subsequent child $120.

PARENTS

A dependent parent may be pensioned at the rate for a widow or such lesser rate as may be deemed necessary by the commission to provide maintenance.

TO ESTABLISH ELIGIBILITY

The documents of all service personnel discharged for medical reasons are forwarded to the pension commission by his service. If pension entitlement is conceded, pension is awarded after a medical examination to assess percentage of disability. However, if the ruling is not satisfactory, the ex-service man or woman is given every opportunity to present his or her claim and provision is made for a final personal hearing before an appeal board sitting in the applicant's district.

If an ex-service man or woman who has been discharged for medical reasons does not hear from the commission within a reasonable length of time following his or her discharge, he or she may write to the commission's nearest district office, requesting information.

VETERANS' BUREAUS

The services of veterans' bureaus are available to assist all ex-service personnel to prepare their claims for pension. Pensions advocates, attached to veterans' bureaus, give expert independent advice and assistance in the preparation of claims and their presentation before the commission.

Veterans' welfare officers are stationed in key centres throughout Canada. They are the friends of ex-service men and women. It is their duty to advise and assist all ex-service personnel with their re-establishment problems. If there is anything about the rehabilitation programme which you do not understand consult your nearest veterans' welfare officer.

The Experts Say

(By The Canadian Press)

Ottawa, Nov. 27 (CP) — TOMATOES UP: Consumption of tomatoes—a wonderfully inexpensive source of vitamin C—has increased rapidly from 25 pounds per person per year before the war to 35 lbs. at the present time, the Nutrition Division reports.

Full of the food element which keeps teeth healthy and the body supple and young, tomatoes suffer little loss of vitamin C in canning and its loss during storage is small.

Tomato juice may be used in place of citrus fruit juices such as orange, lemon and grapefruit. But it should be remembered that citrus fruits contain about twice as much vitamin C, cup for cup, as tomato juice.

CHICKEN PIE: There's a record supply of chickens this fall and that's good news to any homemaker whose family clamors for chicken pie.

Laura Pepper, chief of the Agriculture Department Consumer Section, says that Grade C chickens are today's best buy for pies, fricassees and so on. Price, tenderness and flavor are points in their favor. Their size, averaging in the neighborhood of four pounds. the neighborhood of four pounds, makes them specially good buys for the small family.

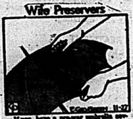
A potato crust is a delectable finish to a chicken pie. Sift and measure one cup of all-purpose flour. Sift again with one teaspoon of baking powder and ½ teaspoon of salt. Work in one cup of cold mashed potatoes and one cup of mild flavored fat and one well beaten egg. Roll ½ inch thick and bake for 40 minutes in a moderate oven, 350 degrees Fahrenheit.

CLEANED VEGETABLES: If you like to buy potatoes, carrots and other root vegetables that have been washed clean, buy them only in small quantities and use them up quickly. They don't keep nearly so well as unwashed ones.

WELL-NOURISHED DRAIN is common, for out of the saucepan and into the sink go half the minerals and vitamins from home or commercially canned vegetables .. that is, unless you save the liquid in the can. Make up your mind to use it in gravies, sauces or in tomato juice cocktails. The sink can get along without the vitamin but you can't.

SWEEPING STATEMENT: Your old broom will respond to kind treatment. Soak it in hot suds and dry well, then hang it up again in the kitchen closet, fresh and clean with a new lease on life .. remember that life will be much longer if you hang it and don't leave it standing on its bristles.

CORDUROY REFRESHER: This obliging material can be washed — if handled properly. Launder separately, as colors are inclined to run and hang up the garment, sopping wet, to dry. Wringing or rolling will rough up the pile. Garments not really soiled but looking a bit down-trodden respond well to a thorough brushing with a strong whisk and a steaming, hung up in a steam-filled bathroom.



If you have a pre-war umbrella covered with oil silk, keep it pretty by sponging, inside and out, with cool, sudsy water followed by a sponging with clear water. Use shower spray or shampoo spray for rinsing, and keep umbrella open until it is dry.

A Few Timely Beauty Hints For Today's College Girl

Gloria De Haven removes her make-up with a thin cream.

By HELEN FOLLETT

WHAT THE college girl wears is something to write home about. She designs her own fashions changes then whenever she wishes, and has an influence upon the clothes worn by older people. She is an important element in the picture of femininity and she's a lot of fun.

She may clothe her body in masculine attire but she sticks to her curls and her make-up. Without her lipstick she would be a lost soul wandering in the wilderness of social isolation. She swears by it, she uses it lavishly and she has not one color but several.

Beauty Suggestions.

If she will submit to a few suggestions, we would like to tell her that no matter how rushed her life may be, there are certain beauty attentions which must not be overlooked.

She should have a shampoo every fortnight. If she does this job herself she must use a rousing spray of hot water for rinsing so as to remove every bit of the soap from her hair. If soap remains the permanent will go limp, pin curls won't be worth a hang.

Removing Make-up.

Make-up should be removed with a cleansing oil or thin cream at night before the face washing starts. After the washing, rinsing and drying, more cream should be rubbed into the flesh and allowed to remain on. In the morning a dash of cold water is all that is necessary.

Hands must be lotioned daily fingernails creamed, the surrounding cuticle lifted with the orange wood stick. If eyebrow tweezing goes on, it should be restrained and restricted. A single hair line is no longer the mode.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Treatment of Oily Skin.

No doubt about it, the powder pad is a girl's best and oldest cosmetic friend. Compared to it, the rouge compact and the rosy lipstick are newcomers to the fold. A girl rushes to it on all occasions, sad or glad. And the poor dear whose nose looks as if it were larded, keeps the old lamb's wool pet working overtime.

Some complexions have such a perfect velvet finish that they don't need perfumed calcimine. But they are rare and, strangely enough, are among the blessings of women who are getting along in life. Time slows up the activities of the sebaceous glands. A compensation, maybe, for a slowing up of the delirious dance of human existence.

To a young woman who would stand in the front lines of the beauty chorus, an oily skin is an annoyance, to say the least. The lubricant exuded by the glands is necessary for the well-being of the facial coating. Without it there would be a chronic state of desquamation. Dead skin scales would accumulate so rapidly that the surface would be rough and tender rebellious against contact with soap. But there seems to be no sense in the sebaceous glands going wild in the head, never taking a moment off, gushing forth like Old Faithful at Yellowstone.

For the more adult sufferers there is consolation. The oily skin does not wrinkle prematurely.

Diet has an influence on the complexion just as it has on every cell of the body. Boys and girls in their early teens are inclined to eat too much candy and pastries that excite the glands, cause blackheads and pimples to develop. Men and women who love their groceries too well, and stoke up on them three times a day, are not likely to have complexions that will win prizes. The texture may become coarse, the surface filmed with oil. Play safe by eating in moderation, cutting down on pastries, rich sauces and fats. These foods enrage the sebaceous glands.

Soap suds are necessary to combat a combination of oil and atmospheric grease, can be used twice a day with good effect and no injury to the complexion. The water should be warm enough to fluff up a good lather. Rinsing must be thorough, first with tepid water, then with cold.

A soda solution—one teaspoonful of ordinary baking soda dissolved in a half cup of water—will combat oil and blackheads. The soda forms a chemical action with the fatty deposits in the pores, acts as an astringent to refine the texture of the skin. Apply with a pledget of cotton, let it dry on.

Use the soda solution at night. In the morning dash on cold water, dry gently and lave with witch hazel which is soothing.

Continue treatment for several months. Don't be impatient. Keep right on marching along the good-looks route. You'll get there.

The Marry Go Round

Why Liquidate Santa Claus?

I feel bitterly sorry for any little boy or girl who has never been permitted to believe in Santa Claus. The saddest day of my life was the one on which some officious "realist" killed Santa Claus for me!

That was before the debunkers started debunking everything. Before the realists decided that Santa Claus, Mother Goose and fairy tales must be deleted from the lives of our children—a theory that Walt Disney has utterly and triumphantly disproved.

Why must a child be realistic? Why must he not be permitted to use his imagination and indulge in his "divine ecstasies"? Why must we make him see life as one long drab state of existence consisting entirely of eating his spinach, taking his vitamins and washing behind the ears?

If the realists are right, no little boy can whirl in imagination through the frosty air behind Santa's reindeer, or skim over the treetops with Peter Pan. And no little girl can make fascinating trips to Wonderland or Through the Looking-Glass with Alice and the Red Queen, who believed in "impossible things".

All of which is BOSH—and worse! Take all of the fantasy, imagination and romance out of the world—and what have you left? Take all the imaginary thrills and moments of "divine ectasy" out of life and it will be pretty dull. That's why Santa Claus and his reindeer, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs and Mickey Mouse and all his pals are so real and so dear to the children.

But this very same "realist", who would delete Santa Claus and Grimm and Hans Anderson and Disney will bite on any kind of NEW "bunk" you may offer him. He'll faithfully try any new brand of vitamin—that's put on the market and expect miraculous results. He (or she) will believe any dietician who promises to make him slender and strong by a new method. And any eloquent speculator can easily persuade him to take a flyer in some new venture, and make a million overnight.

NEW BUNK for old! That is what the realists offer you. You can have a psychosis or a complex or a fixation. But you simply MUST NOT have an old-fashioned IMAGINATION!

But this is the month before Christmas, when the young imagination works overtime if it is given the least encouragement. The air is filled iwth the mystery and magic of the winter Solstice, the shop-windows are filled with glittering toys, and the screen and stage will soon blossom with fairy-tales and magic Disney characters. How can we deny any child that brief moment of enchantment, when he believes in EVERYTHING?

Santa Claus is not "the bunk"! He is the Spirit of Christmas, the ecstasy and glitter of childhood visions, who comes to any child who BELIEVES in him! Why liquidate Santa Claus?

PATRIOTS VICTIMS OF OWN COMRADES

Some Patriots Played Role Too Well Shot by Impetuous Resistance Workers

By MARGARET ECKER
(C.P. War Correspondent)

Paris (CP) — Over-zealous patriots in liberated countries of Europe have taken the lives of a few of the resistance movement's most courageous workers, some stories have said here.

Some underground workers who discovered that they could best work for the liberation of their homeland by posing as Nazi sympathizers have been executed by their freed fellow countrymen on D-Day or since.

This story was given me by resistance workers who hoped that its publication might halt similar impetuousness in countries still under Nazi occupation.

"It is dangerous for people to take it unto themselves to administer justice without investigation of the crime," one worker said. "In most cases the people who are executed are guilty, but then in the odd case an innocent and brave person dies."

Some place in Belgium, one of the first persons shot in a newly liberated town was a girl, who had worked in the Gestapo headquarters and who had been known as a friend of Nazi officers.

What those who executed her didn't know was that she was also one of Belgium's most valuable resistance workers.

Through her job in the headquarters she was first to learn the names of her countrymen who the Gestapo planned to arrest. In that way she was able to inform the victims and give them a chance to escape.

As a friend and confident of the Germans she collected information of highest use to the underground. So clever was she that the Nazis never suspected her and only the Belgians who worked with her knew her double, Mata Hari-like role.

In the south of France a talkative, friendly Frenchman was another victim.

From the time the Germans occupied his town he had treated them with jolly camaraderie. He had become a friend of the German officers and popped in and out of Nazi police headquarters several times a day.

He placed his car at their disposal and went on long trips into the country to collect food for them. Patriotic Frenchmen in the village hated him.

They didn't know that he learned many things valuable to his resistance group in the headquarters. That he used the gasoline allowed to him by the Germans to make resistance-organizing trips thru-out the district.

After D-Day his fellow townsment meted out the punishment they thought fit in the light of surface appearances.

Woman Suffers Fractured Hip When Hit by Bike

Struck by a bicycle as she was attempting to cross Front St. Saturday afternoon, elderly Mrs. Ellen Boyle, of 163 East College St., was knocked to the pavement where she sustained a fractured hip. The injured woman was assisted to a nearby motor car by two local school teachers, Geo. Wallace, 163 Charles St. and Milton Fowler, 246 Church St., who were also eye witnesses to the accident. They drove her home where she was attended by Dr. A. E. Miles and later removed to the Belleville General Hospital where efforts to reduce the fractured hip were made today.

Mr. Fowler and Mr. Wallace reported the matter to police headquarters and informed Deputy Chief Arthur Harman that a lad on a bicycle had collided with the elderly woman as she was crossing the street. Later Deputy Harman questioned an English refugee lad, 12-year-old John Baid, who is staying at 109 East Dundas St. for the duration. The youth told police the woman had walked out from between two parked cars and he could not avoid striking her. When asked why he did not remain at the scene the lad assured Deputy Harman he was not aware it was necessary after seeing the two men assist Mrs. Boyle.

District Creeks And Rivers At Record Low Level

With the time for the annual freeze-up drawing nearer and still little rain having been received throughout the autumn, district farmers have all but resigned themselves to a winter of short water supply. In many instances farmers' wells, which never before have gone dry are now insufficient to supply needs of stock with cattle and horses having to be driven to creeks and rivers.

Creeks and rivers in the district are also at what is believed to be a record low level for this season of the year with a mere trickle of water running where ordinarily there would be a considerable current.

Absence of water in the woods and swamps in the northern parts of the county is substantiated by returning hunters who report the swamps and hardwoods to be completely dry, there having been no necessity for huntsmen to wear rubber boots regardless of the level of the ground upon which they were hunting. Away from lakes or creeks, dogs were unable to find water to drink, it was stated.

In the immediate Belleville district many farmers are now drawing water or plan to start drawing water for their stock as soon as the freeze-up comes.

Oil Company Instals Extensive Retaining Wall of Steel at Dock

A solid steel retaining wall of half-inch metal, twenty-two feet in depth, and 370 feet in length, is replacing the old wooden structure along the Imperial Oil Company's harbor waterfront directly opposite Victoria Park.

Serious below-water undermining of the wooden wall during the high water period of two years ago, which penetrated in places to a depth of six feet, and which caused three 20,000 gallon gasoline tanks to tilt dangerously, caused the company to take immediate action.

Gradual settling of earth and the tilting of the tanks on the company's property next the waterfront retaining wall, caused an investigation. An expert diver inspected the harbor bottom along the wall and reported undermining which penetrated from four to six feet in places. The tanks were moved back to a place of safety and the construction of the new wall ordered.

The cost will run into thousands of dollars and the life expectancy of the dock is 200 years.

Pile Driver Used.

A large scow equipped with powerful pile-driving apparatus was brought here from Toronto by the MacNamara Construction Company of that city, and has been working at the project for some weeks. Already 225 feet of the new wall has been erected. Work is going on apace and it is hoped the wall will be completed before heavy winter weather sets in.

The wall is being erected approximately eight feet out from the company property. The intervening space will be filled and covered with a heavy thickness of cement.

Steel interlocking strips, fourteen inches wide and twenty-two feet long are being driven in the harbor bottom. The steel penetrates bottom rock to a depth of two feet. With a water depth of fourteen feet in the harbor at this point, there will be a freeboard of steel about six feet above the water level.

Accommodate Visiting Boats.

Mr. A. D. McLean, Imperial Oil Company manager here stated today that the new retaining wall and its spacious cement paving will also be used for the accommodation of visiting yachts and other water craft. Ladders will be placed for swimmers.

"There isn't a single place in the harbor where American or other visitors can moor their boats. We tried to accommodate them but there was not nearly enough room."

His company, Mr. McLean stated, will place mooring posts and collision strips along the wall so that visiting boats may tie up upon arrival. "We have had several requests from Americans who intend coming here and when this wall is completed we shall be able to accommodate them."

Arrangements are also under way to erect a walk from the south end of the company's wall across government property to South Front Street so that tourists may come and go at will. Previously an oil company employee stayed at the plant to open gates for the visitors.

Pte. H. Burkholder Glad To Be Home From Overseas

First Belleville soldier to be sent back to Canada under the new "Triwound" scheme, through which soldiers who have been wounded three or more times, or twice with a long period of service are returned to Canada for a period of duty near relatives, Private Harold W. Burkholder, son of Mrs. Maud Burkholder and the late Gordon W. Burkholder, 21 Octavia Street, arrived home on Saturday with a group of other soldier repatriates.

He has four and one-half years overseas service and was wounded twice, once during the invasion of Sicily and the second time in the Italian campaign. He served with the famous Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, going overseas in 1940 with the first reinforcement draft for that unit.

Reported to be the youngest soldier to leave Belleville, Private Burkholder still retains the look of a youth in his teens, although he would not disclose his age. He enlisted in September, 1939, with the Hasty Pees but did not get overseas until May of the following year.

Asked how it felt to be back home, the youngster smiled and said "You can't feed me too much Canada. It's fine to be back, although I wouldn't have missed my experience."

If the Zombies are smart enough to stay out of the overseas drafts, all well and good, was his opinion, "but," he added, "it was sure great news to us when we heard they were coming over to help out."

The young soldier will spend six months in Canada at a nearby military centre.

His father, the late Gordon W. Burkholder, was killed in a flying accident at Brandon, Manitoba, in 1942.

Police did not interfere and there was no further disturbance.

Col. H. Cockshutt, Former Lt.-Gov. Of Ontario, Dies

Brantford, Nov. 27 — (CP)—Col. Henry (Harry) Cockshutt, one of Canada's leading industrialists, head of the Cockshutt Plow Company enterprises and former Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, is dead.

The 76-year-old dean of the agricultural industry in Canada who last Sept. 21 marked 60 years with the Cockshutt Company died here yesterday.

Col. Cockshutt, native of Brantford, was Chancellor of the University of Western Ontario at the time of his death. During his life he was actively connected with many financial and manufacturing interests. He was a director of the Bank of Montreal, the Canadian Pacific Railway, Bell Telephone Company and the International Nickel Company, and chairman of the Sun Life Insurance Company advisory board.

He became treasurer of the Cockshutt Company Dec. 18, 1888, secretary treasurer three years later and managing director in 1894, at the age of 26. Despite his youth he made many trips to foreign markets.

In 1911, he became president of the company, founded by his elder brother, I. G. Cockshutt and held that position until September 1934 when he resigned to become chairman of the Board of Directors.

Mayor in 1899

In 1899, when only 31, Col. Cockshutt was elected mayor of Brantford, the youngest person on record to be mayor of this city. He was associated with practically every worthwhile civic endeavor launched here and in Brant county.

Col. Cockshutt was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario in 1921 and held the position for six years.

During the First Great War, he was one of Brantford's leaders in the war effort. In 1916, he organized and commanded, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, the 215th Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force. He was retired from the Army's active list in 1926 with the rank of Honorary Colonel.

His wife predeceased him several months ago. He is survived by two daughters, Margaret Elizabeth and Katherine Isabelle. A nephew, C. Gordon Cockshutt, succeeded him as president of the company when he retired 10 years ago.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

Antwerp Diamond Merchants Hid Millions in Diamonds From Huns

Brussels, Nov. 27 (Reuter).—In Antwerp the "diamond metropolis" where the price of a cup of coffee is a working man's daily wage, diamond cutters and merchants now tell the story of how, in the face of hunger and need they kept millions of dollars' worth of precious stones hidden during four years of German oppression.

Gestapo spies and officials of Goering's four-year-plan organization stopped at nothing to rob the city of its wealth in diamonds for the Nazi war machine.

Sitting in the sumptuously furnished offices of the Diamond Club in the city's Pelican Road was a German blackmailer and expert in precious stones. Hugo Prensel; the evil genius of persecution who employed every form of cunning and treachery to outwit the diamond hoarders.

There was a mercy for those caught in possession of what became known as "glittering death."

They were bundled into lorries and driven to an unknown fate in German death camps. Numerous victims suffered worse horrors than normal German prisoners on the grounds of their Jewish race. But great quantities of diamonds remained safely hidden until the day of liberation.

The only regret of the underground hoarders is that the long knives sharpened for Prensel could not be used. He died in Antwerp some months ago.

Cheese Producers, Hastings County, Re-elect J. A. Bell as President

John A. Bell, reeve of Marmora township, was re-elected president of the Hastings County Cheese Producers' Association on Friday afternoon when members convened for their annual meeting in the community hall in Stirling.

Clem H. Ketcheson, R.R. 2 Belleville, was returned as vice president, while E. B. Finkle of Halloway is again secretary treasurer. Honorary president is E. J. Pyear of Stirling.

The importance and necessity of floor prices being set for the post-war period for agricultural products was stressed by S. L. Joss, Belleville, secretary treasurer of the provincial Cheese Producers' Association. He claimed the reason for agricultural floor prices as being obvious but nevertheless intimated there was a feeling that success of such a venture was far from being assured.

In illustration he pointed out that prices for agricultural commodities are not only a Canadian problem but a problem which is international in scope. A great percentage of Canada's agricultural production depends upon foreign markets, thus Canadian farmers would be affected to a very large extent on the international economic trend in the period following the war.

Mr. Joss claimed as most important to farmers the federal legislation during the past year earmarking a fund of 200 millions to be used under certain conditions to help insure floor prices for farmers' products.

President Heard

Mr. W. H. Montgomery, Carrying Place, provincial president of the Cheese Producers' Association, reported briefly on the export food show recently held in Ottawa and pointed out the advantages of the single service strainer recommended for use by cheese factory patrons. "Many farmers," he said, "had discarded the single service strainer after short use claiming it to be too slow."

Answering Mr. Montgomery's intimation that many farmers had discarded the single service strainer, Mr. Clancy of Plum Grove factory, stated if a wire screen was placed between the strainer disc and perforated bottom the milk would go through much faster. This kept the disc from sucking down into the perforated holes, he said. Plum Grove factory last spring supplied all their patrons with single service strainers.

Mr. Montgomery also outlined the artificial insemination program inaugurated in Leeds county, while Mr. Joss gave a brief outline of the work to be taken on by the provincial organization next year, namely, pasture, artificial insemination and control of diseases affecting dairy cattle.

Advantages Pointed Out

Advantages of the new agricultural advisory committee acting in conjunction with the provincial department of agriculture were pointed out by Mr. H. L. Fair, county agricultural representative. Following Mr. Fair's talk members of the cheese producers' association asked that such a committee be set up in Hastings and appointed E. J. Pyear to represent their association on the new committee.

Other speakers heard during the afternoon were Mr. George Pollard, dairy instructor, and Mr. Roscoe Robson, M.P.P. for East Hastings.

Directors named for the cheese producers' association were as follows: Sam Danford, Halloway; J. F. Treverton, Plainfield; W. H. White, Roslin; Phillip Carr, Stirling; Morley Haggerty, West Huntingdon; W. E. Bateman, Tweed; E. D. O'Connor, Marmora; James Nickle, Marmora and James A. Moore, Queensboro. Auditors appointed were George McCullough and B. G. Mills.

North Bay, Nov. 27 (CP) — The Dionne quintuplets lost one of their most beloved relatives last night with the death of their 77-year-old grandfather, Oliver Dionne. A pioneer settler in the district, Mr. Dionne built the homestead in which the famous Quints were born. He died at his Callander home.

News of their grandfather's death was broken to the quintuplets by their mother early today, and Oliva Dionne, the sisters' father, said he expected that the famous quintet would attend the funeral with the rest of the family Wednesday morning.

POLICE COURT

Apprehended on a charge of shoplifting at the Walker Hardware store on Saturday, a 16-year-old Shannonville youth was questioned at the police station. He is alleged to have taken a cigarette case and brush. The lad was allowed to return home with instructions to appear in a subsequent police court. Other complaints regarding shoplifting in the downtown area have also reached police headquarters.

Radiator Cap Stolen

Harry Ervine, 404 Pinnacle St., complained to police that the radiator cap from his motor car had been stolen over the weekend. The cap was taken as the vehicle was parked near his home.

Parked Truck Damaged

George Towns, 317 Main St., in Toronto, parked his Terminal transport on Market St., late Saturday night while he sojourned in a nearby restaurant for lunch. When he returned he was surprised to find damage estimated at $50 had resulted to the radiator and front of the transport. It is presumed another truck backed into the Terminal transport during Mr. Towns' absence.

$5,000,000 LOSS

Saint John, N.B., Nov. 27—(CP)— Loss resulting from grounding of a freighter in Saint John harbor early Friday morning was estimated unofficially last night by shipping authorities at upwards of $5,000,000. Almost broken in two, the vessel was believed to be a total loss.

"He's been following us ever since we left Smith's Grocery!"

"It's not us he's following, Mathilda. It's those giant packages of delicious nourishing Grape-Nuts Flakes. He knows they're a treat to set lips smacking."

"You've guessed it, Lily. And he must also know they supply such good nourishment as carbohydrates and proteins, useful quantities of iron and phosphorus and other food essentials. And that they're easy to digest. I'll bet he'll buy some Grape-Nuts Flakes on his way home."

Short on Manpower Leafs Win From Canadiens Saturday But Lose in Montreal Sunday

Frank McCool, Toronto Goalie, Has First Shutout of N.H.L. Season

By ERIC SANDERSON
(CP Staff Writer)

National Hockey League fans were treated to the season's best displays of puck-chasing during the week-end, which saw Montreal Canadiens, last year's champions, lose and then regain the leadership and the cellar-dwelling Chicago Black Hawks win their first game since Nov. 1.

Toronto Maple Leafs, early-season pace-setters and short on manpower, outplayed the Canadiens all the way on home ice Saturday night to score a 2-0 victory for the first shutout of the season and took over the league's top spot for one night. On Sunday, the Torontopians allowed the Canucks to skate off with a 4-1 triumph.

In the other Saturday night affray, Detroit Red Wings strengthened their third-place position by handing Chicago a 7-4 beating, but dropped a 6-5 decision to the same team Sunday. Boston Bruins retained sole possession of fourth place by handing New York Rangers an 8-4 trouncing at Boston Gardens Sunday.

Lorne Carr Twists Leg

Playing before a crowd of 13,000 at Maple Leaf Gardens Saturday, the Leafs, minus ace winger Dave (Sweeney) Schriner and defenceman Elwin Morris, forced the pace from the opening face-off and were further handicapped when Lorne Carr, star right winger, suffered twisted ligaments in his right leg when he was crowded into the boards by Butch Bouchard.

Toronto set up a stalwart defence in front of goalie Frank McCool whose expert workmanship gave him the season's first shutout. Big Walter (Babe) Pratt got the first goal early in the last period and Mel (Sudden Death) Hill notched the other seven minutes later.

McCool continued his stellar netminding as the two squads played in Montreal ice before more than 12,000 fans Sunday and it wasn't until early in the middle session that Maurice Richard found the mark for his first of three markers in the game. Fern Gauthier made it 2-0 before the period ended. Nick Metz was the Leafs' marksman.

Chicago kept pace with Detroit for two periods of their Saturday night contest before the Red Wings broke away in the final stanza to score three goals before Pte. Horeck counted Chicago's last. Two quick goals by Murray Armstrong and one by Carl Liscombe, his second of the game, clinched the match. Other Detroit marksmen were Syd Howe, Eddie Bruneteau and Jud McAtee. Bill Mosienko, Bus Brayshaw, Clint Smith and Horeck netted for Chicago.

Lead Changes Hands

The Sunday game was the most exciting and fastest on the Chicago Stadium ice this season. The lead changed hands every period. Carl Liscombe banged in the first goal of the game and veteran Earl Seibert got that one back for the Hawks. Ted Lindsay made it 2-1 for the Wings before the period ended.

Mosienko, Horeck and Joe Cooper scored in that order before the halfway mark of the second period and then Art Jackson and Lindsay found the mark to leave the teams tied at 4-4 going into the final period. Joe Carveth gave the Wings a 5-4 advantage, but Mosienko went into action to tie the count and wind up by scoring the winning goal.

Bruins kept the Rangers in close check most of the way in winning 8-4. Bill Jennings and Armand Gaudreault, each scored twice for Boston and other marksmen were Bill Cowley, Art Jackson, Dit Clapper and Frank Mario, Grant Warwick, with two, Phil Watson and Joe Shack were scorers for New York.

WATSON and RASPUTIN

Having batted each other around in almost every wrestling ring on the continent "Whipper Billie" Watson and his arch ring enemy Ivan (the Terrible Russian) Rasputin, have selected partners to settle their differences once and for all in a team grappling match that will no doubt terminate in a battle royal at the Hume Arena on Wednesday night. Team wrestling is not exactly new in Belleville, but it always has its moments of wild excitement that borders upon riotous bedlam.

Watson chose Tom Collins, the fighting Irishman from Buffalo, as his partner, while the Mad Russian persuaded Al Dunlop to team up with him in an effort to eliminate Watson from the muscle bending business.

Not satisfied with team wrestling Promoter Frank Tunney today announced he had signed Chief Thundercloud to meet Joe Christie in the semi-final. A preliminary of importance will open the show. Reserve seats are going rapidly at Cook's news stand. Phone 74.

PORTLAND OPEN TOURNEY WON BY SAM SNEAD

Just Released From Navy After 26 Months of Service

Portland, Ore., Nov. 27. (AP)—Samuel Jackson Snead, hitting the comeback trail after 26 months of Navy Service, was professional golf's man of the hour today, winner of the $15,500 war bonds 72-hole Portland open tournament. He tacked up a 289 to head a fine field of pros and amateurs and with the victory pocketed $2,675 in war bonds.

The husky Virginian hit his booming tee shots, scrambled frequently out of trouble, and putted well enough to lead Mike Turnesa, White Plains, N.Y., by two strokes at the finish.

Tied at 217 for 54 holes, the two had battled it out from the opening day. Snead led the first round with a two under par 70; Turnesa was a stroke behind. At the 36th hole, it was Turnesa 142 and slamming Sam, 144. Snead deadlocked it at the end of the third round and outshot the New Yorker in the last 18.

Snead gained one stroke at the 63rd hole, doing the first nine of the last round in par 35 against Turnesa's 36. He picked up another shot on the incoming nine where Turnesa got off a couple of poor fairway shots and three-putted a green for a total of 291.

Snead's effort highlighted an event that otherwise saw the start of what may be the crack-up of the noted tournament-winning combination of Byron Nelson, Toledo, O., and Harold (Jug) McSpaden, Philadephia. Between them, Nelson and McSpaden have cleaned up on practically all the competition.

Nelson finished in a fourth-place tie yesterday at 296 and McSpaden, far back, deadlocked with four others in eighth position with an even 300.

Big Ted Longworth, local entry, maintained a steady pace to take a third prize with a 295. He received $1,350 in war bonds.

BIG SEVEN

By The Canadian Press

Clint Smith, Chicago, picked up five points in weekend play to jump from seventh to third place, one point behind Blake. Bill Mosienko's four goals and two assists in two weekend games put him among the big seven, just ahead of Sweeney Schriner and Lorne Carr, Toronto, tied for the last spot.

HMCS DONNACONA SCORES UPSET IN TAKING WILDCATS

Stubborn Combines Outcharged and Kept Hamilton Team Offstride

Hamilton, Nov. 27. (CP) — The Navy Combines from H.M.C.S. Donnacona and St. Hyacinthe won Canadian Football Championship for Montreal Saturday for the third time since the title was first decided in 1882 with the biggest upset victory in years. Champions of the Quebec Rugby Football Union, the Combines scored a 7-6 victory over the Hamilton Wildcats, Ontario Rugby Football Union Champions and solid favorites to win their second successive Dominion crown.

During most of the game the stubborn Combines threw the powerful Hamilton team off stride with a charging line, deadly tackling and expert booting by Dutch Davey who more than held his own with the Hamilton kicking brigade, which was headed by the great Joe Krol.

Davey kicked the first Navy point in the first quarter, hoofing to Krol from 40 yards out and the starry Hamilton half was rouged. In the second quarter Davey pitched a touchdown pass to Johnny Taylor, who ducked one tackle and then dashed 40 yards for the major score, which was not converted.

Carried 55 Yards.

The Hamilton team hit its stride late in the third quarter with several big gains but it was not until the fourth that Paul Miovinovich and Krol carried the ball 55 yards in three plays for a touchdown. Starting from midfield, the hard-plunging Miovinovich went 20 yards to the Navy 35. Krol went 32 yards on the next play and then Miovinovich went over for the touchdown which Krol converted to tie the score.

A fumble on the kickoff and a short kick by Gordon Miller set up the winning Navy point. Miovinovich recovered and was downed seven yards from his goal line. Quarterback Al Hurley carried Miller's short kick back to the 20 before he was brought down and from there Davey booted to Ben Dyack who was rouged.

Second Service Team Win.

It was the second time a service team won the title and the Grey Cup, the Toronto R.C.A.F. Hurricanes having carried off the honors two years ago. Montreal's first title win was in 1907 and the second was in 1931.

Although Combines won the Dominion title, they were unable to win the Canadian Navy Championship, held by Toronto Navy Bulldogs who defeated the Combines 13-1 in Montreal the previous week. Bulldogs were not eligible for the Grey Cup as the Ontario Armed Services League did not file an entry.

Sport Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Nov. 27 — (AP)—MAN wanted . . . the one big task at the Major League meetings two weeks hence will be to decide what to do about a successor to Kennesaw Mountain Landis as Commissioner of Baseball . . . It has been suggested that the major leagues might return to the old commission form of government and it seems likely that Secretary Leslie O'Connor will continue to do the work, with the two league presidents advising him, until the present agreement expires in 1946 . . . To make this setup permanent, however, would invite the same kind of trouble that led to the appointment of Landis in 1921 . . . Not since that time has baseball been in so great need of a firm guiding hand.

History Repeats:

The famous Black Sox scandal which brought a new form of baseball government came shortly after the last war . . . Then, as now, the big leagues still were full of young players, getting their first taste of big money, and old timers getting their last chance at it . . . The gambling wave was at flood tide and those two groups were approachable . . . No one questioned the integrity of the old National Commission, but it failed to prevent that scandal... Under Landis' rule no one got excited this year when the news came out that a Washington pitcher had been approached to throw a game at the end of the season . . . Another good reason for appointing a new commissioner whose reputation and whose powers will at least be near those of Landis comes from the post-war problems baseball must face.

What's Doing in Sport

By The Canadian Press

Ohio State wound up its 1944 football season with an 18-14 triumph at Columbus Saturday over University of Michigan to register a series of nine straight victories, capture the big 10 college title but learn that conference board had ruled it could not accept an invitation to face Southern California in the Rose Bowl fixture at Pasadena Jan. 1. Meanwhile Tennessee completed an unbeaten season with a 21-7 over Kentucky in the Southern Conference and will play at Pasadena New Year's Day instead of Ohio State.

Oklahoma Aggies and Texas Christian qualified for the Cotton Bowl clash while Georgia Tech will play Tulsa in the Orange Bowl, although the former dropped a 21-0 decision to Notre Dame Saturday. Duke smeared North Carolina 33-0 to earn a Sugar Bowl date against Albama at New Orleans.

Manager Art Ross of the Boston Bruins Saturday sold defenceman Guy Labrie to the New York Rangers. Labrie, 24 and discharged from the Canadian Army, played 15 games for the Bruins last season.

Rick's Raft, owned by William Helis, upset the dope by winning the $25,000 Walden stakes over Alexis on Saturday's closing day program at Pimlico. Megogo of the Christiana Stable captured the gruelling $25,000 Pimlico Cup, 2½ miles, by eight lengths over the seven-year-old campaigner, bolingbroke. It was Megogo's sixth victory of the year.

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

A bombastic man met his somewhat henpecked friend, whose badly injured face suggested a recent motoring accident.

"Good heavens," his friend exclaimed. "How did that happen?"

"My wife....!" the injured one began.

"Your wife?" was the breezy reply. "Ah, evidently you haven't acquired the secret of married bliss. I never have a row with my wife. I have no secrets from her."

"Neither have I!" the henpecked one moaned. I only thought I had!"

Buckeyes Champs.

It was the end of a perfect season Saturday for the Ohio State as the "Buckeyes" scored a late marker to beat Michigan 18 to 14 to capture the 1944 Big Ten Conference and be named the number one civilian football team in the U.S.A. this year. It's too bad a bowl game couldn't be arranged between the Buckeyes and the winner of next Saturday's Army-Navy game. At that there is an agitation on at Columbus, Ohio, to have the Buckeyes defy the "Big 10" executive and maybe take part in the 1945 New Year's Day Rose Bowl game at Pasadena, but it's more likely to be the Tennessee "Volunteers".

It was Les Horvath, the Buckeyes' field general who lugged the pigskin 34 times for a workhorse effort to gain 104 yards. All-in-all the Michigan Wolverines only carried the ball 43 times all day, nine more than Horvath alone. Ohio only tried four aerial attacks, none were successful, so the Buckeyes stayed to the ground and went home. Horvath played the entire 60 minutes for the Conference champions and cannot miss an All-American selection.

Reminescing.

The other day Peterboro scribe Fred Craig was relating a yarn about an oldtime baseball player who threw a batter out from deep centrefield.

Continuing his comment Br'r Craig added the following paragraph that should be of local interest. Quote Fred: "Incidentally this column which happened to see that surprising throw has only seen the feat duplicated once in a good many years of reporting baseball. It happened down in Deloro in an intermediate O.B.A.A. playoff game between the Smelters team and Point Anne and the victim was none other than the veteran Soup Goyer, the Belleville player who was a member of the Point Anne club. Half way through the game Goyer lined what looked like a sure hit to centrefield but Ada the Kingston boy playing in the gardens for Deloro scooped up the ball on the first hop, rifled a throw to first and the astounded Goyer was called out. "Soup" put up a strenuous complaint at the decision but admitted afterward that the ruling had been right. "They can't do a thing like that to a fellow without him at least making a kick," said the Belleville man after the game."

Remember When.

Dick Irvin, veteran hockey player and former coach of the Chicago Black Hawks, signed to coach the Toronto Maple Leafs 15 years ago today. Irvin remained with the Leafs until 1940 when he went to the Montreal Les Canadiens in the same capacity and last year led the Flying Frenchmen to an N.H.L. title.

Action Aplenty.

These team rasslin' bouts, such as Marse Tunney is hauling into the local palace de sport Wednesday night, are productive of more unadulterated fun than can usually be jammed into one evening of entertainment. Quite frequently injuries of a serious nature result from the pell-melling handed out, but it is usually the unfortunate referee that suffers most. Skipper Tunney has the ideal team of mat ruffians in Ivan Rasputin, the Mad Russian, and Al (Egotistic) Dunlop to tangle with Billy Watson and that fighting son of Ireland—Tom Collins. Tunney also added Chief Thundercloud to wrestle Joe Christie in the semi-final and no doubt the Indian Chieftain will wind up in the battle royal.

Ball Czar Dies.

Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, high commissioner of professional baseball, died in a Chicago hospital on Saturday. Judge Landis was drafted from the United States Supreme Court to head baseball after the 1919 Black Sox scandal and has since kept the game from reproach. He was a man of fine upright character who did much public service for the game he became associated with and loved. He could well be referred to as "Mister Baseball." Until his successor is named, his secretary Leslie M. O'Connor, who the late judge recommended as the next high commissioner will carry on.

Two outstanding citizens, James A. Farley, former Postmaster General at Washington, and Ford C. Frick, President of the National League, have been rumored as possible successors. As a matter of fact so was the name of General MacArthur linked with the position some weeks ago. The National Commission meets next month.

Leslie M. O'Connor, secretary of the late Kenesaw M. Landis during the 24 years he held the office of baseball commissioner, was suggested yesterday as the man who might be selected by the 16 Major League clubs as his successor.

West Hill High School of Westmount Saturday won the Montreal-Ottawa Interscholastic Football honors by one point from Glebe Collegiate of Ottawa, the score of the return match being 7-0. One week previously Glebe had won 19-13 on their own gridiron.

LESSON NO. 542

By SAM GORDON

The Kibitzer

There once was a player in Mercer, whose wife's game got worser and worser. He would say to her: "Dear, you're progressing, I fear," as under his breath he would cercer.

Hang onto this hand:

♠Q 3
♥A K Q J 10 8 6 2
♦A
♣A 6

At one table in a duplicate match this hand was opened with six hearts. When asked why he did not start lower, the bidder said he and his partner were using an inferential six bid.

With them, he explained, an opening six bid was used as a sort of glorified three bid. It showed a long suit that was solid and two aces on the outside.

The way they used it, if partner has no ace, he must pass. But if partner has an ace he must bid seven in the opener's suit. The idea was that such a combination expected to produce a grand slam.

When partners use a rare bid for an odd purpose, they may have something. But in too many cases, they use it without considering its objections or knowing there is a better method.

That six bid was a monstrocity in the bidding tactics of early bridge. It became an outcast when ace-and-king showing came into use.

With the many efficient signals now available for slam bidding, there is no excuse for an opening six bid. Especially so with a hand that is unable to guarantee 12 tricks all by itself.

These days, an opening two bid will force partner to bid. And The Kibitzer's convention can get aces-and-kings information at a lower level of bidding. Meantime, more dope can be exchanged.

Of course, when I play with Elva Tyme, I know she never bids unless she has the Holy City. Even then, she bids only once. So, if she makes a bid, I hop right to six or seven no-trump.

But that's only because I love every bone in her head.

Piglet Born Minus Hind Legs Hops Proficiently on Others

"This little pig went to market and this little pig stayed at home ..", according to the old nursery rhyme, but the little pig of our story outshone all her brothers and sisters of fact and fiction because she was born without two legs instead of four.

And today, at three months and minus hind legs, the piglet, apparently being both philosophical and practical, has learned to hop along very proficiently on the two legs much as a man would walk on his hands. She jumps low fences and similar objects with ease and, except for being short two legs, is an exact replica of her four-legged brethren right down (or should it be up?) to her short curled tail.

The story of the little pig was told by J. Oscar Beaudet, of 300 Cote St. Antoine Road, Westmount, who got the animal from his brother's farm at Lotbiniere, Quebec, last September when it was four weeks old. He expects to send it back to the farm shortly for the winter.

Though he just can't figure it out, Mr. Beaudet feels that a recent news item referring to a six-legged pig being born in Oklahoma has some connection with his own two-legged one. "It's all a matter of feet," he explains sagely. He is definitely sure that he wouldn't be willing to trade animals, even though the U.S. piglet promises to furnish a few extra dinners.

WESTERN HOCKEY TO BE PROTECTED SAYS F. SARGENT

Wholesale Movement of Junior Talent to East Greatly Restricted

Toronto, Nov. 27 — (CP)—Frank Sargent of Fort William, president of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, told the 55th annual meeting of the Ontario Hockey Association here Saturday night, that he attended the meeting to discuss the possibility of playing the 1944-45 Allan Cup finals in Vancouver. He said the Western Hockey Association had only started in their "fight" to block the "wholesale movement of young hockey talent from their home districts."

"Manitoba flatly refused to transfer certain players this year," Sargent said, "and they have good reason."

"Other years, wholesale raids were made on Manitoba teams and if hockey is to survive out west, the clubs must be protected against such action.

"I have granted St. Michael's College, Toronto, permission to use Samis, Gray and Arundel this season as they are eligible under the preparatory school clause in our regulations, but warning is hereby given to St. Michael's and others in the east, that the western branches are going to fight tooth and nail to have that certain clause removed from our regulations at the next annual meeting of the C.A.H.A."

Sargent announced the C.A.H.A. has decided to hold the Memorial Cup finals at Toronto Maple Leaf Gardens for the third straight time as games here "present the best means of producing the necessary revenue to keep the C.A.H.A. and hockey alive during the war years."

Two Added to Executive.

"It takes about $35,000 each year to operate the C.A.H.A. and last season we went into the red a little due to the one-sided Memorial Cup final series, when Oshawa won the title in four straight games from Trail, but I believe we'll be able to operate this year, despite the loss of a strong senior series without dipping into our reserve."

The O.H.A. decided to retain its same officers for a third term and F. W. (Dinty) Moore of Port Colborne remains president. Jack Fulton, president of the Northern Ontario Hockey Association, and Clifford McGillivray of Niagara Falls, were added to the executive.

Change Date of Meeting

It was decided to hold future O.H.A. annual meetings on the first Saturday in December.

Transfer of players under the "military replacement" rule will be abandoned this season unless sanction of the player's home club is obtained, it was decided.

Under the rule, clubs losing players through military callup were permitted to replace them with members of other teams in the league.

The convention decided that all player releases should be filed with the league secretary and should bear the signature of the president and secretary before becoming valid.

For the senior "A" and junior "A" circuits, the mileage rate paid visiting clubs will be $2.25 instead of the previous $1.50 per mile.

PROVIDENCE REDS DEFEAT BISONS

By The Canadian Press

Providence Reds, Eastern Division cellar-dwellers, playing on home ice Sunday defeated the first-place Buffalo Bisons in the only scheduled American Hockey League game.

Goalie Paul Leclerc starred for Providence, who held a four-goal lead until the last minute of the second period when Gordon Davidson made Bisons' first score.

Saturday at Hershey, Providence went down 4-3 before the Bears, who moved to within one point of the leaders.

In the Western Division, Pittsburgh Hornets defeated St. Louis Flyers 6-3 at Pittsburgh Saturday, while at Cleveland the Barons trounced Indianapolis Capitals 8-4. Results of these games put Pittsburg out in front of the division, two points ahead of Capitals.

Tommy Burlington starred for Barons in the game at Cleveland, scoring two goals and making the plays for three more. Leo Gasparini counted twice.

Pittsburgh took a 3-1 lead against St. Louis in the first period but the Flyers evened the score in the second, in an attack sparked by the three Smith brothers. Tony Hemmerling and Bob Gracie put the Hornets ahead to stay in the last period.

Valleyfield Braves Defeat Cornwall

Valleyfield, Que., Nov. 27—(CP)—Valleyfield Braves scored five goals without reply in the first two periods yesterday, to ride to a 5-3 victory over Cornwall Flyers in an Interprovincial Hockey League game here.

The Flyers hit their pace only in the third period, when they scored all their goals but failed to cut more substantially into the lead the Braves had piled up in the opening stanzas.

A general melee broke out in the middle frame, when Joanette and Dupuis of Flyers came to blows while Joanette was attempting to kill off a penalty by ragging the puck. Everybody on the ice joined in before referee George LaLonde could restore order.

In all, 11 penalties were handed out in the second period, including majors to Joanette and Dupuis. The first and third periods saw only one penalty each.

London — (CP) — A human skull on a bombed site worried local residents until a doctor reported it was a medical student's specimen.

LACHINE WINS 8-4

Lachine, Nov. 27 —(CP)—Lachine Rapides defeated Shawinigan Falls 8-4 yesterday to move up one point behind the leading Cornwall Flyers in the Interprovincial Senior Hockey League.

Lachine was paced by fast-skating Jack Morrow with three goals and an assist. Other Lachine scorers were Rene Valliere, Gordie Whitehead, Andy Bell, Francois Bouchard and Marcel Chapman. Jean Armand was credited with two assists.

Francois Brodeur, Jacques Trudel, Marcel Lajoie and Roger Bisson each scored once for Shawinigan.

COL. COCKSHUTT DIES

Brantford, Nov. 27 —(CP)— Col. Henry Cockshutt, chairman of the Board of Directors of the Cockshutt Plow Company Ltd. and former Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, died here yesterday aged 78. He had been in failing health since the death of his wife several months ago.

"RIP" COLLINS BATTING CHAMP

New York, Nov. 27 — (AP) — James (Rip) Collins, former St. Louis Cardinal first sacker and veteran manager of the Albany, N.Y., club of the class A Eastern League, was baseball's champion batsman for 1944 with a .396 average.

The former Gas House Gang member enjoyed a 26-point advantage over his nearest competitor in the 10 operating minor leagues, L. H. Addington, Director of Publicity for the National Association, announced.

Second place went to Rene Monteaguado of Chattanooga of the Southern Association, a former pitcher who finished the season with Washington Senators.

There will be no big league comeback for Collins, unless it should be as a manager or coach, as the Albany skipper has a year-round connection in New York State's capital.

SUSPENDED TEAMS ARE RE-ADMITTED

Montreal, Nov. 27 —(CP)— The Quebec Lacrosse Association held its annual meeting here yesterday, and all four teams which broke away from the associaton to form an outlaw league last summer were re-admitted.

Cornwall St. Regis Indians, Lachine, Canadiens and Longueuil had broken away from the Q. L. A. and operated as an inter-provincial loop last summer after the O. L. A. had refused to reinstate St. Regis' playing manager Angus Thomas. Thomas, suspended for striking a referee several years ago, has since been re-instated by the Q. L. A.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop came home early on account of Saturday, and ma said, William, I wonder if you can unscrew the lid of this tin box. A simple turn of the wrist is all it needs theoretically, but I must admit it has my wrist baffled, she said.

Let's have a try at it, I've tamed a good many balky lids in my time, pop said.

And he tried to get the lid off and it stayed right on, ma saying, Well then, never mind.

I'm not given up that easy, for Peet sake, pop said. There's no use trying to use a lot of mussel on a problem like this. There's a certain nack to it. It has to be done by finesse. Just the proper little scientific twist and off she comes like a lamb, he said, and ma said, Only she seems to be staying on like a lion.

Give me time, Rome wasn't built out of tin cans in a day, pop said.

And he kept on trying scientific twists without anything happening, and ma said, Oh for goodness sakes so stop straining at it so scientifically because even if you get the lid off I'll just throw the whole thing away just a same. I just wanted to prove to you that you'd wax enthusiastic over a perfectly useless job, so now maybe you'll put a little heart and sole into something really significant and get to work varnishing the screens so they'll be ready when we need them, she said.

That's entirely different, but I can hardly expect you to appreciate a man's broad abstract viewpoint on mechanical matters, pop said. Oh well, a little gentle exercise will do me good. I don't mind getting started on those screens, he said.

Which he did, working about 20 minutes and claiming that was gentle enough for one day.

In Manhattan

By MICHAEL O'MARA

(CP Staff Writer)

New York, Nov. 27— (CP) — One deliciously enjoyable play, one better-than-average operatta and a pair of feeble failures were the sum of after-dark activity along Broadway this week. The play of the week—perhaps the season—was "The Late George Apley;" the operetta was Fritz Kreisler's "Rhapsody."

The bulk of Mr. Kreisler's tuneful score has been played often in the past. Some of his best-liked compositions have been gathered and refurbished for "Rhapsody."

The show also has a few good voices — notably Annamary Dickey of the Metropolitan Opera — a few good ballet dancers and some splendid sets. But its atrociously dull book — particularly the Puerile attempts at humor — by L. L. Levinson and Arnold Sundgaard, does everything possible to spoil the show.

Mr. Kreisler's music cannot be spoiled; but in this production it is wasted.

"The Late George Apley," a dramatization of John P. Marquand's Pulitzer Prize novel in which George S. Kaufman collaborated with the author, is one of the most entertaining evenings the theatre has offered in many a season. It can hardly fail to run at least a year.

The piece deals with the elite and correct of Boston's Beacon Street and their inability to step out of character, doff their stuffed shirts and behave as do their contemporaries of Worcester, Mass., and points west. Inbreeding, both physical and mental, has established a tribe — if we are to accept Mr. Marquand's conclusion — too vitiated to escape over the horizons propriety and habit have dictated.

The chief appeal of the Marquand-Kaufman play lies in character. Only one full-length portrait is attempted, but it is a masterpiece. Leo G. Carroll plays the title role and ease and sincerity make his study of the stagnating Bostonian a reality, rather than a caricature — and even contrives to make the basically unsympathetic neo-Puritan enormously appealing.

GYPSY BLOOD

By MARGARET NORRIS

CHAPTER 19.

The father waved his hand with a lordly gesture at the dingy, cobwebby room in the tenement apartment he had rented in honor of the mother's arrival.

"Three rooms for only us and the children—how can we use so much space? and such rent—$20! How can we pay it without wages from you to help?"

"But I gave you all the wages I ever earned to bring Mother and the children from Poland. Seventy-five dollars—just fancy."

"It paid only half. Seventy-five more it took from me."

"Yehu!" wailed the mother in despair. "Always fighting as you did at home!"

Anna looked at her mother with eyes which had grown unaccustomed to women of her kind. What painful months and years it would take for this woman, grown old in the grain fields, to focus her eyes to the narrowed vision of caverns of steel and cement to attune her ear to the strange language and adjust her life to new curious customs.

In years Anna's mother was no older than Mrs. Baldwin—several years younger, perhaps, for her passport read age 37, yet already she was weary and stooped with heavy bent figure and coarsened hands, grown old while still in her prime. Anna herself might have looked this way had she stayed 20 years longer in Poland. Could it be that her mother, too, once had felt the call of gypsy blood, until its surge was stultified by child bearing and drudgery?

It was not so much love as pity that made Anna resolve to be kind to this woman who, after all, still was her mother.

"It's this way," Anna said with new tolerance. "If you don't insist that I stay with you now, later I can earn much more money to give you."

"But how? You had a job in a store from which you saved $75. Get another and pay us your board."

Anna pouted. "I'm tired of stores and factories and jobs where I earn no more than $12 or $14."

"See," said her father with an eloquent shrug and a raising of hands toward high Heaven. "I told you she was high hat, our daughter."

"But I want to go to school!"

"To school! My God! (he said it in Polish). A great strapping girl like you! Already you speak English, you can read and count money; what more can you want? Besides, it costs money to go to school."

"An American lady will pay my way."

"Why? Tell me that," Anna's father glowered.

"Because I saved her life. I worked this summer on her farm and when her house caught fire I woke them all and rescued her daughter. But for me they all would have been killed." Anna launched into a dramatic recital of the fire in the House by the Sea, with emphasis on her own role as heroine.

"That is why they want to send me to school. They are grateful and when I get educated, I can earn more money to give to you."

"She will be a fine lady, our Anna," said her mother, beaming with pride.

"But, she will be ashamed of her parents," said the father. "I don't want a fine lady for a daughter. I want her to work and earn money and marry a man of her kind."

Anna could see it was useless to explain; better far just to go. This sordid tenement home was making her depressed. She contrasted it with the Baldwin mansion where she was living until time for school. What if they knew it was the son of this mansion with whom she had fallen in love?

"Goodbye," she said, longing to be off.

"You will come to see your mother very often?"

"I will come to see you at Christmas. My school is not in New York; it is what they call college—one must take a train."

"Yehu!" wailed the mother, bursting into tears. "It is as though you were no longer our daughter!"

Anna slipped away as quickly as possible. Why try to make her mother understand?

"Parting is such sweet sorrow," quoted Anna with mock eloquence.

"I'm glad you can joke about it," said Harry with a very long face. "You seem to be very happy about going away for a year."

"I'll be back for Christmas," said Anna.

"Christmas is three months away."

"Three months—and I'll give you just a week, Harry dear, to forget me altogether—or at least to have the memory grow pleasantly dim."

Harry Baldwin shook his head and took hold of her hand. Anna squeezed back in return. She didn't tell him her gay mocking manner was only a screen to hide the rush of loneliness she was feeling. Feminine intuition told her some things are better unsaid, specially when one is none too sure of one's place in a gentleman's heart.

"Anyway, you'll write to me, won't you?" he said.

"I'll answer your letters—if there are any."

"You're a flirt and you're getting worse every day."

"That proves I'm becoming Americanized. I've always longed to be a flirt. They have so much more fun than other girls."

"Well, then, you're achieving your ideal. That Jim episode, for instance."

"Don't talk about Jim. Is he here at the train to wish me goodbye and God speed?"

"That's because I told him I'd murder him if he dared to show up." Harry gazed round for a trace of his rival in the Grand Central station where they were waiting for Anna's train.

"Don't let's spoil this last 15 minutes before I board the train that is to carry me off to the school that's to make me a lady. What changes do you advise, in general, for the necessary improvement?"

"I don't want you to change a single bit."

"Nonsense! You know very well that your mother is sending me there to put a veneer of polish on the poor little immigrant girl whom she has chosen as her protege to mend my table manners, learn how to behave at a tea, how to wear my clothes and mend my gypsy ways. Of course it's very kind of her."

"As for clothes, you don't need any training," said the young man with an approving glance.

Anna glanced in the mirror of the weighing machine at the reflection it cast back. It showed a trim little tailor made figure topped by a gay red hat and finished below with smart shoes and hose into a harmonious ensemble. It gave her courage to be gay and heartless with this fastidious young man at her side. She threw back her head and laughed heartlessly.

"I'm glad it's so funny," he said.

"Well it is—that Anna from Poland should look almost like Anna from Paris. You'd understand the humor if you knew that these are the first clothes I've ever had in my life that were bought for me brand new not just cast-offs. And to think that a trunk full of others like those in the baggage coach ahead. No wonder I'm excited and gay."

"I don't mind your being gay if only you'd feel a wee bit sad about telling me goodbye."

"But it's only au-revoir" Anna said, "until I become cultured and finished."

"I've told you I like you just as you are."

"Even that is such a change from what I was before I came to America that I've entirely outgrown my parents. They don't understand me; I don't understand them."

"What matter if you make your home with us?"

"That doesn't solve my problem. I'm not at home in their world to which I was born, nor in the world to which your mother has kindly brought me for the moment. I have no place in this latter world. I must get out and earn my living again. It will make it only the harder to grow accustomed to luxuries I can't have again."

"You talk like an old woman, you funy little girl, whereas you are only a kid."

"I'm years and years older than you are."

"You're not, you're only 17 and I am 22 and starting into business." He said with infinite pride.

"I'm years and years older, just the same. I belong to the older world where we learn and mature much faster and life has taught me hard. But don't think for a moment I'm not grateful. It's pleasant to be a lady while it lasts."

They were calling her train. Harry ushered Anna through the gates. "There's one thing you must do before you go."

"What's that?" she asked.

"Kiss me goodbye."

"That's easy," said Anna and she did it. But in the process she almost missed her train.

"Goodbye," she waved.

"No au revoir," Harry shouted after her.

Anna sat in the office of the Fifth Avenue firm engaged in the pleasurable pastime of counting up her personal debts. It was by no means a cheerful process.

"Forty dollars for rent due next week. That's far too much I know but I can't live in a place I'm ashamed of and look the world in the face and have people come to see me and keep my self-respect. Thirty-five dollars for dark blue silk dress. Another extravagance, but one can't look shabby at business if one hopes to get ahead.

"That's two weeks salary gone glimmering, not to count hat and shoes and gloves, carfare and money to eat on—and not a cent to put in the bank! It's as bad as it was in the olden days when I lived at the Elizabeth club, worked in the factory for $14 a week and laid by a dollar each pay day. Now I earn $150 a month and can't salvage $5 from it. Oh, why can't I marry a millionaire? Or keep on going to school? Or have a grand office of my own with my name on the plate glass door?

Anna pictured the elegance of it —"Anna Moss, Exteriors," the high hat method of saying that one knew how to lay out gardens and plant trees and make lawns beautiful—a landscape artichect. Then have the contracts roll in and grow wealthy and have a country estate of her own and then—to marry a millionaire.

It all reverted to that. Not any millionaire in general, one very much in particular.

"And if I could have him I would not care if he didn't have a cent."

Just then the telephone rang on her desk.

"Hello!—Oh, Jim? How are you? (Bother Jim; he was always calling her up. He'd grown to be a nuisance. He was all right as a pastime, but he wasn't content to be just that) To night? Let's see—I'm sorry, I'm afraid I'll have to work. Dancing you say? That would be fine, but we must make it some other night. We're awfully busy at the office.—No I can't set another date now.—No I'm not trying to be mean. Sorry, I'm too busy to chat."

Oh dear, she sighed. Why aren't all men alike? Or why am I so contrary to scorn the one who wants me and grieve for the one who doesn't?

Strange, Anna mused, that after all these years there should be no one but Harry—no one who counted, at least. And it wasn't strange at all for who in the world could be so nice? And so unattainable? Living on the other side of the water in London for his firm. America suddenly lost its lure when Anna heard Harry had been sent there.

She remembered the day she received the news in a letter that first year of school. A sunny day had grown suddenly gray and it was a week before she could smile. What was happening to him over there? Had he changed and outgrown her just when she felt she was making strides in growing equal to him?

Three years ago when she was 17 and he was 22, they had been sweethearts, in a sense—very good friends at least and there had been visions of romance that might blossom in the years to come. His letters were ardent for a while but they had grown more and more infrequent. And now a full year had intervened without a word of him. Anna was 20, though it was hard to believe, and Harry, by the same count must be 25. Had he changed and how? Anna often wondered, but it made her heart ache.

NOW FIELD MARSHAL

Sir Harold Alexander

London, Nov. 27 —(CP)— Gen. Sir Harold Alexander has been made a field marshal and appointed to succeed Gen. Sir Henry Maitland Wilson as supreme commander of the Mediterranean theatre, it was announced yesterday.

Gen. Wilson was appointed to succeed the late Field Marshal Sir John Dill as Chief of the British Joint Staff Mission in Washington.

The announcement added that Lt.-Gen. Mark Clark of the U.S. Army has been made Commander-in-Chief of the Allied 15th Army Group in Italy.

"The dates of the actual transfers of command will be regulated in accordance with operational and other requirements," said the announcement from Prime Minister Churchill's office.

The appointments, the announcement said, "are the result of agreement between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States."

Alexander's promotion to field marshal was made effective from June 4, 1944, date of the capture of Rome.

Thus he was made senior to Field Marshal Sir Bernard L. Montgomery, Britain's West Front chief who Aug. 31 was appointed field marshal supernumerary as of Sept. 1.

Sir Harold Alexander, who will be 53 Dec. 10, becomes Britain's youngest field marshal.

Eight British generals have promoted to field marshal since this war began, but only Sir Harold and Sir Bernard Montgomery received the baton while leading armies in the field. Sir Bernard, 56 when promoted, previously was the youngest.

Jap Resistance Shows Decrease In Ormoc Corridor

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Nov. 27—(AP)—Infantrymen of the U. S. 32nd Division continued their southward push on Leyte Island today, as a communique noted that Japanese resistance is "steadily decreasing" in the vital Ormoc corridor.

Alert American pilots sank three small troop-laden freighter-transports off Cebu Saturday night in smashing another Japanese attempt to reinforce their hammered Leyte forces.

The 32nd threw back a light counter-attack and continued to press southward from Limon, captured northern anchor of the Yamashita line. The communique did not mention the extent of the gain.

In the Japanese attempt to get much-needed reinforcements ashore, at least 17,000 enemy troops have been lost at sea and 19 convoy vessels and 14 escorting warships sent to the bottom.

Although steady American pressure in the Ormoc corridor has caused decreased Japanese resistance, Associated Press war correspondent Fred Hampson reported from the field that 32nd Division officers were expecting the Japanese to make another stand in the hills three miles south of Limon.

Bombers hit the Tacloban area under a bright moon causing some damage and casualties. Anti-aircraft fire brought down four planes.

WALL ST.

New York, Nov. 27 —(AP)—Stocks looked fairly well in spots today although many market leaders seemed unable to find the bidding spotlight. Industrial transition doubts in the wake of the good war news again provided arguments for investment conservatism. The direction was foggy near the fourth hour.

In front the greater part of the proceedings were Chicago & North Western, at a peak for 1944; General Motors, U. S. Rubber, Woolworth, Westinghouse, Standard Oil (NJ), Glenn Martin, North American and International Harvester. Canadian issues were firm, gains of ⅛ posted for Canadian Pacific, Dome and Lake Shore. Distillers Seagram was off ⅛.

Byrnes Favored To Replace Hull Who Has Resigned

By JACK BELL
(AP Staff Writer)

Washington, Nov. 27 —(AP)— President Roosevelt announced today the resignation of State Secretary Cordell Hull.

It will become effective, the President said, upon the appointment of a successor.

On the question of a successor, Mr. Roosevelt had nothing to say.

The President told an informal news conference that it was with great and deep regret that he was announcing that Mr. Hull was quitting the Cabinet.

He said the 73-year-old Tennessean would remain in close touch with him, acting as an adviser on foreign policy.

Mr. Hull's health is the reason for his giving up his cabinet post in these important times and lifting his hand from machinery now being assembled to perpetuate peace.

Establishment of machinery to insure the world against aggression has taken the major part of the Secretary's time and energy during the past year, and he had often expressed his determination to see through the struggle for enduring peace.

Mr. Hull was also actively immersed in plans to prevent Germany from threatening the world again and to re-establish Western Hemisphere solidarity broken by Argentina's refusal to join in defence measures agains the Axis

Mr. Byrnes, 65-year-old chief of war mobilization, appeared to be the congressional favorite for the secretaryship. Chairman Walter F. George (Dem., Ga.) of the Senate Finance Committee, remarked, for example, that Mr. Byrnes could "do more to hold the situation in shape than anybody else."

Mr. Byrnes' supporters stressed the close relations he maintains with the Senate. They pointed out that the prime job in the State Department during the next few years will be to complete a charter for peace organization and get Congress to back it up.

SEAL "ITS THE ROAD

Eastriggs, Dumfriesshire (CP) — Railway officials at Eastriggs had the shock of their lives when they saw a young seal crawling along the line. It refused to leave the track so a rope was tied around its neck and the seal was dragged back to the Solway Firth.

SUPERFORTS HIT TOKYO FOR SECOND TIME IN 4 DAYS

B-29's Sent From Saipan While Others Hit Thailand From Indian Bases

Washington, Nov. 27 — (AP) — B29 Superfortresses went on the warpath again today, hitting Tokyo for the second time in four days, and striking at Japanese installations in Thailand (Siam).

The big bombers struck the enemy capital from Saipan in one blow and then in another came across simultaneously from India bases to hit Thailand.

The War Department in telling of a mission from Saipan in the Marianas islands under leadership of Brig.-Gen. Haywood S. Hansell, hitting Tokyo from the same spot the B29s used Friday, said:

"Gen. Hansell's 21st Bomber Command returned to Tokyo again today Nov. 27 for another daylight bombing attack upon strategic industrial targets. Further details will be released as soon as the information becomes available..."

Then, about an hour later, it told of this attack under Maj.-Gen Curtis Lemay, from bases in India.

A Daylight Raid

"A substantial force of B-29 aircraft from Gen. Lemay's 20th Bomber Command today (Nov. 27, Tokyo Time) conducted a daylight bombing mission against strategic targets in the Bangkok area of Japanese-occupied Thailand..."

B29s can carry as much as 10 tons explosives. In the original announcement, there was no estimate of the number of Superfortresses returning to Tokyo today. Last Friday's contingent was described as a "large task force."

Two of the bombers were lost in the Friday raid. Yesterday came word from Saipan that the entire crew of one of these two B29s had been rescued from two rafts by an American destroyer.

The Japanese, as is their habit, reported that today's visit by the B29s resulted only in "slight damage to non-military facilities."

Canadians Suffer 9,008 Casualties In September

Ottawa, Nov. 27 ((CP)—Canada's armed forces suffered 9,008 casualties in September compared to the August total of $10,257, according to figures released today by Wartime Information Board's publication "Canada at War."

Casualties since war started to Sept. 30 totaled 70,007 an increase of 8,712 over the Aug. 31 figure of 61,295. Thus there was a discrepancy of 296 when the difference between the two monthly war totals was compared with the casualty increase.

This dicrepancy resulted, it was explained, by a reclassification of men-formerly listed in the missing, prisoner and interned column. There was no breakdown to show how these men were reclassified, but presumably they were safe.

Figures for the army-which had about 15 times more casualties than the other services combined—were released Nov. 6, but were repeated in the W.I.B. breakdown to give the three-service picture. The army suffered 8,445 casualties in September for the second highest monthly total of the war and covering stiff engagements in northwest Europe. Casualties in August were 9,338, highest monthly total.

In the 4 1-2 years of the First Great War 628,462 Canadians served and casualties totalled 190,092, including 62,817 dead.

After five years of war the present strength of the armed forces is given as more than 757,000. The casualty total up to Sept, 30 of 70,007 does not take into account merchant navy casualties which were 1,200 up to Feb. 22.

The W.I.B. publication gives a recapitulation of the strength of the armed forces showing the navy has remained at 90,000 since the last figures were given in October, the army shows a decrease from 470,000 to 465,000 and the air force a decrease from 204,000 to 202,000.

"Whadda Ya Mean I Don't Eat Bananas?"

By A. E. SYKES
(In The Ottawa Journal)

New York, Nov. — He had Upper 1, next to the men's smoker on the D. and H. south-bound from Montreal to New York.

His dress was somewhat unconventional for a sleeping-car in mid-November—no hat, no overcoat, a worn soft leather windbreaker and soiled unpressed grey pants. Peeping out at the neck of the leather garment was a plaid shirt more gorgeous than ever woven on Scottish loom. His sole baggage was a well-scuffed canvas zipper-bag.

As the train pulled out from Windsor Station, he grunted with satisfaction, "That's one town I'm glad to get out of."

Two Montrealers and one passenger from Ottawa looked sorrowful. We had the idea that Montreal was one of the better places in Canada. Seeing our chagrin, he hastened to make amends.

"Don't get me wrong — I got nothin' against the town. It's just that I run into a snag here every now and then. You see, I ride the banana trains—six days out of Miami this time.

"Ya never heard of a banana train attendant? Well, that's me. You just can't let bananas travel alone.

"Looks here," he continued, diving into his canvas bag to bring up a double-handful of tickets with the imprint of every known railroad on the continent on them, "when I travel, I travel, no kiddin'. Name me a railroad in the U.S.A. I ain't been on or that I ain't got tickets for," he challenged.

We tried and failed. He had them all. Not only this but he could write his own ticket and have it honored wherever the 80 and 90-car banana trains travel.

• •

Just to show that banana men don't live by rail tickets alone, he produced a merchant seaman's pass ("they're good — they don't expire"), cards for clubs from South America to Winnipeg, passes admitting the bearer to almost every place except the White House, gasoline coupons, and a blood donor's certificate.

"I never heard of a job like yours," I ventured. "How did you come to get into the banana train business?"

"Aw, you just happen to hook up with a banana job. I been just about everything — boxer, steeplejack, cowboy, sailor, construction worker. I lived in the banana countries for some time, too. Then this job came along and I took it. Pays good but boy, you earn your money when the weather changes fast."

Customs and immigration men interrupted his discourse. Going back to the sleeper, he took a flying leap, grasped the top bar of the upper berth with both hands, swung around sitting cross-legged with the ease of a monkey.

"Canadian or American?" asked the uniformed officer.

"United States, boy," he announced, flourishing his mass of credentials. "Take a look at these, but don't touch none," he threatened with a leer.

• •

Back in the smoker again, he told the saga of bananas. How and where they grow, how they are harvested and when, how they can be prepared and eaten whether green or ripe, where the best and sweetest come from, and how they travel thousands of miles from the Caribbean to the grocery store at Harrison's Corners, rolled from his lips like an oft-repeated lesson. Colombia, Cuba, Haiti, San Domingo, Mexico, then Mobile, Charleston, Miami, New Orleans—all these were just the lower part of a banana man's back yard. He loves and lives bananas that man.

"Do you know," shaking his finger violently, "that bananas are the only fruit that never gets ripe on the tree—that you couldn't eat one if it did get ripe on the stalk? Citrus fruit is one thing—you gotta take some care of it but not much. Potatoes, too, you can't let them freeze. But bananas now, they're in a class by themselves.

"You gotta keep on your toes to be a banana trouble-shooter. You gotta have ice in your cars in the hot weather and heaters when it's cold. Bananas are more perishable than anything they is.

"Do I have trouble with the railroads? Sure, but not as much as you'd think. We pay big money to ship our bananas. We expect service, and we get it. I don't go to no division superintendents if they don't move my bananas out of their yards. I go right to the top and those fellas know what it's all about. Most of the time they never even give me an argument.

"Huh! spoilage? Not very much. I got a kick against your Canadian roads though. Some places they seem to quit work at five on Saturdays and won't make a move until Monday morning even with bananas ripening and rotting in the cars. I figure it this way. You have only two railroads of any size in your country and there's no competition. Now when you take 47 or 48 railroads like they is in the U.S.A., there's plenty of competition and they know they're gotta be on the jump. They are too— most of them, night and day, seven days a week.

"I don't handle no ice nor heaters myself on the trains unless things go screwy like the other night when they was a 30-degree change in weather in four hours. But when the going is tough I'll be right in there pitching, even if I have to stop the train—and I can do that too. It's what I'm paid for, see? You don't hold no job like this if you let the bananas go rotten on you."

"In your job," I broke in, "I suppose you never eat bananas, just like candy-makers don't eat candy or fruit-pickers don't eat fruit?"

"Whadda ya mean I don't eat bananas?" he howled. "I eat them all the time. I don't like freight-car caboose cookin' and sandwiches get stale. Bananas is the best food they is. Even when they're green, you can't beat them French-fried in deep fat. Look!" pounding his heavily-muscled forearms and barrel chest, "nothin' wrong with that, is they? Do I eat bananas? O, Brother!"

Grandma Knew Her Onions

(By Peter Finley, condensed, from New York Mirror.)

Grandma was no scientist, and her brew's were weird and evil-tasting. But modern doctors are swallowing their pride and admitting that figuratively, if not scientifically, the old lady knew her onions.

In fact the lowly onion was one of her star ingredients.

For croup she whipped up a mixture of sliced onions and sugar, to be taken in teaspoonful doses every 15 minutes until relief is obtained. For boils and sores a poultice application was prepared by mashing boiled onions, adding lard or sweet oil to prevent hardness. And if you had a touch of deafness, granny found that five or ten drops of onion juice in the affected ear worked wonders.

She had a whole cabinet of "kitchen pharmaceuticals." For neuralgia, she applied horse-radish with a camel hair brush. Grated horseradish and honey was a remedy, for hoarseness. Garlic juice applied to the chest relieved bronchitis; garlic eaten releived high blood pressure. To aid shortness of breath, a mild tea was made from Lily of the Valley. And eczema supposedly yielded to a sulphur and lard paste. (Grandmother never heard the word sulfanilimide.)

* * *

Rheumatism (and granny knew plenty about that) was said to bow to celery tea taken three or four times daily. Erysipelas was treated by boiling white navy beans, mashing them and adding cornmeal to make a poultice which was applied hot and changed frequently. And for a sore throat, you couldn't convince grandma of a better remedy than that of tying around the throat a slice of fat bacon on which had been sprinkled black pepper.

Most of us just smiled at such ludicrous old-fashioned ideas. But now there appears plenty of justification for some of her ideas. Take her treatment of burns, for example. Here again she used onions, crushed and applied to the affected area. This closely follows what the Russians have been using with great success at the front and in city hospitals.

In fact, for years Russia's All-Union Institute of Experimental Medicine, under Dr. B. Tokin, has carried on research with the onion, which vegetable is mentioned in the early books of the Bible. Dr. Tokin and his associates found that the essential oils of onion, garlic and other strong-scented vegetables contain substances that readily destroy germs and hasten the healing of wounds.

As yet unidentified chemically, these oils have been called phytoncides, and so volatile are they that a paste made from such vegetables and exposed to the air for 10 minutes loses its bacterial potency.

The onion paste is not applied directly to the wound; it is placed close to the wound and the vapor does the rest. Treatments last for 10 minutes, after which new paste must be used. In most of the cases, including several amputations, remarkable results were achieved.

The pulp of the onion, it was found, contains more phytoncides than the green, or stalk, and the roots yield the highest amount. Autumn and winter onions and garlic destroy germs quicker than spring and summer crops of these vegetables, and the longer they are kept in preservation the more they decrease in anti-bacterial power.

Russian experimenters found further support for grandma's onion juice cold cure. By chewing fresh onion or garlic for three to eight minutes they learned that the membrane of the cheeks and mouth became completely sterile.

Other research knowledge recently reported by four University of Minnesota bacteriologists also supports the practice of employing herbs and plants medicinally. Many plants and trees may contain miraculous substances like penicillin and the newer, equally powerful vicillin, all of which have been missed because nobody explored these sources.

It is worth noting at this point, that a counterpart of penicillin had been used by an American doctor in the early 80's. At that time he employed, and wrote about "mouldy bread for the cure of infected wounds."

* * *

How far back the use of herbs and plants dates is problematical. However, the first Papyrus of Pharmacy, written in 1552 B.C. and now known as the Ebers Paprus, records a long list of garden and forest growths and by-products, including myrrh, frankincense, wormwood, aloes, opium, peppermint, anise, saffron, lotus flowers, juniper berries, poppy, cedar, elderberry, grape vine and—again—the onion.

Here, too, grandma was not found wanting for herb and plant remedies. For dysentry she used the old Indian method of boiling roots and leaves of the blackberry bush, to be taken a gill before each meal and upon going to bed; for ringworm, a strong solution of tobacco leaves applied until healed; for headache relief, a cloth, saturated in a cup of water to which has been added a teaspoonful of essence of peppermint and applied to the head and temples. And to cure dropsy, it was merely necessary to obtain the inner bark of the grapevine, burn it to ashes and take a teaspoonful three times daily in a glass of wine. As for the common cold, grandma's hot mustard baths to induce perspiration have only given way to modern electricity. The idea is the same.

Thus, the little old lady, mainly remembered for her ever-ready offering of sulphur and molasses, may have had something more scientific than we or even she suspected in her musty old bag of home-grown old-fashioned remedies.

Maybe they were not so ridiculous as we thought.

MOMENTOUS VOTE IN PARLIAMENT IMPENDING CANADIANS AGAIN IN ACTION AT THE FRONT Canada Faces Possibility Of 'Anarchy' Unless House Can Unite Behind Govt.

—King

Prime Minister in Lengthy Speech Passes Issue to House

By FRANK FLAHERTY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Nov. 28. (CP)—Just a few more speeches today will set the stage for one of the most momentous votes the House of Commons has taken in years.

The issue, defined yesterday in speeches by Prime Minister MacKenzie King and three opposition party leaders and in motions proposed by three of the four, is whether the government's plan to send 16,000 Home Defence troops overseas is to be approved or whether all 68,000 Home Defence troops are to be made immediately liable for service overseas.

Party leaders have spoken. It now remains for Col. J. L. Ralston, former Defence Minister who left the Cabinet on the issue, and for a spokesman for the anti-conscriptionist Liberals, if one arises, to address the House before the principal points of view will be on a record and an appraisal of the results of the vote can be made.

Before further speeches, however, and over the protest on the Progressive Conservative members, a short secret session will be held at which Defence Minister McNaughton will give information on the overseas army reinforcement position which he declined to give in public.

Important Speech.

In one of the more important speeches of his long political career yesterday Mr. King passed the issue to the House as a whole and made it clear that if he did not receive a substantial vote of confidence in the present government policy he would resign. He went on to predict that a resignation would almost inevitably lead to a general election, but only after a new government was installed which would see to the enforcement of conscription.

The Prime Minister said Canada faces the possibility of "anarchy" unless the House can unite behind a government that can carry on.

Mr. King moved "that this House will aid the government in its policy of maintaining a vigorous war effort".

Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, moved to substitute the following:

"This House is of the opinion that the government has not made certain of adequate and continuous trained reinforcements by requiring all N.R.M.A. personnel, whether now or hereafter enrolled, to serve in any theatre of war and has failed to assure equality of service and sacrifice".

Coldwell's Amendment.

M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. Leader, moved an amendment which would strike out Mr. Graydon's wording and, if adopted, make the House's expression of view read:

"This House will aid the government in its policy of maintaining a vigorous war effort which, in the opinion of this House, requires the immediate removal of all distinction between drafted men and volunteer personnel thus making the entire home defence army available for reinforcements overseas and requires further the total mobilization of all the resources of Canada, material and financial as well as human, to ensure a total war effort, adequate re-establishment of the members of our fighting forces and full employment after the war."

John Blackmore, Social Credit Leader, offered no amendment and said his group had not yet decided how they would vote. They were suspicious that there was politics in the controversy and proposed to find out what was behind it.

FRIDAY'S ATTACK BAGGED 48 SHIPS AND 87 AIRPLANES

151 Ships Destroyed in Manila Area During Past Month

Pearl Harbor, Nov. 28 —(AP)— The toll of Japanese ships sunk or damaged this month in relentless American carrier-plane raids on the Manila area stood at 151 today with upward revisions of figures on Friday's attack which bagged 48 ships and 87 airplanes.

Admiral Nimitz in a communique added two ships sunk and 23 damaged to the earlier score.

The fight for Leyte Island slithered to a virtual standstill in the Ormoc corridor's mud as terrific rains fell, but U. S. planes based on the island dropped 235 tons of bombs on Japanese air installations on Bebu and Negros, and at Davao Friday, Gen. MacArthur's communique reported.

In the Friday blows on the Manila area, fighters and anti-aircraft batteries on American surface ships downed 58 Japanese planes, in addition to 29 more destroyed and 22 probably damaged on the ground.

Admiral Nimitz' communique listed the following vessel sunk in the attacks:

A heavy cruiser at Santa Cruz, on the West Coast of Luzon; one destroyer at Santa Cruz; two old destroyers at Marinduque Island, about 100 miles southeast of Manila; one destroyer escort; three medium landing ships 10 miles west of Santa Cruz; one cargo vessel north of aSn Fernando, a port 150 miles north of Manila; one small freighter off Subis Bay, 50 miles north of Manila; four oilers near Lubang Island, about 75 miles southeast of Manila; four small coastal freighters at Banton Island, 137 miles south of Manila; two luggers west of Bataan.

Prime Minister Quotes Speech By Sir W. Laurier

Ottawa, Nov. 28. (CP) — Prime Minister Mackenzie King yesterday concluded his address to parliament with a quote from a speech the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier made 44 years ago while serving as Canadian Prime Minister at the head of a Liberal government.

Mr. King quoted Sir Wilfrid as saying:

"If there is anything to which I have devoted my political life, it is to try to promote unity, harmony and amity between the diverse elements of this country. My friends can desert me, they can remove their confidence from me, they can withdraw the trust they have placed in my hands, but never shall I deviate from that line of policy. Whatever may be the consequences, whether loss of prestige, loss of popularity, or loss of power, I feel that I am in the right, and I know that a time will come when every man will render me full justice on that score."

Mr. King said he wished to repeat "those words as my own, having in mind at this moment all that Sir Wilfrid Laurier meant to me as a leader, all that he meant to me as a friend, all that he meant to me as a great Canadian and a great statesman".

"I wish to use those words to this House of Commons today and I want them to be words that will be remembered by my fellow citizens when I am gone".

Graydon Declares House Has Lost Confidence in King

Ottawa, Nov. 28 — (CP)—Gordon Graydon, Progressive Conservative House Leader, proposed an amendment to the government's motion of confidence in the House of Commons last night.

It declared the government has failed to obtain reinforcements by making all N.R.M.A. personnel available for overseas service and failed to secure equality of service and sacrifice.

The motion would strike out the words proposed for adoption earlier by Prime Minister Mackenzie King that the House support the government in "maintaining a vigorous war effort."

Mr. Graydon spoke only about 40 minutes in reply to Mr. King's 3-hour speech. He said the House had lost confidence in the Prime Minister.

Opening his speech, Mr. Graydon said it was probably the "most important debate any of us will ever participate in."

He hoped every member would speak and behave as if every word and action in parliament could be seen by the men overseas.

"This crisis was a reinforcement crisis," he said. "It could have been solved by the government itself had it had the courage to do so without creating the distress it has created."

When the session ended he hoped members could say they dealt with the situation on a national basis and without regard to party interests. The question of national unity had to be considered.

"I would like all to know that we have no hatred in our hearts for any single part of Canada," he said. "Let us seek that any divisions and fissures in our national life are not made deeper by any act of ours."

"Our enemies in this war don't happen to be Canadians," he said. "Our enemies are the cruel, aggressor nations of Germany and Japan and let us keep that in mind in this debate."

Want Question Cleaned Up.

The public wanted the present question cleared up once and for all with "no more cabinet trouble" and no delay in getting reinforcements.

Mr. King had indicated he contemplated another crisis like the present.

The job was sot completed when only 16,000 men were made available for overseas. There would have to be other orders-in-council to provide required reinforcements.

"It seems to me we are running ourselves again into a headwind with more cabinet crise in the future," said Mr. Graydon.

If there were further disputes on additional numbers of men to be sent overseas, parliament would be fortunate if it were not assembled again after returning home.

The order-in-council was like an unwanted child in the hands of a reluctant parent.

Mr. Graydon and Mr. King had given the impression not of talking to parliament but to a caucus of government supporters. Mr. King's position was not bold and vigorous like that of a man who believed in the order-in-council.

The government had gone far enough to alienate parts of Canada opposed to conscription but not far enough to satisfy those which wanted all out action. The government was not yet conducting an all-out war effort.

Mr. King had suggested the possibility of anarchy.

Should Be Expunged.

This statement should be expunged from the record as dangerous, said Mr. Graydon.

aVrious interpretations might be put on the word "anarchy." A previous liberal slogan had been "IKng or Chaos."

"We got both," said Mr. Graydon. He said the future slogan might be "King or Anarchy."

The opposition House Leader said the order-in-council now was law, and a vote on it was a vote on those who approved it.

British Casualties Total 733,030 to Sept. 3, One-Third U.K. Houses Destroyed or Damaged, Allied Ship Loss 22,161,000 Tons Thru '43

Washington, Nov. 28 —(CP)— Five years of war have cost England 733,030 casualties, 136,116 among civilians. One out of every three houses in Britain has been destroyed or damaged.

These figures are among many in a statistical White Paper released simultaneously in Washington and London today.

By the end of last year Great Britain had lost 11,500,000 gross tons of shipping, two-thirds of the tonnage she had when war broke out in 1939.

Civilian casualties through last Sept. 3 included 57,298 killed. Casualties among the armed forces totalled 563,112 with 176,081 killed. In addition 29,629 merchant seamen have been killed and 4,173 interned.

More Than Third Men Under Arms.

The White Paper reported that more than a third of all British men between 14 and 64 are in the armed forces and that nearly all the country's women between 14 and 59 are in uniform or in industry.

A 64-page document, the White Paper said Britain has produced 70 per cent of all munitions turned out by or supplied to the British Commonwealth; 722 major warships, over 100,000 airplanes, over 25,000 tanks and nearly 4,000,000 machine guns and sub-machine guns.

Lauding material aid from Canada and the United States, the White Paper said it permitted men and women to be taken from export production and put in uniform or war plants because cash no longer was required to pay for purchases from those countries.

Reviewing the financial cost of the war, the White Paper said governmental expenditures have jumped from $4,000,000,000 in 1938 to $23,000,000,000 in 1943.

It pointed to sharply increased tax rates and heavy borrowing, adding that "although the government has in this way been able to raise the money needed for the prosecution of the war . . . the consequences on the economic structure of the country have been far-reaching."

Assets Sold Abroad.

In addition to war damage at home, the White Paper said, the government has sold assets abroad amounting to $4,280,000,000 and has added $9,200,000,000 in foreign debts.

Commercial exports from the United Kingdom, it said, have been halved in value. They dropped from $1,884,000,000 in 1938 to $928,000,000 last year.

"When allowance is made for the rise in prices," it added, "the quantity of exports was reduced to only 29 per cent over the 1938 level."

Pointing to the effect of the war on the civilian economy, the document said the total quantity of goods and services purchased by civilians has fallen 21 per cent, without taking into consideration quality deterioration.

Washington, Nov. 28 — (CP) — Shipping losses of the Allies and neutrals from the beginning of the Second Great War through 1943 totalled 5,758 vessels aggregating 22,161,000 gross tons, it was officially announced today. Of these 2,921 —more than half—were British vessels, aggregating 11,643,000 gross tons.

The British government released through the office of War Information a year-by-year breakdown of losses by Britain, her Allies and neutrals, presumably in the service of the United Nations. Simultaneously, the War Shipping Administration announced United States losses totalled 753 vessels aggregating 3,311,000 gross tons.

In the period covered by the announcement, the United States constructed about 30,000,000 deadweight tons of merchant ships, roughly offsetting the losses.

The report covered losses to enemy action, as well as marine casualties resulting from perils of the sea.

1944 Figures Not Given.

No figures were given ho losses for 1944, but the rate of construction to losses is known to be extremely favorable.

Losses were severe in 1942, followed by vast improvement in 1943.

In 1942, 1,859 vessels aggregating 8,338,000 tons were lost. Losses dropped to 812 ships aggregating 3,646,000 tons in 1943.

The combined losses of Britain, the Allies and Neutals in 1942 far outstripped United States construction, and may have exceeded all construction available to the Allies.

Against total losses of 8,338,000 gross tons in 1942, American shipyards turned out 8,089,732 deadweight tons. Translated into gross tons, this construction amounted to something less than 6,500,000 tons.

By 1943 the picture was changed entirely. Against losses of 3,646,000 gross tons, the United States produced 19,238,626 deadweight tons, or about 13,000,000 gross tons, for a net gain exceeding 9,000,000 gross tons.

This favorabel ratio presumably is continuing into 1944.

Mr. Churchill On Post-War Trade

London, Nov. 28. (CP)—Prime Minister Churchill was asked in Commons today if he were aware that the United States Government was making post-war trade a part of its war strategy and if there were any reasons Britain should not do the same.

"Every preparation that can be made is being either made or foreseen", replied Mr. Churchill, "but the resources are not large that are left over from the war. Expansion of our export trade is possible only to the very limited extent war production allows.

Sudbury Flier Upsets Robomb

With the 2nd Tactical Air Force, Nov. 28 — (CP-Reuter)—Flt. Lt. J. E. Cryderman, former prosecutor of Sudbury, Ont., yesterday destroyed a flying bomb over the battlefront by getting it into the slip stream of his Typhoon fighter bomber.

The V-1 turned over on its back out of control and crashed. Only 2 weeks ago, Cryderman shot down another V-1 when he was out on a bombing mission.

Cryderman refused to take any credit for yesterday's feat and said the flying bomb "committed suicide."

"I was busy getting into formation and was concentrating on catching up with the leading aircraft when a flying bomb came head on towards the formation," he said. "It passed me as I was doing a diving turn and when about fifty yards behind me, it got into the slip stream — and there is only one end for anything that gets into the slip stream of a Typhoon at the rate I was travelling. Human pilots are better than robots and even the greenest airman would have known better than that."

NAZIS REPORT REDS HAVE TAKEN MOHACS

London, Nov. 28 (CP)—The German radio reported today Soviet troops had captured Mohacs in their march on the rear of Budapest. Mohacs lies on the west side of the Danube just across the border from Yugoslavia and 96 miles south of the Hungarian capital.

A German military spokesman said that with the incorporation of Mohacs the Russian bridgehead across the Danube was six miles wide. Mohacs is 12 miles northwest of Batina, in Yugoslavia, where the initial crossing was made.

STREET CAR WORKERS STRIKE

Brussels, Nov. 28 —(AP)— A strike paralyzed street car operations today in Brussels, a city of approximately 1,000,000.

The tie-up increased tension that prevailed as the Chamber of Deputies reassembled following a week-end that saw some 40 persons wounded in demonstrations against the Pierlot government.

2 EXECUTIONS REPORTED

London, Nov. 28 —(CP)— The Paris radio said two members of the former Vichy militia were executed at dawn today for the assassination last July of Georges Mandel, interior minister in the Daladier cabinet before the fall of France.

Germans Report Artillery Activity In Netherlands

Americans Now Within Ten Miles of Saarbrucken

London, Nov. 28 (CP)—Renewed Canadian participation in the western front battle was reported today by the German Transocean Agency which said the Canadians had intensified their artillery duels with the Germans between the lower Rhine and the Waal rivers in the Netherlands.

The German Agency report, which was without Allied confirmation, suggested this possibly presaged a move between Nijmegen and Tiel which is on the north bank of the Waal, 25 miles southeast of Arnhem.

A Reuter News Agency dispatch from Stockholm, meanwhile, quoted the Berlin correspondent of the newspaper Aftonbladet as saying a big British offensive in the Netherlands-German frontier area aimed at the Ruhr was in the offing. The correspondent reported greatly increased artillery fire between Nijmegen and Tiel.

Perhaps that was the social referred by Prime Minister Mackenzie King when he announced in the House of Commons in Ottawa last night that Canadian soldiers now were fighting on German soil in some places.

London, (AP)—U. S. 3rd Army infantry advanced three to four miles in the centre of the western front, capturing a village today 10 miles from Saarbrucen, a great German arsenal and pivot of the Siegfried Line.

Other Americans, of the 9th army, reached the flooded Roer river, last natural barrier before Cologne and the Rhine. In extremely bitter fighting, they cleared the village of Kirchberg, just across the muddy 30-yard-wide stream from Julich, less than a mile to the north. Kirchberg is 23 miles from the western limits of Cologne.

Crossing of Rhine Reported.

(An unconfirmed French broadcast heard by the Federal communications commission reported a French crossing of the Rhine north of Strasbourg.)

Clear Pocket Near Venlo

British 2nd Army men in the north cleared a pocket north of Venlo and again probed the maze of defences before that Dutch road centre.

A Reuter news agency dispatch today said parts of the 2nd's front were so quiet the only sound audible was the chirping of birds.

Germany had the bulk of her forces and her precious mobile reserves deployed on the Cologne Plain. Advances accordingly were slow, for the fight there was a great battle of attrition and Gen. Eisenhower's maximum objective was to destroy the German Army.

The massing of German strength on an 18-mile sector beyond Aachen weakened the enemy before the Saar, rich in coal and steel, and it was here that Lt.-Gen. Patton threw his 3rd Army at this gateway into Germany. The 7th Army in part joined the 3rd in this offensive north of Saarebourg.

The 80th Infantry advanced 3 1-2 miles capturing Seinghousse, 10 miles southwest of Saarbrucken, city of 135,000. The 95th Division moved within five miles of Saarlautern on the frontier.

The 3rd Army moved well beyond the captured road town of St. Avold and swept toward the German border along the entire Lorraine front, while exerting steady pressure on the 19-mile sector inside Germany beyond Luxembourg.

The 7th Army, its flanks secured by a break-through to the Rhine, sent tanks chasing withdrawing Germans north of Saarebourg. The Germans were under great pressure as they retreated toward the refuge of the Siegfried Line.

Hun Concerned Over the Saar.

German concern for safety of the Saar was reflected in a Berlin broadcast which assessed this front second only to that beyond Aachen. The Saar, after the Ruhr and Silesia, is Germany's third largest producer of coal and steel.

At places, the 3rd Army was at the outer works of the Siegfried line. At many points the Americans were under the guns of [illegible] sitions, and at many others they were through the old [illegible], many of the forts of which were built on eastern slopes of hills making reversal of guns impossible.

The 3rd passed Hombourg, 11 miles southwest of Saarbrucken and seven miles southwest of the French frontier town of Forbach. Hagenau, where railroads lead from the extreme east of France to Karlsruhe and Neustadt, was threatened.

The French 1st Army improved its positions north of Belfort. It captured Rimback and numerous other villages and 1,000 Germans.

Two bridges across the Rhine near Colmar were reported destroyed yesterday.

An Allied staff officer said that given an even break in the weather the Germans shortly would be forced to fall back across the Roer, best natural barrier remaining to the enemy west of the Rhine.

BRITAIN RAISES FIGHTING FORCE OF 4,500,000 MEN

Produces 100,000 Planes and Nearly 6,000 Naval Vessels

By E. FRASER WIGHTON
(Reuter Staff Writer)

London, Nov. 28 —(CP Reuter)— In five years of war, Britain's 45,000,000 citizens have produced more than 100,000 planes, nearly 6,000 naval vessels and 6,750,000 deadweight tons of merchant shipping, and raised a fighting force of 4,500,000 men.

The approach of victory has prompted the government to release today these impressive figures of the United Kingdom war effort.

Till now, they have been highly secret, but a White Paper, issued today said:

"As a result of the change in the military situation, it is no longer necessary to withhold some of this information."

The government publication tells the story of John Bull in anger. It tells how, against a background of complete blackout, under a rain of bombs and shells, with homes shattered and broken, the ordinary man and woman forged the weapons for victorious war, saved immense sums and suffered and overcame many adversities.

The White Paper, prosaically entitled "Statistics Relating to the War Effort of the United Kingdom," outlined Britain's achievements.

It told of the tremendous job done in making Britain self-sufficient agriculturally.

Land under the plow was increased from 8,813,000 acres in 1939 to 14,617,000 in 1944 to enable Britain "to maintain total food supplies at an adequate level while reducing imports of food by 50 per cent." The Women's Land Army, with a strength of more than 80,000 during the middle of this year, played a big part in that work.

2 Hotels Ordered To Re-open Rooms For Dining Service

No drastic changes were announced for the operation of hotels in District No. 9 following a meeting of the Hotel Authority Board of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario held in the City Hall on Monday, when the Board convened to receive applications and study the operation of hotel beverage rooms in Prince Edward, Hastings, Northumberland and Lennox Counties, that area comprising District No. 9, Frank G. Cushing, local barrister and deputy registrar of the district, announced today.

Two hotel proprietors, who have not been operating dining rooms in connection with their hotels were ordered to re-open their dining rooms as soon as possible. The eating facilities at these particular hotels had been discontinued owing to the lack of dining room and kitchen help. Representatives from all hotels throughout the district were present to hear discussions and present individual problems, that confronted the respective operators, Mr. Cushing added.

An application from the Bay of Quinte Country and Golf Club for the establishment of a licence to sell beer was heard and referred to the Registrar of the Ontario Liquor Control Board at Toronto for consideration.

Seven Applications For Divorce

With the exception of three motions, cases listed for trial at the opening of the Non-jury Sittings of the Supreme Court before The Honorable Mr. Justice Makins here today consisted of seven applications for decree nisi divorce actions. All were uncontested.

One of the motions was entered by St. Andrew's Church, represented by S. G. Robertson, local barrister, seeking the interpretation of part of the will of the late Thomas Marshall, which decreed the dwelling house situated at 387 John St. be left to the said church for the purpose of a Manse. Mr. F. G. Cushing, local barrister, appeared on behalf of the executors of the Marshall will, Messrs. O. H. Scott and H. D. Bateman. His Lordship reserved judgment in the matter.

The question presented before the court rested on the legality of whether the Manse can be disposed of in favor of the church and free from limitations.

The divorce actions are proceeding this afternoon, some seven in all.

Magistrate and Mrs. J. L. Lloyd Honored by Court Personnel, Friends by Presentation of Gifts

Something new in the annals of court procedure was witnessed in the Belleville Police Court Chambers Monday evening when Magistrate and Mrs. J. L. Lloyd were summoned before an assembly of associates to answer to charges before Chief R. W. Probert, who presided. After numerous character witnesses had testified the sentence of the tribunal resulted in Magistrate Lloyd being the surprised recipient of a chesterfield chair and ottoman, while Mrs. Lloyd was presented with a large bouquet of roses. Even His Worship's Boston Terrier "Cappy" wasn't forgotten and was given a new dog collar with leash attached.

The occasion of this unique court came as the result of Magistrate Lloyd returning to his former court jurisdiction in North Hastings after two and one-half years as presiding magistrate for this entire area, prior to the recent appointment of Magistrate T. Y. Wills.

Charges Are Read

The charge, in a mock court, read that Magistrate Lloyd did "after several years as magistrate in Belleville and Trenton, make many friends by his kindly understanding and conduction of court that tended to bring honor and respect to his court". The charge was read by Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan with Inspector J. C. Hayes presenting character witnesses from all walks of district life. Witnesses to add their respects and good wishes included representatives from the Belleville Police Department (Deputy Chief Harman), from the District Ontario Provincial Police, R.C.M.P., Trenton police department, as well as Mayor Harry Rollins, Cpl. Lamb of the R.C.A.F. service police, Sheriff J. D. O'Flynn, Assistant Crown Attorney S. G. Robertson, H. Kendricks (C.N.R.), T. D. Rustin, Jailer J. A. Sainain, the press and others whose daily duties had brought them in close contact with His Worship. All expressed personal respect and were emphatic in their commendation of the true spirit of justice and understanding in which Magistrate Lloyd's courts had been conducted during his stay in Belleville.

Taken completely by surprise and with emotion, Magistrate Lloyd assured the assembly it had been a satisfaction and privilege to preside over local courts in the past, but he would still be in communication with many of his friends in other judicial capacities, he hoped.

Makes Suitable Reply

"It is difficult to reply after all of the pleasing things which have been said here tonight. I might say I'm not leaving the country you know. Actually I was born and raised in Hastings County and after two and one-half years in Belleville I am only returning home to Northbrook in the same capacity in which I left. However, I feel this is the grandest honor that could be bestowed upon anyone and such a gesture was farthest from my mind. We do not, as a rule, receive such recognition from our fellow-beings short of the grave," stated His Worship in reply. He told those present he would surely make use of the comfortable chesterfield chair and ottoman throughout the chilly winter evenings. Mrs. Lloyd also expressed her appreciation, adding she was pleased to realize her husband had so many friends in this part of the country during their sojourn in Belleville.

300 County Farmers Given Work Permits in Industry for Winter

With regular farm work virtually completed for the season, approximately 300 Hastings county farmers have now been given temporary work permits to work in industry for the winter months, it was stated this week by Mr. H. H. Reed, manager of the Belleville Selective Service office.

The above number of men have been placed in industrial plants throughout Hastings county, are working for the Canadian National Railways, or have been placed in county lumber and logging plants. Among the industrial plants in Belleville taking unskilled farmer labor for the winter months are Stephens-Adamson, Stewart-Warner-Alemite and Corbins. Plants in Batawa, Deloro, Tweed, Sulphide and Corbyville are also taking farmer labor.

With 300 farmers already placed in industry for off season employment, according to Mr. Reed, it was very doubtful if county industrial plants could absorb many more unskilled workers. In any case the casual worker in the city would have to be looked after, it was stated.

Lumber and logging camps in the northern part of the county are still in need of workers, and with industrial needs for unskilled labor practically filled it was expected a greater number of men seeking work in the future would be directed to lumber and wood-cutting operations.

Says Prisoner of War in First Great War Was 'Forgotten Man'

Life as it was to the prisoner of war in internment camps in Germany during the last Great War was portrayed to members of the Belleville Kinsmen Club at their regular bi-monthly meeting held at the Quinte Hotel Monday evening when Lt.-Col. H. E. Smith, barracks officer at Mountain View, told of his own experiences during two years of internment.

Introduced to the club by Kin Phil Huddleston, Col. Smith, formerly of the Ontario Tank Regiment of Oshawa, pointed out the humorous side of life in a prisoner of war camp. He said, however, that the life of a prisoner was "hell" and that the humorous side could only be seen afterwards.

Being taken prisoner of war is the last thing which a soldier thinks of while on the battlefield, according to Col. Smith who stated that no one was more surprised than he was when captured by the Germans at Ypres in June, 1916. He termed the prisoner of war as the "forgotten man."

Upon being taken prisoner a soldier immediately assumes a "don't know" attitude, thus thwarting enemy attempts to gain information by interrogation. Organized attempts at mass and individual escapes are constantly in the minds of internees with the speaker relating several attempts, some of which were successful, others not.

Plans Had to be Approved.

All escapes from any particular internment camp must be authorized by the senior officer in charge to whom the idea is submitted. If agreed upon the principal had to await his turn in order that attempts scheduled by others would not be spoiled.

Chances at escapes from German internment camps were enhanced by the peculiar mentality of the German in doing only what he is told to do. They do not think for themselves and go only as far as orders indicate.

In closing, Col. Smith, as president of the Canadian Legion, expressed his appreciation to the Belleville Kinsmen Club for the work they were doing in making life brighter for the Canadian prisoner of war. War prisoners in the last Great War did not get the parcels which are received today, he said.

Election of officers for 1945 took up considerable time at the meeting which was presided over by the club president, Kin "Matt" Currie. Club appreciation to the speaker was expressed by Harry Rollins with Harry Knott acting as song leader and "Rusty" Reid as fine collector. Acknowledgment of a $50 cheque from the local salvage committee was made by President "Matt" with the announcement it would be turned over to the eye clinic fund.

Free Transportation to Home in City Will Be Provided Returned Men

Following recommendation from the local Kinsmen Club and with the co-operation of other service clubs and business men in the city, members of the armed forces from Belleville who are returning home from overseas for the first time are to be afforded free transportation to their homes.

First mooted last spring when increased numbers of armed forces personnel began arriving home only to find difficulty at late hours in securing transportation to their various homes, the plan will be put into operation as soon as possible. Suitable signs will be placed at the station advising armed services personnel that free transportation is available.

The large signs headed "Free Transportation" reads "Belleville men and women of the armed forces returning from overseas for the first time. Information at the ticket office."

Announcing last evening at the Kinsmen meeting that the service would soon be in effect, Kin "Bounce" Holway, chairman of the committee appointed to arrange the service for returning armed forces personnel, appealed for co-operation of members in offering their cars.

"It will mean getting out at three and four o'clock in the morning to proceed to the station," he stated, "but service personnel returning from overseas are deserving of every consideration which can be given them."

Members of the Rotary and Kiwanis clubs had offered their cars, while the Red Cross would also be counted upon, it was stated. City business men would also be canvassed in order that a list of sufficient names may be obtained. Volunteers offering their cars will be called in alphabetical order.

Mayor H. Rollins Elected President Of Kinsmen Club

Member of the local club for the past eight years and included among the club's directors for the greater part of that period, Mayor Harry Rollins was elected president of the Belleville Kinsmen Club at their annual meeting and election of officers held Monday evening. He will take office for the 1945 period, succeeding the current president "Matt" Currie.

President-elect Rollins was opposed only by one other aspirant for the president's chair, defeating Kin Newton Wilbur in a straight fight. A good representation of the club roster was on hand to choose executive officers for the forthcoming year.

Club directors appointed for the next year included Newton Wilbur, Bill Dennis, Ernie Colbourne, Ted Follwell, "Bounce" Holway, Arthur Cruji, Ernie Smith, and George O'Brien. Five of the eight directors appointed are new to the office. Next year's treasurer for the club is Frank Lang, his election for the office not being opposed. The club secretary will be chosen from the new slate of directors.

Appoint Honorary Members.

Two honorary members to the club were appointed at the meeting. These were B. C. Sisler, charter member of the first Kinsmen club formed in Canada 25 years ago, and Leo "Bub" Barrett, local benefactor of the Belleville club.

Resident of Belleville since 1927 the new president of the local Kinsmen club has lent himself freely to public life and in service to his community. An active worker in the club since his joining in 1936, Mr. Rollins has spared no effort in boosting "Kin" always interested in sports of all kinds he was appointed to the executive of the Ontario Amateur Softball Association and this year served as first vice president of the organization.

The interest which Mayor Harry Rollins has given to municipal life is well known by city residents. From his election to council only a few years ago he has risen to the highest office, a position which he has conscientiously filled during his two year term of office.

Ministerial Assoc. Hears Dr. Armour

The Belleville Ministerial Association met for its monthly meeting on Nov. 27th, in Bridge St. United Church parlor. The meeting was called to order by the Rev. Mr. Dilts, president of the Association. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. A. J. Wm. Myers.

Following a brief business session the Rev. Dr. Armour, General Secretary of the Upper Canada Bible Society, was introduced to the members of the Association and given the floor. In his address Dr. Armour spoke of the enormous sweep of the British and Foreign Bible Society. "We are working", he said, "in almost one hundred countries, and as for area, we are covering almost the whole world." "This is a magnificent piece of work," said the speaker, "and especially so since it is a work of faith. When we started out we did not even have Ministerial backing and even yet we are a dependent Society for we depend wholly on what is donated to this worthy cause by Christian friends."

"There are, however," said Dr. Armour, "limitations of our work. Paper has been rationed. We have been cut down to 37½%. Our printing press at Shanghai was destroyed by enemy action. There have been many other handicaps which we knew nothing about in normal times. Yet God has helped us to meet all immediate demands for which we are very thankful."

Speaking of what Canada had done in this great work, Dr. Armour said that "over seven hundred and fifty thousand copies of the New Testament had been given to the men and women of the Armed Forces. In cash two hundred and ten thousand dollars had been given the Parent Society in the past year." "But," continued the speaker, "we must not stop at what we have done. The future demands for the Bible are exceedingly great. We need Bibles for Europe. The Church faces a tremendous challenge and we must not fall down on the job."

Words of appreciation for the informative and challenging address followed Dr. Armour splendid address after which the meeting was brought to a close with prayer by the Chairman, the Rev. Mr. Dilts.

Admiration for Work of S. A. Cited As Main Reason for Former Regina Policeman Turning Evangelist

Appreciation of the work done by the Salvation Army in police courts of Regina was the prompting motive for a police constable of that city 15 years ago to give up pavement pounding and resolve a life work with the Christian organization of his admiration.

That ex-constable is now one of the best-known evangelistic speakers with the Salvation Army who is devoting his full time to inspections and to speaking at different centres across Canada. He is Adjutant William Ross, who with Mrs. Ross, is currently conducting evangelistic services at the Pinnacle Street citadel of the Salvation Army.

Tall, square shouldered and looking every bit a proud ex-member of the Regina police force, Adjutant Ross has given to the work of the Salvation Army all the sincerity discernible in his Scotch countenance. Born in Scotland he came to Canada 20 years ago to join the Regina police force. Five years' observation of the work done by the Salvation Army was sufficient to give him a new aim in life and he entered the S. A. training college in Winnipeg to train for his present position.

Thinks World Not So Bad.

Despite the universal strife which today has engulfed practically all nations, Adjutant Ross asserted the world is not half as bad as it appears on the surface.

"People of the world are definitely seeking religion, but a practical and free religion is what is needed," he said. "It is our portrayal of religion which has been in error."

Speaking to members of the Belleville Rotary Club Monday noon, Adjutant Ross chose as his topic "Modern Miracles" stressing the reclamation work of the Salvation Army among those of the underworld in the big cities of Canada and the United States. He cited individual cases as proofs that members of the underworld can be brought to see the light of Christ through the teachings of a practical religion.

Constant helpmate of Adjutant Ross in his work with the Salvation Army is Mrs. Ross who acts as his secretary and assists with evangelistic services conducted by her husband. Coming to Belleville November 22nd, Adjutant and Mrs. Ross are conducting services at the citadel every evening until December 4th.

Creating Nuisance Charged Against Four Airmen

The practice of toppling over garbage cans, leaving the contents strewn about the streets, has become rather annoying to householders in Belleville. During the past 24 hours two such cases were reported by irritated citizens, who reported the matter to police headquarters.

Early today city and R.C.A.F. police hastened to a Church Street address where it was reported garbage pails were being deliberately kicked over and the contents strewn about the street by airmen. Sergt. Arnott and Cpl. Lamb, drove to the scene and apprehended four airmen, who gave their names as Roderick Cameron, Harold Fielding and Cpls. Chas. Lacy and Richard Alexander.

The quartette was held in custody at the police station until today when they were given into the keeping of the R.C.A.F. service police to appear in Friday's court when charges of creating a nuisance will be heard, Chief Probert announced today.

Merchants Will Extend Store Hours Before Christmas

As a measure to assist the factory employees and other workers to get in a bit of Christmas shopping following their regular working hours, Belleville stores will remain open during the evening the last few days before Christmas, it has been decided following a meeting of local merchants. Merchants present at the meeting voted unanimously to remain open thus giving the worker an opportunity to get in some shopping during evening hours.

According to the decision of the merchants starting December 20th all stores in Belleville will remain open in the evenings until December 23rd, both dates being inclusive. The Saturday evening closing date prior to Christmas will be the usual Saturday closing time.

For two weeks prior to the holiday the usual Wednesday afternoon closing will be dispensed with, it was decided by merchants. Thus on Wednesday, December 13th, stores will remain open until six o'clock, while the Wednesday following will see the inauguration of the late evening closing policy.

Merchants also decided at the meeting to observe Boxing Day, therefore all Belleville stores will be closed the day following Christmas.

Memorial Service For Pte. S. E. Dainard Held in St. John's

Stirling — Sunday, November 26th in St. John's Anglican Church, the memorial service in memory of Pte. Stanley E. Dainard of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, who was killed in action in Italy in September, was held.

The church was beautiful with orchid and white chrysanthemums on the screen, white and red carnations with fern on the altar, while at the front on a flag draped table was Stanley's photo and a memorial sheaf of poppies with Stanley's name inscribed on the ribbon.

Rev. C. C. Brazill, Rector of St. John's, was in charge of the service assisted by Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, Rector of St. Thomas' Church, Belleville, who delivered an inspiring sermon to the large gathering present.

Veterans and Reserves Attend.

First Great War veterans, members of the Canadian Legion of this district and the Hastings and Prince Edward Reserve Army, marched to the church and sat in a body to the left of the mourners.

The impressive service opened with a hymn "O God of Bethel by Whose Hand." The 23rd and 121st Psalms were read responsively and veteran Fred Houchin, District Lay Reader, read the lessons followed by hymn "Breathe on Me Breath of God."

Rev. Beauchamp Payne's Message.

The address of the Memorial service was given by Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne who chose for his text the thirteenth verse, fifteenth chapter of St. John "Greater Love Hath No Man Than This, That a Man Lay Down his life for his Friends."

In his opening remarks, Rev. Payne said: "We are gathered together to honor one who had made the supreme sacrifice for you and me." A Memorial service is the opportunity that presents itself to us that we may remember our loved one before the Throne of God. So this afternoon we are remembering before God one whose youthful days were spent in this community attending school and worshiping here in this church, moving through the cycle from youth to mature years to bear responsibilities.

Stanley Ernest Dainard on the 15th day of December in 1939 reached that status in life and enlisted to serve his King and Country and God. He saw his first action in Sicily, then went on through to the Eighth Army in Italy and it was while there he made the great sacrifice.

So many of our boys have taught us the lesson that they know their life has not been lived in vain.

There are three essential things in life and that must have been in the life of Stanley Dainard: First is loyalty—do we know the real interpretation and meaning of that word? What does it mean to us today? To every man and woman who wears the King's uniform, the cause is real and because of their loyalty they are prepared to fulfil their tasks. They know the meaning of loyalty and I trust we may learn it.

Another attribute is courage: There are a lot of things that we know are right and a lot we know are wrong but we need the courage to do that which is right.

Third essential thing is sacrifice: Here there has been exemplified to us the true sacrifice, not counting the cost.

Our religion has to be lived not thought. We must be conscious of God and have the realization of what God has done for us. He has given us comfort and consolation. There is one communion and fellowship for us. How can we obtain this? By applying these very things to our own living not leaving it for others. You cannot pass on that duty to another. It must be done at all costs even the cost demanding courage, sacrifice and loyalty to be soldiers of God and His Cross. When we have fulfilled our own obligations then we too shall be gathered into our Father and have the realization that we have performed our task. We have got to be loyal and come to the realization that the church of God consists of ourselves not someone else. Do not say that you work all week and cannot turn out on Sunday or that the cost of living is so high you cannot give.

"Greater love hath no man that he lay down his life for his friend", that we might build up today the Kingdom of God here on earth. We must build for that which they gave up their life, "That the power and forces for good may overcome the powers of evil."

The choir sang "O Valiant Hearts Who to their Glory Came" with Mr. Fred Houchin taking the solo parts. Following prayer LAC. J. Keeler of the R.C.A.F. Main Station, Trenton, played reveille and the Last Post. Recessional Hymn and Benediction closed the solemn service.

Sunday, November 26th would have been the late Stanley Ernest Dainard's twenty-fifth birthday.

Stanley leaves to mourn his loss, his parents Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Dainard and brother George of Belleville; another brother Pte. Fred Dainard of the H. and P. E. Regiment, Italy, and one sister Mrs. Gordon Burrell, Stirling. Out-of-town mourners included Mrs. L. A. Taylor, Oshawa, Ont.; Mrs. W. Holtham, Kingston, Mr. and Mrs. H. Plummer, Trenton and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Stewart, Foxboro, Ont.

POLICE COURT

Liquor cases dominated the weekly Tuesday morning police court held before Magistrate T. Y. Wills today when Raymond Bailey, Tyendinaga, paid $50 and costs after pleading guilty to a charge of second offence intoxication.

Being found in possession of liquor procured illegally cost Russell Wilson $28 in all and on a similar charge Cpl. Rich. Alexander, of the R.C.A.F. paid $13. The latter was apprehended with two bottles of beer in his pocket last night.

A charge of stealing a dog was dismissed against Oscar Fox, of Thurlow Township after the accused told the court the animal had followed him home and he merely fed it. "Well, you didn't have to tie it up to feed it", remarked Crown Attorney Donnan in making comment on the case. His Worship dismissed the charge without further comment.

Garnett Brown, 16, of Shannonville, appeared on a charge of shoplifting and after pleading guilty, was given a year's suspended sentence and ordered to report to the Children's Aid Society periodically. Police Inspector J. C. Hayes told the court young Brown was in the first stages of kleptomania.

At the recommendation of Inspector T. D. Ruston of the Children's Aid Society, an infant child was made the ward of the society after it had been abandoned by its mother.

Want Vote Taken By Direct Ballot

Toronto, Nov. 28 —(CP)— Attorney General Blackwell is in Ottawa today discussing with military officials the taking of the soldier vote by direct ballot in the next provincial election, it was stated at Queen's Park today. Mr. Blackwell is chairman of the select committee of the legislature studying revision of the province's election machinery, including the Active Service Voters Act.

W. B. Common, solicitor to the committee and Alex Lewis, clerk of the legislature, accompanied Mr. Blackwell.

Queen's Park sources said the discussions do not indicate an election is an immediate prospect but the committee wishes to prepare its recommendations for the next session of the legislature.

Brig. James Mess Has Résigned

Ottawa, Nov. 28. (CP)—Brig. James Mess, deputy adjutant-general in charge of recruiting, has resigned and his resignation will become effective Dec. 20, defence headquarters announced today.

The directorate of army recruiting will be transferred to another section of the adjutant-general's branch, it was stated.

No reason was given for Brig. Mess' resignation but it was reliably learned that he disagreed with Defence Minister McNaughton's partial conscription policy. He recently returned from two months' duty overseas in connection with auxiliary services and army educational matters which were also under his direction.

House Highlights

By The Canadian Press

KING

Col. J. L. Ralston, former Defence Minister, was asked to head the government and take the responsibility for a conscription policy but would not do so. Other cabinet ministers also declined to head the government.

Canada faced the possibility of "anarchy" unless the House of Commons could unite behind a government that could carry on.

Canadian soldiers now were among Allied troops fighting on German soil in some measure.

Home defence troops ordered overseas may convert to General Service by volunteering up to the time of embarkation.

His resignation as Prime Minister would be forthcoming if he did not get the support of a large majority of his own party on a vote of confidence motion.

He had never sought to appease Quebec or to please one province rather than another, but he attempted to have the people understand Quebec.

GRAYDON

The crisis was a reinforcement crisis and it could have been solved by the government itself had it had the courage to do so without creating the distress it created.

The Progressive Conservatives believed the government should have made all draftees available for overseas service.

The House had lost confidence in the Prime Minister.

His party's amendment to the vote of confidence motion declared that the government had failed to obtain adequate reinforcements by failing to establish compulsory service for all home defence army personnel.

COLDWELL

The C. C. F. party felt that wealth as well as manpower should be conscripted for an all-out war effort.

All parties in the House had repudiated conscription in 1939, but he now was convinced reinforcements were necessary and the voluntary system was inadequate.

Under the government's policy, Canada would have four different types of servicemen—General Service personnel, volunteers for the European theatre, men drafted to the front line and home defence troops.

His party's sub-amendment to the confidence motion called for removal of all distinction between drafted and volunteer personnel in the army and total conscription of resources.

British People's Total War Effort 'Greater Than That of Any Other Belligerent' Says Brendan Bracken

London, Nov. 28 (CP)—Information Minister Brendan Bracken declared today that "one tremendous fact stood out clearly" in the newly-issued White Paper on Britain's war effort—"that the total war effort of the population of Great Britain is greater than that of any other belligerent"

"We have not attempted to mulct the British Empire," he told a press conference. "Canada is the only Empire country from which we have received reverse lend-lease. With all the other Dominions we have made financial arrangements much less favorable to ourselves than the United States."

He said Britain's large gold reserves in the United States at the beginning of the war "have all been paid over and the money spent in building up American munitions industries."

Service to U.S.

"This expenditure," he added, "helped America to come into the war with her industries already on something like a wartime footing. We are glad to have rendered this service to the United States as a small return for her tremendous generosity to us."

Saying that Britain gave up its export business and converted the whole of its manpower to the making and using of war goods, Mr. Bracken asserted the report's "cramped statistics" illustrated the "courage and unexampled sacrifices of millions of British people."

"The Victorians," he said with pride, "were proud to be called a nation of shopkeepers, but there never have been such shopkeepers as the British. No shopkeeper ever before sold out their entire stocks in order to fight.

Sacrificed Most of Victorian Heritage.

"We have sacrificed most of our Victorian inheritance. What was the treasure of our grandfathers has gone, and it has been well and gladly sacrificed."

Mr. Bracken said there had been unexampled courage and sacrifice of millions of British people. More than 22,500,000 civilians have been moved since the war began. There is hardly a home in Britain where the family has not been broken up and scattered all over the earth, fighting or toiling in factories."

Up to the end of August more than 5,500 factories had been damaged by enemy action.

Taxation.

Taxation had reduced the number of people with incomes above $5,000. Something like a revolution had happened in Britain and the treasury had played the part of an urbane a painless Robespierre.

"A lot of unfair criticism has been directed against John Bull's war effort," Mr. Bracken said. "We don't want to blow our own trumpet, particularly if anyone else will do it for us. Critics who have not gone through the agony of Britain under bombing and dull monotonous food ought to live here and they would not be quite so vocal."

What Britons had been able to do in these heroic years was a measure of the part they would play in rebuilding the world, he said.

This radio controlled glider bomb is the type released from German aircraft and used for attacks on Allied shipping. The bomb was found ready packed for transport near Paris where it is on view.

MOPPING UP OPERATIONS TAKE PLACE AT BELFORT

Led by a French patriot, a number of German prisoners, carrying their own wounded, are marched to a prisoner collection point in Belfort, France, as mopping up operations continue in that strategic city. It was near Belfort that the French 1st Army made the sensational breakthrough to the Rhine river, turning the southern flank of the German line.

Highland Regt. Now in Action

By DOUG HOW

(CP War Correspondent)

With the Canadians on the Adriatic Front, Nov. 28—(CP Cable)—Existence of a fourth Highland Battalion in the Canadian Corps was made known today with the disclosure that a new infantry formation is to be known as the Lanark and Renfrew Scottish Regiment of Canada.

The battalion saw its first action Sept. 2 in the early exploitation phase of the Gothic Line battle and later fought around the Conca, USO and Fiumicino rivers.

The unit, containing men from every province, is commanded by a Lieutenant-Colonel from Medicine Hat, Alta. The second in command is Maj. Kenneth Campbell, Perth, Ont., where the parent regiment has headquarters.

Other Highland battalions in Italy are the Seaforth Highlanders of Canada, Vancouver, the 48th Highlanders of Canada, Toronto and the Cape Breton Highlanders, Sydney, N.S.

Ralston's Speech Expected Today

Ottawa, Nov. 28 —(CP)— Col. J. L. Ralston's speech on Prime Minister Mackenzie King's confidence motion is expected late today after the House of Commons resumes public debate following a secret sitting.

Capt. J. A. Johnston (L-London) obtained the adjournment last night and will be the first speaker.

While Col. Ralston has given no intimation as to what his attitude will be, persons who have talked with him expect he will vote confidence in the government.

These sources say Col. Ralston regards the recent action of the cabinet in passing an order-in-council under which 16,000 draftees will be sent overseas as a complete vindication of his stand when he resigned as defence minister following refusal of the cabinet to accept his advice that draftees be sent overseas to reinforce the fighting forces.

Col. Ralston's position on this important vote is expected to rally other English-speaking Liberal members who have been in sympathy with his course.

CATARACT PROBABLY RELIEVED BY EXCITEMENT OF PLANE RIDE

Dallas, Tex., Nov. 28 — (AP) — David Lefkofsky really got his money's worth out of his first airplane ride. Lefkofsky, who had been partially blind in one eye for 40 years, closed his good eye to rest it while en route, and found that he was looking at people on the plane with the other eye, through which he had seen nothing but rays of light since the injury. An eye specialist explained a cataract might have been relieved by the change of altitude or the case might be a psychological result of excitement.

Judge Affirms Wife's Divorce

Reno, Nev., Nov. 28 —(AP)— Doris Duke Cromwell's divorce from James H. R. Cromwell which was granted here last December was affirmed today by Judge William McKnight, who ruled that Mr. Cromwell's New Jersey degree nullifying the divorce was obtained by "fraud and imposition."

Mrs. Cromwell sought the action in support of her divorce decree of a year ago which was challenged by a New Jersey Chancery Court on the grounds that the tobacco heiress was not a resident of Nevada.

E. R. Stettinius To Replace Hull As Secy. of State

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

Washington, Nov. 28 (AP)—Quick Senate confirmation was predicted today for the appointment of Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., as United States Secretary of State. Speed was indicated not only by the general acclaim which greeted President Roosevelt's chosen successor to Cordell Hull but also by the urgency of pending international problems, headed by the need to complete the Dumbarton Oaks plan for world security.

Chairman Tom Connally (Dem. Texas) summoned the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to meet tomorrow and Vice-President Wallace said he is confident "the Senate will support the President's choice by confirming him unanimously."

At the State Department the 44-year-old Stettinius, who has been Acting Secretary since Mr. Hull entered the Naval hospital at Bethesda, Md), buckled down to the enormous job confronting him in guiding American foreign policy into new fields of international co-operation.

With a Churchill-Roosevelt-Stalin meeting indefinitely delayed by the prolonged winter war in Europe, it is likely that the President will turn over to Mr. Stettinius the job of completing the Dumbarton Oaks plan either through diplomatic channels or in a conference with the foreign ministers of Britain, Russia and China.

Mr. Stettinius himself is anxious to reach agreement with the other big powers on voting procedure in the proposed world security council. This is essential if a United Nations conference to set up the organization is to be held early next year.

In the main, associated predicted that the secretary-designate would continue the basic policies laid down by his retiring chief.

Mr. Roosevelt sent his nomination to the Senate late yesterday, leaving unfilled for the time being the position of under-secretary which Mr. Stettinius has filled since September, 1943.

Kidney Acids Rob Your Rest

Many people never seem to get a good night's rest. They turn and toss—lie awake and count sheep. Often they blame it on "nerves" when it may be their kidneys. Healthy kidneys filter poisons from the blood. If they are faulty and fail, poisons stay in the system and sleeplessness, headache, backache often follow. If you don't sleep well, try Dodd's Kidney Pills—for half a century the favorite remedy. 103

Canada Honored by New V.C. Winner

Another young Canadian, Major David Vivian Currie of Moosejaw and Owen Sound, has brought honor to Canada and to himself in the magnificent example he gave of courage, devotion and enterprise in the battle near Falaise in August. The story of his valor and gallantry is one that will inspire the boyhood, youth and manhood, womanhood and girlhood of Canada for generations to come. His deeds on the field of Falaise will be remembered among the "golden deeds" of history, deeds of heroes and will add honor to the magnificent role of Canadian heroes whose names are household words.

In the unrivalled tasks of modern war, his story is a saga of courage, valor and self-possession in the face of the greatest danger. He defied fierce enemy fire and entered the village of St. Lambert sur Dives alone and afoot, reconnoitred the Nazi defences, extricated the crews of two knocked out tanks of his small mixed force. Next day he led an attack against the village, then during the next thirty-six hours while the Germans hurled counter-attack after counter-attack his men threw them back, so skilfully had he prepared the defence. The last Hun attempt was again frustrated before it could be deployed and the Major ordered attack and completed the taking of the village.

His achievement was nothing less than the closing of the escape route for remnants of two German armies which had been cut off in the Falaise pocket. His small composite force of tanks, self-propelled anti-tank guns and infantry fought for three days and nights, destroyed seven enemy tanks, 12 88-millimetre guns, 40 vehicles, killed 300 Germans, wounded 500 of the enemy and took 2,100 prisoners. All his officers had been either killed or wounded.

Yet this hero in a letter to his wife who had heard something about his deeds modestly called the talk "nonsense" and passed off the deeds of courage and initiative by saying that "I've been busy ever since coming to France to win a medal for keeping my head down. Somebody else, no doubt!" He hopes he won't have to go on the sidelines for the rest of the war. He used a beret instead of a steel helmet and had no time for sleep except one hour only in the three days and nights and little time for eating, only one hot meal a day.

Canadians are proud of this brave, resourceful young officer who has won his spurs if ever a hero did.

Fellowship Though Separated

Those who are in the armed forces overseas and relatives in Britain are being assured of a large amount of Christmas mail for Canadians have been getting their Christmas cards sent off on their way overseas and are still sending these proofs of the fact that though so many are overseas they are at home in the hearts of those they love in Canada.

Already Christmas cards from overseas are beginning to arrive in Canada, the proof of the fact that the service folk abroad do not let the thoughts of their homes and friendships and relationships in Canada out of their minds.

The dividing ocean and the air above it are the links between the Old Land, the Continent of Europe, the Canadian lines in Italy and wherever Canadians may be in their wide service in the cause of democracy and their homes in Canada. These bonds but make the fellowship more dear between those who are separated now by the demands of war, which it is hoped and expected will in the not distant future relax so that there will be a complete reunion.

A number of Canadians who have been long overseas will soon be home in time for Christmas according to the program that General McNaughton announced for giving home leave for veterans overseas. These plans are taking shape. For the hundreds of families and Canadian veterans who secure this leave Christmas will be one never equalled in happiness, and this will also be a symbol of the great homecoming of others and after the close of the struggle of the men who have served Canada and the Allies so faithfully and nobly abroad.

Architects of Future

The ages that are to come will look upon Prime Minister Winston Churchill as one of the greatest exponents of liberty mankind has ever known and one of the greatest leaders in the history of freedom. He will with President Roosevelt and Marshal Joseph Stalin of Russia and others become the architect of the future after saving humanity from the barbarism of a world which the Huns have tried fiercely but unsuccessfully to make out of the men, women and children of the globe. To those great men and to the soldiery, the sailors, the airmen, the workers and the leaders of industry will be credited the new world into which security is to be brought along with peace.

In another way a young man, a nephew of Mr. Churchill, 36-year-old Col. Duncan Sandys, will in very deed become the architect of a phase of the Britain of the after-war period. He recently took over the post of minister of public works from Lord Portal. Col. Sandys will have the major task of repairing Britain's damaged buildings. Here is a task calling for great responsibility and it may safely be assured that he will carry out the high duties in the spirit of the dawn of the post-war era of Britain.

Plastics in Braking System

A novel British braking-system, incorporating a plastic assembly, has set new standards of efficiency for valve-operating mechanisms. This is the Servo-brake system, developed by Feeny and Johnson of Wembly, England. The plastic cylinder, piston and washer contained in the unit make possible a valuable saving in dead-weight—the assembly, complete with fixing brackets and master cylinder, weighing only 21 lbs.

The chief novelty of the system lies in the fact that direct reaction is possible between the vacuum cylinder and control valve, so that movement may be fully regulated throughout the whole of the operating cycle.

This new unit has been in use on a large lorry, carrying heavy loads each day, for twelve months, and has given complete satisfaction. The plastic components in particular have stood up to this rigorous test extremely well, and the cylinder has shown no signs of wear.

Music Has Its Heroes

French musicians, composers and performers alike, were among the most loyal members of the resistance movement and they took their own way of defying the Germans and the collaborators. In a recent issue of "Music Magazine," on the BBC Home Service, M. Herman Moyens, one of the principal organizers of the "Underground National Committee of Musicians," put on some records of Darius Milhaud's "Catalogue des Fleurs" which were made under strange and dangerous conditions. Milhaud is a Jew and was on the black list. But at dead of night, when the Gestapo were asleep, watchmen led the members of the Committee, with their chairman, Roger Desormieres, the conductor, into a research studio of the Vichy-controlled radio station. With all doors locked, recordings were made of this suite, with Irene Joachim, grand-daughter of the violinist, singing. The scores had been transcribed on odd sheets scrounged here and there in the weeks before; the engineers had laid their hands on some discs, and rehearsals had been held secretly in cellars. When the first Paris radio station fell into the hands of the F.F.I., this recording was put on the air while fighting was still going on in the streets outside.

Suicide or Haircut?

(The New Yorker Magazine)

For all we know, this little story, which comes to us from an Army chaplain in the Southwest Pacific, is chock-full of significance. Anyway, it seems that the captain wound up an interview with a Japanese prisoner in the routine way by asking the man if there was anything he wanted. "I would like to be permitted to destroy myself," the soldier replied. The captain explained that he couldn't grant a request like that. The prisoner reflected a moment. "Then," he said, "I would like to have my hair cut."

CHOICE

Know life, as cities on a chart?
Can man explore the human heart,
Or draw a pattern of the mind
And show just how it is designed?

What are we? Lumps of flesh and bone,
Fashioned to eat and grasp and own,
Or spirits gathering down the years
An endless source of smiles and tears?

This we do know: within the clay
Something that's of us, day by day,
Clings, and will cling till flesh is still,
To what it meets of good and ill.

Thus, is it destiny or fate?
By what we choose we love and hate,
Enjoy and suffer, face and fear
And fashion character and career.

NUGGETS OF KNOWLEDGE

Our common phrase "hard as adamant" has an interesting history. The ancient Greeks applied the adjective "adamois" to anything especially hard, particularly steel. It came from "a," not, and "daman," to tame or subdue. Anything hard to manage was called adamant.

During the Middle Ages the diamond was called the adamant because it was the hardest substance known. "Hard as adamant" literally means "hard as diamond."

Incidentally "diamond" itself is derived in a roundabout way from "adamant."

"Secondary school" is merely a highbrow term for what most people call high school.

Music plays no part in the typical religious service of orthodox Mohammedans.

The architecture and decorations of Moslem mosques contain no portrayals of human or animal forms.

Women take little part in the formal religious services of Islam, but they do visit the mosques for devotional purposes when the men are not present.

President Roosevelt is fond of comparing Isolationists to the ostrich. For at least 2,000 years there has been a widespread belief that this bird, when it wishes to hide from enemies, buries its head in the sand and imagines that it cannot be seen because it cannot see.

Because of this belief, which has little basis in fact, the ostrich has come down through the ages as the symbol of folly and stupidity. There is a reference to proverbial stupidity of the ostrich in the book of Job.

In Job 39:13-18 the Lord, speaking from the whirlwind, answers the patient patriarch:

"Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacocks? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich? Which leaveth her eggs in the earth, and warmeth them in dust, and forgetteth that the foot may crush them, or that the wild beast may break them. She is hardened against her young ones, as though they were not hers: her labour is in vain without fear? Because God hath deprived her of wisdom, neither hath he imparted to her understanding. What time she lifteth up herself on high, she scorneth the horse and his rider."

The notion that the largest of all living birds buries its head in the sand upon the approach of an enemy probably was suggested by two habits of the species. In the first place, the ostrich pokes its long beak into holes in search of water, which it frequently finds beneath the sand of the desert. In the second place, the ostrich rests itself by sitting down on its folded legs with the neck and head stretched close to the ground. But it never buries its head in the sand.

Power Resignation Accepted.

The other development of a tense day of debate before packed galleries was Mr. King's acceptance of the resignation of Air Minister Power and the former minister's brief declaration that conscription was not necessary, that the government had "no right to tear the country asunder at this stage of the war" and that he could not change his mind in a "matter of minutes."

In a speech lasting nearly three hours Mr. King took the House through the whole history of the war effort and the development of the conscription issue. He bared the secrets of the cabinet in a detail seldom exposed as he dramatically divided the events of recent weeks into "crisis No. 1" and "crisis No. 2" with crisis No. 3 in the offing.

The chief new bits of information disclosed were:

1. He asked Col. Ralston if he would assume the responsibility of forming a government and received a negative answer. He did the same with other ministers and got the same response.

No Co-operation

2. Late in October the cabinet was agreed on a further appeal for voluntary enlistments but could not agree on setting a time limit for the appeal and making the time limit known.

3. It has been decided that drafted men detailed for overseas service may volunteer up to the time of embarkation. The number who do so will be deducted from the 16,000 so that the Army will have power to send 16,000 in addition to those who volunteer.

In connection with the appeal for volunteers Mr. King expressed the opinion that some army officers did not try to get volunteers and that the appeal would have succeeded had the government had the co-operation of opposition leaders and the opposition press.

Near the end of his speech Mr. King said he was thankful the responsibility for deciding whether there should be another crisis rested on the members of parliament and not on himself. He recalled that he is nearly 70 years old, has been 25 years leader of his party and nearly 18 years prime minister.

"As long as I can continue to serve my country in any capacity I shall do the best I can toward that end," he said. "May I tell you frankly and honestly that the load is getting heavier and heavier day by day and I need all the support I can get from men who are like-minded in their thoughts and aims and ambitions to carry on at this time."

King Wants Majority of His Party

Mr. King, in apparent reference to the possibility of Quebec Liberals leaving the party in substantial numbers, said he would not carry on with the support of opposition groups alone. He wanted a substantial majority of his own party with him.

Canada faced anarchy at home while men fought overseas unless the House could "unite in reasonable measure to support an administration that can carry on at this time," said Mr. King. He compared the crisis to that faced by Sir John A. Macdonald in the pre-Confederation province of Canada when the people were divided on the issue of "representation by population."

Looking at his fellow ministers he declared himself prepared to step aside for any one who thought he could obtain greater confidence from the country. Looking to the opposition he asked each of the three leaders if he was prepared to take the responsibility of forming a government.

In his account of events leading up to crisis No. 1, the resignation of Col. Ralston Mr. King said on Aug. 7 there had been a request for 700 additional men for the forces in Italy. At that time in the presence of Col. Ralston the chiefs of staff assured the government providing those men would not affect the manpower situation.

He regretted no reply was made to representations which came following the Quebec conference that Canadian troops were not properly trained. He presumed Col. Ralston wished to be sure of the facts and on Oct. 13 from overseas Col. Ralston had cabled a reassurance about training.

Ralston's Recommendation.

On Oct. 18 Col. Ralston, having returned from overseas, recommended overseas conscription and portrayed a critical situation which might develop next year.

A movement arose in the country which would some day be exposed and condemned for total conscription. It created a situation the government had to face. When the cabinet was unable to agree Col. Ralston informed him almost every day that he would resign if the question was not settled. It appeared that other ministers would follow.

Air Minister Power, who was also Associate Defence Minister was ill so that he faced, in crisis No. 1, not only the possibility of having no defence minister but the loss of other ministers. It was when Col. Ralston's resignation was a matter of hours that he called in Gen. McNaughton who agreed to take on the responsibility.

"I took care to ask one colleague after the other would he take the responsibility that was mine," said Mr. King. "I asked the Minister of Defence himself, would he take the responsibility of heading a government and putting through that particular measure. I was told by him that he would not.

'Very Easy to Criticize'.

"It is very easy to criticize the government and put up opposite policies but unless men are prepared to back those policies by taking a responsible position and carrying them out they have no right to leave a ministry in a condition where the whole structure is certain to collapse."

Crisis No. 1 passed when Gen. McNaughton took over and attempted to get the reinforcements needed by the voluntary system. Crisis No. 2 came when as parliament assembled last week it was found that the reinforcements were not to be obtained in that way and again the cabinet was divided.

That crisis ended with the adoption of the order-in-council to apply conscription and involved Maj. Power's resignation.

Mr. King portrayed the action taken as consistent with his statements in 1940 when bill 80, authorizing the government to impose overseas service was passed. He said then one of the circumstances which might make conscription necessary was the need of supplying necessary reinforcements for the overseas army.

The policy was defined as "not necessarily conscription but conscription if necessary" and, he added, "necessary" meant "to the extent necessary."

Never Appeased Quebec or Any Other Part He Says.

Mr. King said he had never appeased Quebec or any other part of Canada. He has sought to make the position of Quebec understood and to protect Quebec from the unjust attacks sometimes made by persons in other parts of Canada.

Had it not been for the French-speaking people of Quebec Canada would not have remained under the British flag. Canada was a country of minorities and could not be governed without respect for minority rights.

During this war he had had to ask that redistribution, due following the 1941 census, be postponed and Quebec alone stood to lose by that action. His enactment of bill 80 was not appeasement of Quebec. It had started the split in the Liberal Party which would grow as a result of the latest action.

Not a Mandate

Mr. King said the "yes" majority in the plebiscite was not a mandate to carry out conscription as had been suggested by organizations such as the Canadian Legion. Rather the government was given authority, under bill 80 passed in 1942, to impose conscription for overseas if considered necessary.

At the Quebec Conference in September there had been no mention in discussions with chiefs of staff of the possible need of reinforcements such as to make overseas conscription necessary.

"I mention all this in order that the House may realize the impact of the shock that came upon the government a little later on, just as honorable members themselves must have felt the impact of the shock which has come to them in the last few days when they were told that they would have to consider this question of sending men across the seas by conscription at this stage of the war," said Mr. King.

Unrest Organized

As the cabinet debated the question "a measure of unrest was being organized the like of which has not been seen in the history of Canada before, nor even in a political campaign. One may condemn this movement, the day will come when it will be exposed and will be fully condemned."

Mr. King said he could not see that dissolving parliament would help the men at the front, but Col. Ralston had not been out of office a day when the papers asked if the prime minister was thinking of an election.

"Yes, I could have swept the whole province of Quebec, carried every seat in it. I could have carried seats from one end of this country to the other and I have not the least doubt that I could have come back to this parliament as Prime Minister as the result of an appeal in circumstances such as these."

Many Things to Consider

But there would have been two months of political warfare, while the international war was raging. He had to consider who he would call on to form an alternative cabinet. His cabinet colleagues were not ready to take the responsibility and "I do not know whether any gentlemen opposite would have been prepared to take it. I wonder if they would?"

Resignation would almost certainly be followed by dissolution as a Prime Minister could not hold office without supporters.

Gen. McNaughton appealed for voluntary enlistments at once and plans for further efforts were made by the cabinet.

But the appeal was not supported by the opposition. Instead of the appeal reaching the people they were dinned by the efforts "put forth by those who were determined they were going to have conscription no matter what the cause might be."

In this situation Mr. King said he decided to call parliament so members could share the responsibility of accepting the government's stand or rejecting it.

NO SALAD, NO DESSERT

In the east, people were still confused and fashion-ridden about serving salad. In some of the starchy eating places (before the war) they seemed to think it was the correct thing to serve the salad only when you were pretty well fed up and wondering whether you should linger to pack in 40 surplus calories in the form of dessert just in case you could get nothing more to eat for a day or two.

Whether Emily Post ordains it or not, serving the salad in the middle or at the end of a meal is wrong from the viewpoint of food nutrition and good health. The salad should come first in a well-balanced meal (whatever that may mean) and it should be required eating.

By a real or proper salad I mean, children, a dish of herbs, any kind or combination of greens, vegetables or relishes suitable to eat raw. To the dish may be added any kind of raw fruit that may be in season or available in fresh condition. So long as these essentials are complied with, it is a question of individual preference what condiment, seasoning or dressing to use.

From the nutrition and health viewpoint there should be a taboo against incorporating cooked vegetables or cooked fruits in salads.

This is no mere freak fancy. The fundamental purpose of salad in a meal is to supply much needed minerals and vitamins which are so largely lost from foods that are cooked—some of the vitamins are destroyed by oxidation during cooking, more are dissolved out and thrown away in the cooking water, and more than half of the mineral salts in fruits, greens and vegetables are dissolved out and lost when these foods are cooked in the usual way.

The good and sufficient reason why the salad should be served at the beginning, not at the end of the meal is manifestly to give the victims of malnutrition — and that means practically everybody in America today — a break to boop their intake of vitamins and minerals at least a little, lest they be lulled by the half-baked assurances of self-constituted authorities that "a reasonably varied diet provides all the vitamins and minerals one needs."

To parents of young children I recommend this general rule: Serve the salad first, and from the first let the youngsters learn that they must eat their salad if they want any dessert.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

To Flatten the Equator

I am 40. What worries me is that my stomach protrudes, although I weigh only 137 pounds. I look as though I had a little balloon under my girdle. I can pull my stomach in, but when I do so I can't breathe. Is there any exercise that would correct this? (Mrs. E. S.)

Answer—Yes, the movements described and illustrated in "The Last Brady Symphony"—for words and music send ten cents and stamped envelope bearing your address.

Draft and Stiff Neck

Does sitting in the draft from an electric fan cause stiff neck? (E. A.)

Answer—Too quick cooling of any muscle or group of muscles after active exercise may produce stiffness and lameness or soreness.

Fifteen Off in Thirty Days

In thirty days of the reducing regimen given in your pamphlet "How to Lose Weight" I have lost 14 1-2 pounds and feel more alive than I have felt for several years. Having passed my pamphlet to a too-plump relative I wonder if I may have another copy? (Mrs. S.M.)

Answer—I am glad to send the pamphlet "How to Lose Weight" to any reader who asks for it (not with a clipping) and incloses stamped pre-addressed envelope.

Disinfecting Dental Instruments

I use 3 percent to 5 percent compound solution of cresol to disinfect my dental instruments. Would be grateful for your opinion of the efficiency of this method. (——, D.D.S.)

Answer—I believe it is efficient for instruments that cannot be boiled or steam sterilized.

Save Your Teeth

I am 22, have son 3 years old. My teeth do not decay but are so soft, they just crumble—fillings never last long. What can I do to keep the teeth I have? (Mrs. T.E.J.)

Answer—Boop your calcium (milk, cheese, greens) intake, and vitamin D.

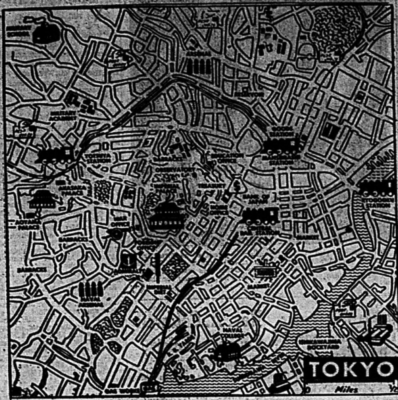
TOKYO CONSTANT TARGET OF ALLIED BOMBERS AS PACIFIC WAR INCREASES TEMPO



The day is not far off, according to Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of the U.S. Army Air Forces when bombers will take up the task of reducing Jap military and industrial targets on the home islands on the same scale that German industrial centres are now being bombed. Large scale bombing has already begun, with industrial targets in Tokyo, suffering. Key objectives in Tokyo are shown on the map.

Sky-Facts, Planets in Transits

(Contributed by Ottawa Centre, Royal Astronomical Society of Canada)

The planets Mercury and Venus occasionally pass between the earth and the sun and cross or transit the disk of the sun, from east to west, as round black spots. In 1629 Kepler predicted that Mercury would transit the sun, November 7, 1631. This was observed in Paris by Gassendi and he estimated the transit 4h. 49.5m. ahead of the computed time.

In 1651 a young Englishman journeyed to British India for the express purpose of witnessing the transit, November 3, of that year. Similar transits May 3, 1661, and November 7, 1677, were observed, the latter by Halley at St. Helena.

These early transits furnished data for correcting the accuracy of the planet's motion, but outside of that they were of little interest. In all these observations the surprise seemed to be that Mercury was such a minute spot on the sun's disk, giving evidence of greater distance of the planet than was expected.

In the case of the planet Venus, however, transits are more important as they furnish the astronomer with a method of determining the solar distance. The planet can be readily seen with the naked eye, using a suitably colored glass, at the time of one of these shadow transits. The earliest transit to be observed, in 1639, was seen by two persons only, Horrox and Crabtree, living in northern England near Preston.

• •

A word regarding young Horrox will convey some idea of the handicaps young students of promise labored under during this period. Born in 1619, Horrox entered Emmanuel College, Cambridge, when he was thirteen; he apparently was of great ability. Three years later, 1635, he was engaged as a tutor for a brief period. From 1637 till his death in 1640, he was a curate at an Anglican church at Hoole, Lancashire. Horrox devoted all his spare time to the study of astronomy. There were no public observatories in England at this time and astronomical literature was difficult to obtain. Especially was this true of the treatise of the two great astronomers of the continent, Tycho Brahe and Kepler. We can appreciate the success of Horrox all the more when we realize the difficulties that confronted him.

By some good fortune a set of the planetary tables of the Belgian astronomer Lansberg and also of the great Kepler fell into his hands. Kepler in 1629 predicted that there would be a transit of Venus in 1631 and not again till 1761. It was while checking his own observations with the tables of these other astronomers, that he made the discovery that a small error had occurred and that a transit of Venus would occur November 29, 1639.

• •

The delight of Horrox was unbounded; he at once made certain of his observations and checked the time of transit as November 29, shortly after 3 o'clock in the afternoon. His friend Crabtree in Manchester was advised of his finding and strongly urged him if at all possible to observe this phenomenon.

This was in October, just a few weeks before the transit, and little time remained to make all possible preparations from his meagre equipment. Saturday, November 28, he observed the sun, just as a precaution, and on Sunday the 29th as his clerical duties permitted. It is stated in his biography that he rushed from his duties of a higher order just in time to see the transit take place.

His friend Crabtree had many interruptions due to clouds, but managed to confirm Horrox's results as to relative position of the sun and Venus. From these observations he corrected the planet's elements, estimated the angular diameter of Venus, also the angular diameter of the earth as seen from the sun, and deducted a value for the distance of the earth from the sun to be 15,000 semi-diameters of the earth.

• •

This value was received at this period with serious doubts, as the general impression was that for the sun to give so much light and heat, such a distance was far too great. This value is about 65 per cent of the generally accepted value, but it has the distinction of being the first determination of the solar distance from actual observation.

The transits of June, 1761, and 1769, also of December 1875 and 1882, were extensively observed by scientific expeditions sent out by the governments of France, Germany, Britain and the United States. Large sums of money were spent on these expeditions and although the values of the solar distance determined were gratifying, it is now felt that other methods have been found to be more trustworthy. —(Ottawa Citizen.)

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was putting cigars in his humidor with a loving expression, and ma said, Did you know Hannah Jefferies son is a poet, William?

Has he got long hair? pop said, and ma said, No, but he's a real poet, I mean he doesn't do any particular kind of work for a living. I met him at Hannah's house this afternoon after the bridge game, and when I found out he was a poet I mentioned what a high regard I've always had for Tennyson, and would you believe it, William, Hannah's son made a scoffing sound and Hannah quickly explained that he belongs to the modern school of free verse. Is that the kind of poetry that doesn't rime, William, ma said.

That partly describes it, pop said. To be strictly modern and absolutely free, it shouldn't have too much sense, either. Now for example, suppose young Jefferies had written The rose is red, the violet's blue, sugar is sweet and so are you. That's one of the most haunting and sincere poems ever written, but young Jefferies would call it corny. He would of written it entirely differently, pop said, and ma said, How else could it be written for land sakes?

I'll recite it for you in free verse, pop said. Which he did, saying, The rose is not without color. It can be any one of a dozen shades, some of them rather nice, if you like those shades. But let's say it's red. Now the violet is different. It's limited to being blue. But that doesn't make me feel bad at all, because blue seems just about right for a violet. Now take sugar. Thanks, 2 lumps please. Ah, sugar is sweet. It has nothing on you.

Being the end, and pop said, Do you see the difference?

I dont believe it, ma said, and pop said, That's okay, young Jefferies probably wouldn't even believe it himself after he wrote it.

Being the end of the subject.

Canada Will Prosper Thru Sound Leadership Y.P.U. Group Told

The program of Holloway Street Y.P.U., held on Monday evening, was in charge of the Christian Missions group.

Norma Arkles opened the meeting with a carol practice. Following the business period, Isobel Richardson, Margie Allen, and Gwen Burley led in the Worship Service which carried out the 'Missions' theme.

Guest speaker of the evening was Mrs. J. M. Wood, president of Bridge Street W.A., who was introduced by Lois Liddle. Mrs. Wood chose as her subject, 'Leaders of Tomorrow'.

"You are the people who can make Canada great in every aspect of her life', said the speaker. She then took the young people on an imaginary trip to Western Canada, where through vivid word pictures she sought to instil a love of the country which has so many potentialities and of which you will be the leaders'.

Mrs. Wood described the vast grain fields of the prairie, the beautiful sunsets, the dangerous blizzards, and then gave her impression of the Rocky Mountains, where one sees God expressed at every turn'.

'There is a bright future for Canada', she said, 'but it will be bright only if the leadership is placed where it rightly belongs,—in God'.

Citing the lives of Peter and Paul as examples of what lives consecrated to God can accomplish for good, she urged the young people to be disciples of Jesus that the brotherhood of man which He strove to establish, and the pattern of which He laid down in the 'Sermon on the Mount' may become a reality and God may have 'dominion from sea to sea' as the founders of Canada envisioned.

Barbara Kyle then sang 'Always'. She was accompanied by Lois Harper.

The thanks of the group to Mrs. Wood and Miss Kyle was expressed by Beth Robertson.

Canadian Nurses Happy When Busy

By MARGARET ECKER
(CP War Correspondent)

Brussels, Nov. 28, (CP)—Chief of Canadian nurses in Europe is an animated, intelligent little person, Major Mary Schaffner of Toronto and Halifax.

Major Mary Shaffner, who is probably one of the smallest nurses here in the trim blue uniform has seen service in North Africa and Sicily before she came to the Western front.

She considers it all a great experience but essentially a job to be done and she doesn't talk much of her adventures, except to comment that the Sahara was extremely cold at night and hot in the daytime.

"Conditions in Africa weren't easy, neither were they in Italy", she said. "But the girls were marvellous through all the campaigns. I think that they are more adaptable to living conditions than men are".

She's proud, naturally, of the work the Canadian nurses have done in France as they chased the front line through Normandy, France, Belgium and now almost into Holland.

"They have worked hard in this theatre", said their matron. "Until only recently they lived in tents with all the discomforts of that kind of life, but they have all been amazingly well, and most of them never looked healthier".

Anyone who has been with Canadian hospitals over here knows that working conditions first in the heat and the flies, later the rain and the mud, weren't easy.

"But the sisters never tell me of their difficulties. They aren't the type who complain", said Miss Schaffner. "They are happiest when they are busy. And when they are really busy, with a convoy of wounded coming in, it's hard to make them even rest. They want to keep on at their jobs".

"Most of them come from large modern hospitals in Canada with the most scientific equipment. It was quite a change for them working here with little water, no heating, often no light".

Canadian nurses now serve with casualty clearing stations which are often only two or three miles from the front line and the sound of guns is never away from their ears.

"But the girls seem to work well under fire", said their officer. "They enjoy the hectic life with a C.C.S., they know what a valuable job they are doing there".

Since the nurses first came to France in the middle of July only two have returned to England.

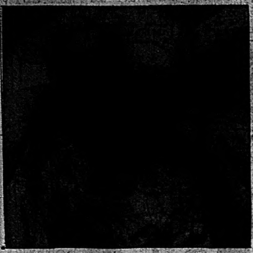
Got a Date for Tonight? Here's How to Doll Up Fast



A thorough cleansing with cream smooths out tired lines.

By HELEN FOLLETT

YOU'VE HAD a tough day, full of bustle and hurry and little irritations in the office, and you are going out to dinner with your very best fellow. You dash home and have precisely one hour in which to pull yourself together, get into your very best duds. This is the evening that you want to look fresh, feel gay and be happy.

Well, well! You're not getting a good start as fatigue is stamped upon your brow and you're ready to fly off the handle. But there's no time to waste. Put on your shower cap to preserve your precious hair-do, cream your face and step into a warm bath, the warmer the better.

Relaxing Bath.

Close your eyes and the doors of your mind. You're going to forget the day's mix-ups and unpleasant contacts. You're going to soak the weariness out of your bones. After a scrubbing with the bath brush have an alternating hot and cold shower, hot while you count 15, cold while you count 15. Then a brisk rub down and a quick friction with a bath tonic.

Don't you feel better already? You bet you do.

Slip into your bath robe, give your face a thorough creaming, first removing the emollient you put on before bathing, using fresh cream slapping and patting it into the flesh.

Take a heavy wash cloth, dip it in ice cold water, place over your eyes, then lie down for 15 minutes. You'll still have plenty of time for prettying.

Use of Foundation.

If you want to be unafraid of the piercing lights of the evening or the piercing inspection of your worst enemy, use a foundation cosmetic before laying on the high lights. It should be a tone darker than your skin.

Apply rouge high on the temples, eyelids and cheek bones. If you do your painting on a low plane, you're going to look fatigued before the merry evening is finished. Be fussy when applying your lipstick.

There you are! Arrange the hair, into clothes! And there's the doorbell ringing now!

FASHION FLASHES

A BIG ROUND of applause at a recent fashion showing greeted a magnificent evening frock of black silk slipper satin brocaded in velvet orchids which are garlanded across one shoulder and down to the hemline—the other shoulder bare. For a final touch of the lovely unattainable, a muff of real orchids.

Something different in the way of a color alliance is black with brown, seen frequently of late. Black silk crepe embroidered in bronze sequins is one expression, while a black wool jersey sports frock saddle stitched in brown is another phase.

There's an air about the coat wrapped and held to the figure that is elegant, provided that the right accessories are worn with it. Gold or gray woollen is used for a wrap-around coat made with a full, thick collar of nutria that continues in a wide flange down the front, to be held to one side.

Something that goes with anything from a plain, casual wool frock to the most magnificent evening frock is a cape of black broadtail made with tiny upstanding collar and a hem that is curved to the back where it is very full and rippled. We saw it in fabulous Russian broadtail and in good old American broadtail—which is really processed lamb—and it is good in any version, despite the tremendous price extremes.

Johnston Couple Celebrate 33rd Anniversary

Johnstown — With the majority of their sons and daughters at home for the occasion, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Harry, Johnstown, celebrated the 33rd anniversary of their wedding on Sunday.

The event was celebrated with a chicken dinner with fourteen grandchildren seated at one table and the eleven children of Mr. and Mrs. Harry at another. Another son, Vernon is in Italy serving with the Saskatchewan Light Infantry.

Persent were Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Harry and three children, Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Nobes, and three children, Belleville; Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Lewis, and one child, of the Acme Cheese Factory; Mrs. Vernon Harry and one child, of Bloomfield and Everett, Arnold, Norma and Laura Harry who are living at home.

The event was a delightful affair and Mr. and Mrs. Harry were the recipients of many congratulations.

TO RETU[illegible] SOON

London, Nov. 28 — (CP Cable) — Canada's newest Victoria Cross winner, Maj. David V. Currie of Medicine Hat, Alta., and Owen Sound, Ont., will return to the Dominion on leave, probably within a few days, it was learned here.

The 32-year-old Major, who won the Empire's highest award for gallantry for blocking and holding one of the main German escape routes out of the Falaise pocket in Normandy last August, will fly to England from the continent. Probably he will be decorated by the King at a Buckingham Palace investiture in the near future.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Visiting Her Fiance's Parents

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

At Christmas-time my boy friend is going to take me home with him to meet his parents. Although I have never met his mother she said she would write me an invitation.

1. What would be an appropriate acceptance letter in answer to her invitation?

2. His family lives several hundred miles from my home. Is it proper for me to pay my train-fare?

3. Would you suggest taking a gift for his mother and father. If so, what do you think would be most appropriate?

4. What should I write in my thank-you note to his parents when I return home?

Kate

1. Your answer to her invitation might read something like this:

Dear Mrs. Wells,

How very kind and hospitable you are to invite me to spend the Christmas holidays with you and your family! Your invitation made me very happy, and very proud too, to think that you would take me, a stranger to you, "on faith." I am delighted to accept your gracious invitation, and will arrive at the time you tell me is most convenient for you.

Bob has told me such charming things about you and his father that I am thrilled at the thought of knowing you both . . . I wish Christmas were tomorrow!

My dearest greetings to you and your husband, and my deepest thanks for your goodness to me, and for your hospitable invitation.

Sincerely.

2. Yes.

3. Since your visit is to be at Christmas-time, I certainly do think that you should take gifts, gifts of some importance, since there will undoubtedly be an exchange of Christmas gifts at the family Christmas party. How about taking your hostess as handsome a purse as you can afford, personalized with her initials? Or perhaps some sheer white handkerchiefs, embroidered with her initials? Or a vanity case? And for the father I suggest a wallet, stamped inside with his full name. Also if there are any brothers and sisters, you should take gifts to them too, so you won't feel embarrassed at being empty-handed at the Christmas-gift-giving.

4. In your thank-you note to your hostess (your letter should be addressed to her), you thank first for her hospitality and kindness and thoughtfulness to you; say with particular enthusiasm how much you enjoyed every minute of your visit, how much you enjoyed knowing the family, meeting their friends; and then, and most important thank for special features of your visit, special plans for your entertainment.

A Tea-Musicale

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am giving a tea-musicale on a Sunday afternoon soon, in honor of a well-known pianist. It is to be held in our church parlors. What do you think would be the proper dress for me to wear . . . a long dinner dress? Or would a nice street-length dress be better taste?

A.E.

Since your tea is to be held in the church parlors I think it would be more appropriate for you to wear a dressy afternoon dress, street-length. And a small hat, of a type harmonizing with your dress.

Questions...Some Good, Some Not

Most questions are friendly ones that show a pleasant interest in the other person. But some are barbed with inquisitiveness. The first kind make you popular, for being interested in people is the first step toward making you liked. The second kind make you...dreaded, for people will side-step you as you force them to side-step your misguided questions.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Twilight Has Terrors for the Lonesome Young Army Wife.

There used to be an old song: "I'm afraid to go home in the dark". But if you're a lonesome young army wife with your man overseas, are you afraid of the dark in your own home? A good many girls are.

The following letter is typical and offers a solution:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"I'm an Army wife, 20 years old, with a six months old baby whom my husband has never seen. Keeping things going during the daytime—bottle-washing, formula making, cleaning, washing diapers, etc. —takes my mind off of what may be happening to Fred over there. But when night comes, oh, my!

"My parents who live quite far away suggest I break up and come to them. But Fred had such pride in our little home, the furniture all paid for, that I just can't bear to go back. I'm lucky to belong to a wonderful church which has a well-run nursery for babies and small children. That's my only contact with the world. I go to church Sunday morning, park the baby in the nursery, and after services the members get together and visit.

"In this way I met several girls who have the same problem as myself. Their only contact with the outside world was through our church. Gradually five or six of us drifted together, and it seemed all of us had the same spooky horror of night shutting in that I had. There was nothing to do after we'd written to our G.I. Joes but watch the baby sleep.

"One of the girls suggested we form a club to take care of two babies while two mothers went to a movie. Before we knew it, we had ten members, all belonging to our church. We didn't want to increase the number because we wanted the same kind of girls we were, all with young babies who stood things during the day but got the blues when night fell.

"We've had this little club for the past six weeks. It's worked out wonderfully, and I'm just suggesting it through your column to other war wives with babies, who hate to see the dark creep up on their little home when their soldier husbands are away."

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Rhythmic Movement Improves the Figure.

You women soldiers who are fighting for the cause of Beauty! How do you march? Why not emulate the methods of foot soldiers who know that marching in rhythm enables them to cover more miles with less fatigue? The average housewife trots a considerable distance while attending to the duties of her menage each day. She should not shamble, nor move with quick, jerky movements. She should carry herself correctly. In the long run, good posture will mean a lot to her. It will help her to retain her youthful figure. It will serve as an insurance against overweight. Anyhow, why slouch? Slouching pays no beauty dividends.

Girls in uniform look snappy. They feel soldierly, take pride in good appearance. The uniform brings the thought of posture and carriage to mind; one strives to be worthy of smart attire. WACs exercise under the supervision of a physical training director. They keep in form. There's no reason why feminine civilians should not give themselves a fifteen-minute workout every day. Calesthenics, carried on week after week, promote health and well being. They put ginger in the heels. They sweep gloomy cobwebs out of the mind.

Every woman who supports adipose baggage could have avoided loading herself with bumps if she had kept her musculature strong, stuck to a balanced, non-fattening diet.

By carrying the body beautifully, and using rhythmic movements, muscles work with the least output of energy. There is no extra strain, as fibres are functioning in the manner for which they were intended. Muscle strain produces fatigue. Fatigue puts its signs upon the countenance, slows up circulation, interferes with appetite and digestion. The woman who walks with shoulders forward, abdomen protruding, chest slumped in, is carrying a heavy burden—herself. The spirit of youth departs. She is settled; and to be settled is to sit on the sidelines as the dance goes on.

Keep your shoulders in a yoke-line balance with your body. Don't get kinks in your spinal column; keep it straight and extended, with a neat nip-in at the waistline. Maintain this pose at all times, when sitting, standing or walking. It will soon be a natural attitude; you will never give it up. It will impart chic to your clothes. You'll get a reputation for being a lady of fashion.

By contracting the abdominal muscles, you strengthen them, and you keep the waistline trim.

Step lightly. A step should be one and one half times the length of the foot. Girls who scurry along, taking little mincing steps, are bound to have the head far forward, and the shoulders as well.

Keep the chest lifted. Let the arms swing easily. Don't lope. Loping is a habit with some of our young things, and it is not pretty.

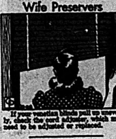
WANTS BOY RETURNED

Toronto, Nov. 28 — (CP) — Nine-year-old Richard Marlowe has been missing from his home in the Toronto suburbs since July 18 and last night his mother issued an appeal which said she was sure the boy was alive and "if someone has borrowed Richard, won't they please return him now?"

Wife Preservers



If your venetian blinds pull up unevenly, check the cord adjuster, which may need to be adjusted or replaced.

Ready for a happy season is a short-skirted dinner dress of white satin, its dulled surface threaded with silver. Out on shirtwaist lines, the sumptuous fabric is most effective.

The Marry Go Round

Tabloid Philosophy

Love is like seasickness. The moment the effects of one romance wear off, a girl forgets all the pangs and suffering and is keen to sail right into another emotional adventure.

Many a girl is clever enough to start a man's imagination working—but not wise enough to stop right there and let it go on doing its own work. If she were, she would be irresistible.

The one long struggle of a man's life is getting his shoes off at night and putting them on again in the morning; the one long struggle of a woman's life is wiping her complexion off at night and putting it on again in the morning. There may be variety in other things, but not in these.

The greatest objection to the teen-age girl who insists on "living her own life" is that she is so apt to become a dangerous banana-peel on the paths of other people's lives.

One reason why a man's love for his hobby or his favorite sport lasts so much longer than his love for the average girl is probably because he can love them whenever he is in the mood—and forget them when he isn't. They never call up to find out if he's thinking of them or why he hasn't been around.

It's real love when you can think of counting his laundry or putting a mustard plaster on his chest as an "emotional experience".

Some men take a lifetime to rise from poverty to riches; others can do it in about four highballs.

No serviceman should forget that many a man has started out to "string" a girl and gotten so tangled up that the string ended in a marriage-tie.

In love, a man loses first his head, then his vanity, then his poise—and last of all, his heart.

Half of love is worse than none.

CANADIENS SHOW GREAT STRENGTH BEHIND BLUE LINE

Bill Durnan Has Best Goal Average of Any Goalie in League

By The Canadian Press

Montreal Canadiens' rise to leadership of the National Hockey League underlines the importance of defensive strength in a winning campaign.

So far in his sophomore year cool Bill Durnan has let only 29 pucks into his net in 13 games for an average of 2.23 a game, which would have been a creditable figure before the days of high-scoring wartime hockey. And he is only one rampart of a fine defensive citadel, with outposts capably manned by Butch Bouchard, Glen Harmon, Wilf Fields and Frank Eddolls.

The Habitants' nearest competitors in defensive excellence are the second-place Toronto Maple Leafs, whose Frank McCool has been beaten 41 times in 13 contests for a 3.15 average. Right behind is Detroit's Conny Dion who is letting them by at a 3.25 rate, with 39 goals in 12 games.

Thus by "goals against" yardstick of effectiveness, the six N. H. L. teams rate exactly in order of their current standings.

List the teams in order of scoring punch and it's a different story. Detroit leads with 56 goals in 12 games for a 4.67 average, followed by Chicago, 4.18; Toronto, 4.00; Boston, 3.91; Montreal, 3.62 and New York, 3.20.

ST. MIKES PLAY IN MOTOR CITY ON SATURDAY

Junior O.H.A. Race Shaping Up Into Two - Club Affair

By The Canadian Press

St. Michael's of Toronto again showed marked superiority last night at Port Colborne with a 9-6 victory for their third straight win in the Junior "A" series of the O. H. A. to put them on top in the Eastern Group standing with six points against the four points held by Oshawa Generals in second spot. Neither the students nor Gens have lost an engagement thus far but the break-up should come when St. Mikes travel to the Motor City next Saturday.

For the recreationists it was their third successive defeat and it put them well into the cellar of the Western Group which is headed by St. Catharines Falcons.

Blute had a field day for the collegians with a total of three goals while Turik turned in two tallies, the balance of four being divided between Thompson, McCormack, Gravelle and Sloan.

Bowen, for Ports, also did well for himself in registering three of the losers' six scores, the other snipers being Latnosk, Matheson and Morgan.

Sport Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.
Associated Press Sport Writer

New York, Nov. 28 —(AP)— Earl Ruby, Louisville Courier-Journal sports editor, nominates Tennessee's John Barnhill as the coach of the year . . . "Barnhill came from no team at all to the Rose Bowl in one year," says Ruby. "A year ago he was teaching calisthenics to students. Today he is teaching his Vols new tricks for those U. S. C. Trojans." . . . And Scoop Latimer of the Greenville, S. C., news suggests: "Miami may wonder if it picked a lemon for the Orange Bowl if Georgia Tech's defeat by Notre Dame was the acid test." . . . Probably won't care, Scoop, so long as there's a juicy gate.

Wrong Direction

Lieut. Joe Maniaci of the Bainbridge Navy Commodores tells this one about a golf game with Jimmy Demaret, Bob Hope and Bing Crosby when he visited the West Coast with Chicago Bears . . . On the first hole, Hope asked his caddie the distance, teed up his ball and proceeded to slice it a mile out of bounds. On the second he again asked, then hooked beyond the boundary . . . Each time Bob decided there wasn't any use playing out the hole after such a bad start . . . On the third tee, Hope again asked his caddie how far it was to the cup . . . "Mistah Hope," replied the youngster, "you won't want to know how long this hole is; you want to know how wide."

'Y' Basketball

The local Y.M.C.A. have now four Ontario Basketball Association entries; intermediate and junior in the men's series and the some in the ladies', Eastern Ontario section.

The Girls' teams practice Monday and Wednesday at the Y.M.C.A. from 6 to 8.

A four-team House League is now in operation in the Intermediate and Business Girls' Section on Thursday evenings in connection with their regular class at the "Y".

Roy Menary, an experienced basketball player and for the past few years an O.B.E. referee will coach the intermediate men. Tom Burnett a senior player of experience will coach the juvenile boys. Ed Shortt former physical director will coach the ladies' teams.

Those interested in basketball and desirous of playing will please attend the practices or get in touch with J. E. Shortt the general secretary at the Y.M.C.A. without delay.

PRINZ EUGEN SAID DAMAGED

London, Nov. 27—(CP)—The German heavy cruiser Prinz Eugen has been damaged and taken to a German Baltic port, the Paris radio said today, quoting Swedish reports. The Russians recently reported damaging a German cruiser attempting to evacuate the German garrison from Svorbe peninsula and the Paris broadcast suggested this was possibly the 10,000-ton Prinz Eugen.

THOUGHTFUL OPPONENT

Chatham, Nov. 27 (CP)—When Ald. Steele, mayoralty candidate in the Dec. 4 civic elections arrived late in court of Revision on the Municipal Voters' List, he found that his opponent, Mayor C. Lorne Goddard, had already vouched for names proferred for the list by the alderman. "I'll have to make him my campaign manager," commented Ald. Steele.

Toronto, Nov. 28 — (CP) — With all the talk about rule changes and whatnot — especially the whatnot — in Canadian football, it's interesting to get the reaction of a real expert of the game. With that in mind, Dink (Montreal Gazette) Carroll went to the oracle in the person of the one and only Frank, alias Shag, Shaughnessy.

Shag, who started the forward pass movement in the Canadian game, thinks that the Canadian and American games are getting closer together all the time, bue he wants to see teams this side of the line retain the single in their scoring, and keep the punt as an effective offensive and scoring weapon. By the same token, he thinks the American game could well adopt the single without losing anything by it.

Another innovation he suggests is to drop the 12th man, "particularly in these days of manpower shortages."

Cause Celebre:

Some background on the Ezinicki case, not previously aired for the public, was revealed by Andy Lytle of the Toronto Star.

According to Andy, the fiery former Oshawa General and Toronto Leaf was given some papers by a non-com when he reported after his military callup, and told to sign them without stopping to read the official phraseology. Bill refused and the documents were more than slightly ravelled in the ensuing argument.

When the matter was investigated, Lytle says, Ezinicki was exonerated and the corporal reprimanded for his part in the affair. The Star sports editor is of the opinion the whole thing never would have occurred if Ezinicki hadn't been a prominent sports figure, and hence fair game for the hue and cry that attended his military "arrest" and later enlistment.

HAL NEWHOUSER MOST VALUABLE PLAYER IN LOOP

First Time Pitcher Has Been Chosen for Role for Good Many Years

New York, Nov. 28 — (AP)—Harold (Lefty) Newhouser, brilliant Detroit pitcher, today was named the most valuable player in the American League in 1944 by a four-vote margin over team-mate Paul (Dizzy) Trout in the annual balloting of a 24-man committee of the Baseball Writers' Association.

The 23-year-old native of Detroit, who won 29 games for the Tigers in one of the most thrilling pennant races in baseball history, received 236 votes to 232 for Trout. Trout, however, picked up 10 first place ballots to seven for Newhouser, who pulled ahead by polling 10 seconds and six thirds.

Vernon (Junior) Stephens of the pennant-winning St. Louis Browns, whose 165 runs batted in led the circuit, finished third with 193 points. The slugging shortstop was named on four first-place ballots.

Newhouser became the first southpaw and the third hurler to qualify for the most valuable designation in the long history of the American League award. Washington's Walter Johnson (twice) and Spurgeon Chandler of the 1943 Yankees were the others so honored.

The six-foot 1 3/4-inch former sandlotter also is the fourth Tiger player to be named. The others are Ty Cobb, who received the first award in 1911, Hank Greenberg (twice) and Charlie Gehringer. He is the first member of a non-pennant winner to be selected since Jimmy Foxx of the 1938 Boston Red Sox.

C.A.H.A. Rule On Discharged Servicemen Status

Toronto, Nov. 28 — (CP) — New regulations regarding discharged servicemen were discussed at an informal meeting of officers of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association here last night and will be presented to the C.A.H.A. executive for addition to the present rules, W. A. Hewitt, register-treasurer of the Association said today.

The new rulings make servicemen discharged eligible to play in any series of the C.A.H.A. in their age category. These men will be regarded as free agents and will be entitled to select which club they wish to play for.

Clubs which have already registered the maximum number of players will be permitted to replace one or more of their players by men released from service. Also included in the proposed regulations is a clause allowing players on leave awaiting discharge to be considered as discharged for the purpose of the proposed regulation.

The regulation does not permit men on furlough to play for C.A.H.A. clubs, and such servicemen who are property of professional hockey teams shall revert to those clubs, unless they have been re-instated in the C.A.H.A.

What's Doing in Sport

Tom Forgie of the Hershey Bears continued to lead with 22 points in individual scoring, according to the statistics of the American Hockey League issued last night at New Haven by president Maurice Podoloff. Bob Gracie of Pittsburgh was runner-up with 19 while Tom Burlington of Cleveland, Len Halderson of Buffalo and Hector Pozzo of Hershey were tied for third place with 18 points.

The Associated Press poll of 82 grid experts to determine the outstanding college team in the United States voted Army as the best of the lot, gave Navy the runner-up spot and picked Ohio State third. The majority of specialists picked Army to beat Navy in the big game at Baltimore Saturday.

Leslie M. O'Connor, secretary to the late Kenesaw M. Landis for many years, intimated at Chicago last night he would decline to accept the nomination as baseball commissioner if he were offered the post at the winter meeting of the National and American Leagues at Chicago Dec. 11-12. "It's a killer," he said.

Roger Bedard, 19-year-old left winger who last year played with Montreal Royals of the Quebec Senior Hockey League, joined Toronto Maple Leafs on their week-end trip to Montreal and will turn out with the National Hockey League club this week, it was announced last night. Bedard will probably appear on the third line when Leafs play New York Rangers here Saturday night.

The seven clubs in the American Hockey League have voted 4-3 against a proposal to combine the eastern and western divisions of the loop and the two groups will continue for this season, the winners of each to engage in the post-season playoffs.

CASUAL COMMENT

The attractive blonde took off her clothes and climbed on to a wheel-table. The nurse covered her up with a sheet, trundled the table into the hall, and left her while she went back to get instructions.

Presently down the hall came a man clothed in white. He paused as he came to the girl, lifted the sheet, dropped it, and proceeded on his way. Behind him came another white-clad figure, who followed the same routine. A third figure appeared. Lifting the sheet he stared intently.

"For heaven's sake," cried the nervous patient, "when are you going to operate on me?"

The white-clad figure carefully replaced the sheet. "Darned if I know, lady," he said. "We're just the painters here."

A Fair Description.

The following is a story recently used by Arthur Daly, in the New York Times, and should be enjoyed by Jack Doran, Red Townsend and a few other football addicts. Art relates his yarn as follows:

"This is a story Stout Steve Owen occasionally tells, the report given by a Texas cowpuncher to his fellow-cowboys who had sent him to town to find out what the mysterious game of football was like. He returned popeyed and described it thusly:

"Fellers, this football is a caution. Here's how the gol-dang thing started off. They's a bunch of fellers in funny rigs out on a big field and one guy with white pants totin' a big bladder that's been blowed up and kivvered with cowhide. Well, these fellers spread out all over the field and White Pants puts the bladder on the ground. Then one feller comes a-runnin' and gives that bladder the durndest kick, clean up in the air. When it comes down they put it on the ground again.

"Then one big feller walks up to the bladder and bends over it like he's gonna pick it up. He hardly no more gits his hands on it when a little feller comes a creepin' up behind him, all bent over. This little feller gits closer and all of a sudden, he bites the big feller—and it turns into the gol-dangest fight you ever saw in yore life."

Around the Town.

Now that Jack Doran's St. Mike's "Irish" have the city senior six-man and Bay of Quinte senior Interscholastic rugby championships tucked away in the bag, all that's left is the junior city six-man crown . . . . Leading this pack is Red Townsend's Belleville Collegiate sextette, a game out in front of the Irish . . . In their initial meeting the "Collegians" won 12 to 7 on Oct. 30th, the final game is slated for Wednesday afternoon when B.C.I. can cinch the junior flag by repeating the dose of Oct. 30th. . . . An Irish win tomorrow would force a third and deciding meeting. . . . Skipper Townsend's squad wil be minus their rollicking end, Johnnie Rollins, who is on the injured list following last week's football game—Niagara Falls Collegiate won the senior COSSA rugby title by beating Peterborough C.I. 26 to 5 in a sudden death game at Toronto last Saturday. . . . Coach Jack Doran's St. Michael's "Irish" might do worse than play Peterborough C.I. an exhibition game "just for curiousity" . . . . Jim Ellis, Peterborough's well-known hockey playing coach, was in the city over the weekend and surprised because of the lack of interest in the furtherment of the game here. "We're really in the business of keeping the game alive in Peterborough," admitted Jim.

Remember When.

Georges Vesina, hockey's peerless goalkeeper, took his position in the Montreal Les Canadiens' nets for the last time in his ice career 19 years ago tonight. One of the greatest net-minders of all time, Vesina had a temperature of 102 and suffered sharp pains in his side which caused him to retire after the first period. He died March 28th, 1926. In his hey day he was known as "The Old Cucumber" of the net-minding business.

And Why Not?

Now that Matchmaker Frank Tunney has tossed caution to the winds in favor of team wrestling at the Market Street sports palace tomorrow night wouldn't he be better advised to employ two referees for the battle royal that is bound to ensue with Billie Watson and Tom Collins meeting Ivan Rasputin and Al Dunlop? After all who could expect one official to control a quartette of muscle-benders like the above outfit? It just isn't being done this season, folks. Tunney says the fans will more than hate Chief Thundercloud, his new full-blooded Indian grappler, who meets Joe Christie.

Klem Palms Wagner.

Bill Klem, the Old Arbitrator of baseball, calls Marty Marion of the Cardinals the equal of Honus Wagner in fielding at shortstop, but in all other respets the former National League umpire, who saw Honus in his prime, declares the Pittsburgh infielder was Marty's superior. "I'll have to admit," Klem said at his home in Miami Beach, Fla., when asked to compare the two, "that Marion handles himself just as well as Wagner did in the field. Of course, at the bat, Marion is no Wagner and indeed, few were. Old Honus had it all over him there. And at running bases he was a master, where Marion isn't. Honus' size used to scare the opposition, too. You know, the first year Marion was up there, I watched him play and really felt sorry for him. He couldn't do anything right. But the next year I was so impressed I had to tell him: 'Son, you're the most improved ball player I ever did see.' And what a shortstop he is now!"

Durham, England — (CP)—The Duchess of Kent made her first trip down a mine when she visited the Horden Colliery in Durham, Britain's largest coal workings.

SEE HIM SMILIN'

Judging from the above picture Al "Bunny" Dunlop is chuckling for no other reason than the fact he is teamed with Ivan Rasputin, the mad Russian, in a team wrestling bout at the Hume Arena Wednesday night. This pair of ring ruffians meet "Whipper Billie" Watson and "Irish Tom" Collins, who won favor of the fans last week by going to Watson's rescue when he was in difficulty. It will doubtless be the most interesting evening of wrestling seen at the local palace de sport this year.

For good measure Promoter Tunney signed Chief Thundercloud, a full-blooded Iroquois Indian, to meet Joe Christie while the show opens with Bill Stack tangling with Jim Burke.

BEURLING TO WED

Montreal, Nov. 27—(CP)—Flt. Lt. George (Buzz) Beurling, Canada's ace of the aerial defense of Malta, disclosed Saturday that he is to be married "some time before Dec. 15," and at the same time revealed that a stomach injury has washed him out of any future flying.

The bride will be Miss Diana Whittall, Vancouver debutante whom he met on the West Coast three years ago and during a tour organized by the Canadian Government following his return from Malta. Miss Whittall is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman R. Whittall of Vancouver and granddaughter of Sir James Whittall. The wedding will take place in Montreal.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 543
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

How some bridge players do it is a puzzle. But they seem to get along with a brag and a drone and a hunk of air.

Stick to this hand:

♠ Q 3
♥ A K Q J 10 8 6 2
♦ A
♣ A 6

In a contest where all the tables played the same hands, one player opened this hand with five hearts. When asked why, he said he did not believe in the modern slam conventions.

He and his partner were using the Bullock system. With a strong hand, their opener starts with a bid that shows the total number of tricks he can take all alone.

In answer thereto, if partner holds enough cinch tricks to help make a slam, he goes there. Without slam help, partner passes and the contract is played at a bid of five.

Of course, such players will not tolerate any discussion as to how many contracts they lose by one trick. Nor will they admit that a grand slam with them is too often a stab in the dark.

That is similar to a method advocated more than a dozen years ago by a foreign team. I did not stand up under competition after the modern slam conventions were invented.

Some players of today are experimenting with a five bid in still another way. With them, a bid of five asks partner to go to a small slam if he has two aces. But not as an opening five bid.

That is an effort to evade ace-and-king showing conventions. Mostly it is employed by players who, with a freak hand, invite a slam when they do not have two aces and a king of their own.

With a hand containing 11 tricks, it is now unnecessary to start with a five bid. Use a lower bid with a signal that keeps the bidding open. You can use a five bid later, if advisable.

Even when you show the proof, someone thinks you're still a goof.

BILL COWLEY AWAY IN FRONT OF SCORING RACE

Position No Mean Strange to Fast-Travelling Boston Centre

Montreal, Nov. 28 — (CP) — Boston's apparently-ageless Bill Cowley is all alone at the top of the National Hockey League scoring race, a position that is by no means strange to the man who has won scoring honors twice in the past and come close on several other occasions.

Official league records released today showed Cowley with 22 points, on eight goals and 14 assists, for a two-point margin over his nearest challengers. Chicago's Clint Smith and Canadiens' Toe Blake held down second spot together, Blake with nine goals and 11 assists, and Smith with six goals and 14 assists.

Syd Howe of Detroit and Toronto's Gus Bodnar were tied for fourth spot, each with 19 points, while Bill Mosienko of Chicago was holding 6th alone with 18. Sweeney Schriner and Lorne Carr of Toronto, both out with injuries, were tied for the next spot with 17 points apiece.

Maurice Richard of Canadiens, running ninth in the point column, led the league with 12, one more than Mosienko and Schriner, the only other double-figure goal scorers. Bodnar led the assist list with 15, one ahead of Cowley, Smith and Howe.

Pat Egan of Boston took over the race for the title of league's bad-man, with 22 minutes in the penalty box to date.

CANALS BLOCKED

London, Nov. 28 — (CP-Reuters) — The Air Ministry announced last night two of Germany's principal canals were blocked by R.A.F. Lancasters attacking the night of Nov. 21. For the third time within two months, the Ministry said, the bombers breached the Dortmund-Ems canal and drained it for a distance of 16 miles. They also hit the Mittelland canal and dried it up for about 15 miles. The twin blows crippled seriously Germany's system of military communications to the western front.

Deadly Craft Terrorize Enemy Ships Tiny MTB's Have Shining Record

"Racing along at speeds that would make peacetime yachtsmen envious, these little terrors of the fleet point their sharp noses towards enemy waters and tear out at dusk to battle ships many times their size and number. They are the amazing MTB's (motor torpedo boats), manned by Canadians, their heroic action being the subject of the new National Film Board production, "Fighting Sea-Fleas," in the Canada Carries On series.

One of the war's most thrilling phases has been the daring, almost unbelievable performance of the Canadian-manned flotillas of those small, light, hard-hitting craft officially known as MTBs — Motor Torpedo Boats. Particularly active in the Channel and the Mediterranean, these cockle-shell power boats are in the outer screen of all Allied amphibious offensives within their range, dodging enemy fire and striking at close quarters, the first to meet the enemy ships trying to sink our vessels.

The gripping action of the MTBs has been caught by the lens of National Film Board Cameramen and presented in the Canada Carries On series in the production, "Fighting Sea-Fleas." The film follows the tiny "dogboats" from pre-battle check-up in port, across the waters and into action against enemy craft.

MTBs are designed and made in England, with three supercharged 12-cylinder marine engines, torpedo tubes on port and starboard occupying half the deck area. There is a gun forward, twin Vickers .303 amidships on either side and dual 20 mm. cannon astern. Except for a shield around the bow gun, they are unarmored. The exploits of MTBs and their Canadian crews would outshine the dreams of thriller writers. The little ships will attack anything from a motor boat to a battleship. The service is one of the most dangerous and the men in it are intensely loyal.

The job of the MTBs is to close the enemy at closest range and destroy him. Their work is almost always at night and, in the darkness, an encounter with enemy E-boats finds the tiny ships criss-crossing at combined speeds of more than 100 miles an hour.

MTBs are known to have terrified enemy ships and crews. The well-armed, faster German E-boats frequently refuse to fight them and run away leaving the battle to bigger ships. The dogboats smash at enemy shipping right under the noses of big shore guns that could blow them out of existence — if they could find them!

Fighting in inky blackness, with flaring tracers and unseen lead filling the air around them, calls for cool nerve to aim a torpedo. The service demands special training of the crews and the men get to know every job aboard. The commanding officers, from constant inspection and contact, are familiar with every ship operation.

"Fighting Sea-Fleas" shows one of the coolest and most daring of all marine commanders, Lieut. Commander C. Anthony, (Tony) Law, in action. Renowned as a Canadian artist, Lieut. Commander Law commanded an MTB in the flotilla that attacked the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau when they ran the Channel, and has distinguished himself in several other sea actions. He has resided in Ottawa, Toronto and Quebec City.

Others well-known figures in the marine actions of this war also appear in "Fighting Sea-Fleas," a film that proves the assertion that Canadians have come of age in the MTB service and have built in it a great tradition.

Canadian Effort 'Magnificent' Says Churchill

London, Nov. 28 — (CP) — Prime Minister Churchill today told the House of Commons he realized "the magnificent character of the Canadian war effort."

He made this remark when a member asked him if he were aware that 98 per cent of the Canadian Army had volunteered for service anywhere.

The Prime Minister promised "another wall will open with greater vigor at the other end of the world when this present one is finished." He was speaking in reply to a query about the reconstruction of the British Army after the war.

He told the House "national service as a foundation of our military system" was under consideration, but contended the matter was not urgent, because Japan yet remained to be beaten even after the fall of Germany.

In the meantime, he assured the House, "there is no reason to support a belief that the British armies will be short of the necessary ammunition to fight their battles."

DeGAULLE IN RUSSIA

Paris, Nov. 28 — (AP) — Germany's future and "collective security" are expected in informed French diplomatic circles to be the two chief topics of conversation between Gen. deGaulle and Premier Stalin, toward whose Kremlin stronghold the French liberation leader was speeding today.

AT THE BELLE — Dorothy Lamour plays one of the Angel sisters in Paramount's fun-musical, featuring Fred MacMurray. Three other members of the Angel family are Betty Hutton, Diana Lynn and Mimi Chandler.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was starting the bridge problem and pop was looking at the headlines on his way to the sporting page, and I said, Hay ma, hay pop, me and Puds Simkins and Glasses Magee have thought up a swell way to make money. We're going to start a dog washing company and wash peoples dogs for them and charge different prices according to the size and willingness of the dogs, I said.

Oh my goodness for land sakes you'd be constantly coming home covered with bites, ma said, and I said, Do yo mean flee bites, ma?

I mean dog bites for land sakes, ma said, and pop said, Well now, the idea may have its good points. It isn't easy to command a dog, especially in a tub of soapy water, and a boy who succeeds in doing that may learn to command men in equally difficult circumstances, he said.

That's right, pop, G, sure, I said, And wait til you hear about our special inducement to get a lot of customers. In case people claim they're too busy to be bothered, we'll tell them we'll take their dogs to our own houses to wash them, I said, and pop said, Do you mean this house for Peet sake?

Well only for the first month, I said. Me and Puds and Glasses tossed up to see whose house to start washing them in, and I won, I mean I lost, I said, and pop said, I'll say you did. I change my vote from yay to nay, which makes the final roll call unanimiss in the negative. Besides, your mother is probably right, you'd only get yourself bitten? he said.

Do you mean by a flea, pop? I said, and pop said, I mean by a dog for Peet sake. Have you finished your home work? he said.

Sir? Half of it, I said, and pop said, Well kindly report to headquarters when you've done all of it.

Being the sad end of the subject.

HERE IS AN ALLIED PRELUDE TO THE FALL OF A GERMAN TOWN

Heavy tanks of an American armored column are shown laying down a barrage outside a German town to prepare for the advance of infantry forces

THESE NAZIS FIGHTING IN GERMANY HAVE HAD ENOUGH

These German soldiers were ready to surrender as Allied forces approached them in Geilenkirchen, Germany. Here, hands raised and with white flag denoting surrender, the Nazis said they've had enough.

DOWNS SIX PLANES

Capt. William T. Whisner, of Shreveport, La., shot down six German FW-190's and probably destroyed another on Nov. 21 in a mission over Germany. This equals the record of enemy planes downed in the air in a single mission. Capt. Whisner is a Mustang fighter pilot.

CRACKSMEN SPOIL SAFE

London, Ont., Nov. 27 (CP)—Safe crackers not only failed to get into the safe at the William Heaman and Son coal yard here Friday night, but they fixed it so no one else could. They smashed the safe's handle in their efforts and now the coal yard operators can't open the door.

GYPSY BLOOD

By MARGARET NORRIS

CHAPTER 30

Herself, she had changed; she knew it,—a regular American girl now, even her Slavic accent was scarcely perceptible. She talked well, danced well, had a knowledge of pictures and books, had pretty manners and had an air of her own that was very distinctive and charming. She was just as pretty as ever—even prettier her mirror said, for she was watching it more closely than she used to and kept herself faultlessly groomed. She had a profession which she loved and in which she was sure to succeed. Mrs. Abbot, her boss, was very kind. Anna knew she would help her get ahead. Yes, she had every reason to be happy, she was a very fortunate girl, young, attractive, gay, full of spirits—yet she wasn't quite happy. Why?

Anna knew, but she hated to acknowledge it even to herself. In these modern days it seemed childish to hold firmly to one ideal—not to flirt and play with everyone who wanted to lay his heart at her feet.

Another tinkle of the phone on her desk. Probably Jim Wearily she took down the receiver. "Hello," she said in a voice that was bored.

"Who is it? I don't quite understand.—Not Harry?—You're in New York?" The blood was singing in Anna's ears until it almost drowned his voice. "Tonight? Why yes—I'd like to. (If he ever guessed how much!") At six o'clock you'll call for me? And we're going to the country? Goodbye."

Anna hung up the receiver and the world was spinning round until she didn't know whether it was spring or fall or morning or afternoon.

Harry and Anna had wandered down by the sea again because there they felt more at home and it was easier to get re-acquainted, to bridge the long years that had passed since they had seen each other.

Three years! An eternity. What a lot of water had been driven up by the tides since they had sat there before!

"Yes, you have changed," said Harry, "But not in the ways that count. That is, you're still different from other girls and natural and frank and well—nice. And you're even prettier than you were before—quite bewilderingly lovely, in fact."

"You mean I've become a lady?"

"You funny little girl! You haven't changed an iota. I take it every bit back. You're still little Anna from Poland who was dropped from the gypsy cart."

Anna pouted. "Will I always be a gypsy?"

"I hope so," Harry replied.

"But you've changed—very much, Harry. You're older and more serious though you'll never really be grown up because Americans always are children. In my country we are old when we're born, it seems. You'll never be as old as me."

"I'm five years older," Harry declared, "and that's just an ideal difference in age." He smiled that nice smile which crinkled his eyes. Tonight it was so tender and kind it almost made Anna want to cry, since great happiness is akin to tears.

"Let's sit down on the beach and get acquainted" she said. "There's so much to say to each other. It seems like so many, many years—"

"They've all vanished now we're together again. It's as if it were only yesterday that I told you goodbye at the station, that day you went off to school."

"I told you it wouldn't be goodbye; it would only be au revoir, but neither of us realized for how long. If I had I wouldn't have been so gay."

"You were very heartless that day, I remember. I was sad while you only laughed."

"I was merely dissembling," Anna said. "I was afraid to let you know how much I cared, and how I hated to go."

"You're still a flirt," said Harry, and he made her kiss him for that.

"There's only one thing I want to talk about, and that's you—or, better, it's us. I've been so lonely without you, I didn't realise how much I was going to miss you. But I found that you were so bound up in my thoughts that to take you out of my life was like tearing the warp from the woof; it destroyed the entire pattern."

Anna felt a little catch in her breath. It was so delightful to hear him say that. But he couldn't mean it; he couldn't. She must be just listening to the waves and reading into their singing the words she would like them to tell.

"So now how can I go away again unless I take you with me?"

"I—don't know," Anna said. It was a stupid remark, but what was there for her to say?

"But I hear you're all established in New York, with a wonderful profession and a career, designing gardens for millionaires, a landscape architect. I suppose you'll be a millionaire yourself some day." She could see there was a twinkle in Harry's eye.

"It isn't fair to tease," she said. Why did she feel so much like weeping? "You absolutely have to go away?"

"Yes, back to England soon. Could you be happy away from New York? Away from America altogether?"

The question made Anna smile. "The best thing America has given me vanished when you left before."

"Then you wouldn't mind going with me?"

"Mind?" Anna gasped. But she didn't finish it. There wasn't any need for words. Neither said anything for a while, just listened to the song of the sea and the answering song in their own hearts.

"When did you first decide you liked me," asked Anna after a while.

It wasn't an original question, but one that is often asked.

"You remember that night on the ship years ago when you were coming to America, when I stepped out on deck and saw you peering in the deck window, caught the picture in the flare of my match?"

"But that was the first time you ever saw me!"

"Yes, I realise that."

"You mean, you liked me from the very first?"

"Not liked you—loved you," said Harry.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was on my way downtown with ma and we started to go passed the flower store, and ma said, That reminds me, I just know your father is going to forget all about today being our wedding anniversary. I just think I'll go in here and send myself a dozen roses and your father will have a fine time racking his brains over who could of remembered although he didn't, she said.

And she went in and ordered the roses, and when we got back from downtown pop was home already and the flowers were in a vase in the living room, ma saying, Well, what a pleasant surprise. There doesn't seem to be any card attached to them. Now I just wonder what unknown admirer could of remembered. I wonder who he could be? she said.

He's probably a she, pop said. Some sentimental old girl of mine probably sent them, he said, and ma said, Such a cocken bull idea, I never heard such a jellies remark.

I wont keep you in suspense any longer, I sent them myself, naturally, pop said, and ma said, Oh yes, a likely story, you know you never sent me flowers in your life without a card with some silly rime on it.

Follow me closely, pop said, and he reached into the vase and pulled out a card, saying on it, I sent these roses, red and tall, To the fairest flower of all.

Meaning ma, and she said, Well William Potts, I declare you take the cake to the very last crumb.

There may be something on the other side of the card too, for all anybody knows, pop said.

Which ma turned it over and there was, being, This card obliges bearer's husband to sit through a double feature of his wife's choosing. Good on any wedding anniversary.

The result being ma felt better instead of worse, and they didn't get home till way late on account of staying out to dance some place after the double feature.

Power Disagreed With the Policy Of Col. Ralston

Ottawa, Nov. 28 —(CP)— Declaring neither victory nor national honor required that Canadian troops be in continuous action, Hon. C. G. Power, said yesterday in the Commons that a course of "systematic recuperation" for the army overseas would have resulted in the voluntary method of recruiting proving sufficient at this stage of the war when victory seemed certain.

He was speaking on his resignation as Air Minister from the cabinet in protest to the policy of conscription which, he said, was not the policy of the government last Wednesday night.

Maj. Power spoke after Prime Minister Mackenzie King had announced he had accepted Maj. Power's resignation, tendered last Thursday, and read an exchange of letters.

In the exchange, Maj. Power wrote he had disagreed with the policy of Col. J. L. Ralston, who resigned as Defence Minister Nov. 1, on the grounds that the number of troops reported as required "was comparatively so small" the means to remedy the situation "so readily available" and the end of the war "so imminent" that "we were not justified in provoking a national crisis."

He couldn't accept from Gen. McNaughton, appointed Defence Minister Nov. 2, a recommendation which he had already rejected from an 'old and tried associate.'

Given Ovation

In his reply, dated yesterday, Mr. King said he had hoped Maj. Power would reconsider his decision.

Previously, Maj. Power — looking pale and weary — got a general ovation as he rose to speak from a private member's seat in the government front benches.

An officer of the First Great War, he said the strategy of Gen. Eisenhower was to give the enemy no rest. And this implied a ready stream of reinforcements.

However, no commander would take experienced men out of the battle line to be replaced by newly-arrived men and this policy might easily mean more casualties.

So, it seemed to him the logical and reasonable thing was to take men out of the line and the resultant lowering of casualty rates by periods of comparative inactivity would wipe out "the margin of deficit, if any exists, and restore the balance."

Not Required

"Neither ultimate victory nor national honor," he said, "require that Canadian troops should be in action every hour of every day, or even should take part in every battle necessary to bring about final victory, especially when thousands of Europeans, freshly freed from the tyranny and unspeakable terror of Nazi oppression, are panting for vengeance on the oppressor."

He added:—

"If the course of systematic recuperation were taken then the voluntary system which we have been following, which yielded more men last year than was ever estimated or even anticipated, which in the words of the present minister of National Defence has not failed, would have sufficed at this stage of the year when by the most authoritative accounts victory is certain."

Neuss, Reiburg Heavily Attacked

London, Nov. 28 (CP)—At least 1,000 R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. heavy bombers in pre-dawn raids today hurled some 4,000 tons of explosives on Neuss and Freiburg, German supply centres just back of the western front, as the sustained 72-hour assault on Nazi frontline rail and supply centres continued.

The attack on Neuss was an all-Canadian affair. Every squadron of the R.C.A.F. bomber group was represented in the more than 300 Lancasters which participated and all returned safely. Enemy defences were negligible throughout the raid and many large explosions and fires were reported after the bombs were dropped.

Freiburg lies behind the Mulhouse-Kolmar sector where the French 1st army and the American 7th army are pressing up to the western bank of the Rhine.

BBC Plans to Put British Listeners Ahead Of All Others in World

London, Nov. 28 —(CP)— W. J. Haley, Director General of the British Broadcasting Corporation, said today the BBC plans to put United Kingdom radio fans "ahead of any other listener in the world," but declared at the same time that the power of the world's press must never be weakened.

"The spoken word can supplement the written word; it cannot supplant the written word," Mr. Haley told the Radio Industries Club.

Mr. Haley disclosed that all the BBC's sister organizations in the Dominions would confer in London in February.

He spoke out for a free access to news facts, both for press and radio, and said that "the BBC in the years ahead will maintain in broadcasting the people's freedom to know."

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Nov. 28 —(CP)— Industrial stocks were up narrowly at noon today and moderate weakness was shown by the golds and western oils. Base metals were about even, in the average, with Monday's closing prices. Volume was lower at 276,000 shares for the first three hours.

Liquor stocks were down slightly. Hiram Walker lost ½ and Canadian Industrial Alcohol A weakened ¼. Canada Packers A and Canadian Food Products were soft spots in the food list. A gain of ½ for Canadian Locomotive was the only change in the steels.

Giant Yellowknife was the main gainer in the gold list. It advanced 30 cents to 2.80. Bear gained 7 cents and Buffalo-Ankerite added 10.

NEW YORK EXCHANGE

New York, Nov. 28 —(AP)— Idle investment funds continued to trickle into the share market today although favorite stocks, on the whole, could be acquired without lifting bids. Near the fourth hour, the direction was a bit indefinite. Slowdowns were plentiful.

American Telephone and Chicago & Northwestern registered best marks for 1944 by small advances. Ahead most of the time were Chrysler, U. S. Rubber, Westinghouse and Du Pont. Backward were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Motors, Goodrich, General Electric and Philip Morris.

Canadian issues were quiet.

V.C. Winner Now in London

London, Nov. 28 — (CP Cable)— Maj. David V. Currie of Moose Jaw, Sask., and Owen Sound, Ont., arrived in London today from Holland and expects to leave for Canada within a few days.

The 32-year-old Major, who won the Empire's highest gallantry award for blocking and holding one of the main German escape routes out of the Falaise pocket in Normandy last August, wore only a tankman's coveralls over his battle dress when he stepped from the train that brought him from a coast port. He had no time to pack anything else.

Maj. Currie left Holland yesterday and crossed to Britain from the continent in a motor torpedo boat.

It was considered probable that he would be decorated by the King at a Buckingham Palace investiture before returning to the Dominion.

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

With the R.C.A.F. Overseas, Nov. 28 — (CP) — Safety of an important Allied convoy was threatened when a Nazi U-boat got into the north Atlantic shipping lanes recently — but the submarine was attacked by an R.C.A.F. Sunderland before it could do any damage and the convoy got through.

Skipper of the aircraft was F. L. N. Farren of (262 Guilford St.) St. John N.B., and it was he who spotted the U-boat. The subsequent attack was made in daylight without any anti-aircraft fire. The submarine submerged just before the depth charges dropped and wasn't seen again.

Other Canadians in the crew were FO. Charles Strobl of (420 Mathison Ave.) Winnipeg; FO. R. A. W. Simpson of (221 Queen St.) Ottawa; FO. S. R. Hawthorne, Renfrew, Ont.; FO. R. W. Markley, Milton, Ont.; WO2. S. Semenchuk, Cudworth, Sask.; Flt. Sgt. G. F. Tait, Dilke, Sask.; Sgt. C. E. Goebel, Spruce Grove, Alta.; and Sgt. J. W. MacDonald of (249 Wellington St.) Wallaceburg, Ont.

Another pair of Nazi submarines were seriously shaken up — and one of them probably seriously damaged —when attacked at night by a Halifax bomber in which WO. G. Bellcoff of (R.R.2) Cloverdale, B. C., was second pilot. The skipper was FO. J. Capey, R.A.F.

The bomber made two runs over the target, dropping its bombs on the second.

"I saw them explode, one to the starboard and three to port; about half a boat's length to stern of one of the U-boats," Capey said.

Another crew from the same coastal squadron — including PO. W. Smaliuk of (625 Manitoba Ave.) Winnipeg; and WO. A. G. Grant of (217 Trent Ave. E.) Kildonan, Man. —attacked three enemy minesweepers heading seaward from a French Atlantic coast harbor.

"Bombs dropped appeared to fall about 250 feet astern of the leading minesweeper," Smaliuk said.

The R.C.A.F.'s troop-carrying Husky squadron has a major role in transporting airborne troops, towing gliders and ferrying supplies to the battlefields of western Europe.

The squadron was in on the Arnhem landings and later supplied war materials by parachute. It has flown many wounded men to British hospitals. The squadron commander is Wing Cmdr. J. A. Sproule, D.F.C., of Brandon, Man., and (23 Delevan Ave.) Toronto, with Sqdn. Ldr. C. N. McVeigh of Calgary as his chief assistant.

Although on operational flying only since June, 25-year-old Harold Smith of the Iroquois squadron has been promoted to rank of squadron leader and appointed a flight commander. Smith, from New Westminster, B.C., has plenty of experience to fit him for the job — more than a score of sorties and almost two years as an instructor at a British-flying school. Formerly he was with the Moose and Leaside squadrons.

FO. D. C. Pole, 30, of Sarnia, Ont., leaned back in his seat and a burst of flak smashed through his chart table, just where his head had been. Pole is navigator of an R. C. A. F. Bison squadron, Halifax. The bomber was hit over the western front and although Pole's head wasn't in the way, he went to the hospital for two months with leg wounds. The airman has returned to operational duty.

London, Ont., Nov. 28—(CP) — A two-year-old buck deer, wounded by some hunter's gun, wandered on to a pasture on the Bruce Douglas farm near Ilderton on Sunday. Heavy Snowfall Slows Action Around Budapest

Moscow, Nov. 28 — (AP) — The heaviest snowfall in one year following a severe sleet storm slowed down action today in the battle for Budapest, with German and Hungarian troops occupying defence positions along a 26-mile curve from the southern limits of Budapest to the rail junction of Aszod on the northeast, front advices said.

The Russian command made no mention of progress on that front although reports here said the situation in the Hungarian capital was tense.

The Soviet war bulletin, however, reported capture of 80 additional hamlets in the puppet state of Slovakia. Red Army columns in a six-mile penetration of northern Slovakia crossed the 2,700-foot Carpathian mountains along the Polish frontier. Other units in the south advanced to within 11 miles of the big north Hungarian rail centre of Satoraljaujhely.

Thus Col.-Gen. Ivan Petrow's 4th Ukraine Army widened its front to 75 miles from a point west of Dukla Pass in the north to the Hungarian frontier, and further imperilled the enemy strongholds at Presov and Kassa (Kosice). Red Army units 25 miles to the east already menace those two points.

For two months Russian divisions and units of the 1st Czechoslovakian Army have been trying to force Dukla Pass by a frontal blow.

May Shorten Lines

The assault from the rear by Petrov's troops promised to shorten and better his supply lines to Red Army bases in Poland.

A broadcast Romanian communique recorded by the Federal Communications Commission said Romanian troops, renewing their attack northwest of Tokaj in northeastern Hungary, had captured Bekecs, 12 miles northwest. Southwest of Miskolc and northeast of Budapest tank-supported enemy counterattacks were repulsed by Romanian and Soviet troops, the communique added.

In one area near the centre of the eastern Slovakia front 470 Germans were captured, and all equipment and transport of the 52nd Hungarian anti-aircraft artillery group was seized in an attack at the Latorica river in the south, the Russian war bulletin said.

The Berlin radio said Soviet troops who had crossed to the west bank of the Danube at Batina and Apatin in northern Yugoslavia had forced the Germans back a mile or more. This operation, not yet confirmed by Moscow, was seen by the Germans as an attempt to take Budapest from the rear.

British Armies Well Supplied With Ammunition

London, Nov. 28 —(CP)— Prime Minister Churchill assured the House of Commons today "there is no reason to support a belief that the British armies will be short of the necessary ammunition to fight their battles."

The Prime Minister's statement, made in answer to a query soon after the parliament, elected in 1935, opened its 10th consecutive session, followed a statement by President Roosevelt that shell shortages were costing the lives of American fighting men.

Mr. Churchill based his reply on factory workers maintaining their present planned output, which, he said, "they may even improve upon." He added: "we have very considerable reserves, the use of which depends on the varying estimates as to the duration of the German resistance."

Asked whether this assurance covered all theatres of war, he replied in the affirmative. He said expenditures on the Burmese front were not on the great scale of those in Europe and the problem was one of transport rather than available supply.

FIGURED IN TOKYO RAID

Emmett O'Donnell, of Jamaica, L.I., commanding general of the 73rd bombardment wing, as they conferred shortly before launching the B-29 raid on Tokyo from their Saipan base. Gen. O'Donnell led the raiders, flying the "Dauntless Dotty."

Warned To Ignore News Of Returning Soldiers Which Is Not Official

Kingston, Nov. 28, (Special) — Major W. K. MacGregor, acting A. A. & Q. M. G., Military District No. 3 today warned next-of-kin to rely only on official advice and to ignore all unauthorised information regarding the return to Canada of soldiers serving overseas.

Referring to the hoax played on an Ottawa resident last week which resulted in a Kingston family rushing to the Capital to greet a homecoming soldier, only to learn that the information given was false, Major MacGregor stated that next-of-kin actually should have no difficulty in ascertaining the authenticity of such information. He described the hoax as "outrageous."

He said that soldiers are returned to Canada either by hospital ship or by troopship. In the case of hospital ships, the safe passage of which is guaranteed by all warring powers, security regulations are not so stringent, but in the case of troopships, which are subject to enemy action, the strongest possible security measures are laid down.

Informed in Advance.

"When a soldier is returning in a hospital ship the relative officially listed as the next-of-kin is advised first by letter by the Director of Records, Department of National Defence, Ottawa, about a week or 10 days in advance of the soldier's arrival in Canada," he said. "Immediately upon arrival at the port of disembarkation, the soldier is permitted to send a wire, at government expense, to his wife, parents or relative, announcing that he has landed in Canada and indicating the date on which he expects to reach the army depot through which he enlisted.

"A list of returning personnel is also given in advance to all newspapers and radio stations by the district Public Relations Officer," Major MacGregor pointed out. "This list is also available to heads of reception committees in all communities, who receive advice of subsequent changes."

Major MacGregor said that immediately following necessary documentation at District Depot No. 3, Ottawa, or District Depot No. 3-A, Kingston, the soldier is permitted to send another free wire announcing the expected arrival at his home. Army authorities, in turn, send an additional wire to mayor or reeves giving similar information so that reception committees will be able to be on hand at the time of the soldier's return if so desired.

Can Wire Home After Arrival.

Unless advised by the Director of Records, next-of-kin do not receive information regarding personnel returning on troopship until the ship has docked safely at a Canadian port, it was pointed out. At that time the soldier is permitted to wire his family, announcing his disembarkation and expected time of arrival home. Normally, this would be the first indication received by next-of-kin of the soldier's return to Canada.

It is not intended that any soldier will return to Canada unannounced, Major MacGregor added, but he warned all next-of-kin to be sure to advise the Director of Records at Ottawa of any changes in address to avoid unnecessary delay in receiving information.

He said that relatives wishing to verify reports of returning soldiers can do so by calling the Public Relations Officer, Headquarters, Kingston, or Area Command Headquarters, Ottawa, telephone Government local 4218.

The War Today—

Red Operations on Wide Front, Budapest to Open Route to Austria

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst.)

With the whole Allied world hoping for an early end to the war against Germany, it's natural that there should be eager speculation as to when Russia is likely to strike again against the Vistula Line, thereby putting the big squeeze on Hitler.

Moscow, is of course, getting set for a fresh attack on those powerful German defences of which Warsaw has been one of the key positions. There are, however, several reasons why the Red command might be disinclined to rush this great operation.

In the first place we must recognize that the Russians are maintaining a fighting front of maybe 1,000 miles—more than that if you count the far northern operations. On their right flank in the Baltic states and east Prussia, and on their left flank in the Balkans and Hungary, they've been waging heavy offensives, and those two campaigns in themselves have been a terrific load to carry.

Terrain Soon Frozen.

Moreover—and this is important—it's only now that the great plains of eastern Europe through which the Vistula winds are freezing so that they will once more bear the weight of war machines. The fall rains turn this whole area into a sea of mud which is among the world's worst. Generally by this time the frosts have tightened up the terrain, and by about the middle of December virtually all the rivers will be frozen so that the ice will bear the weight of troops and equipment.

However, apart from the mud and bad weather, it's understandable that the Red command should want to iron out those two great flanks before making another drive against the German centre on the Vistula. Those flanks would constitute a danger to the Red advance in the middle.

Big Show is Drive Thru N. Balkans

Up on the northern flank the Russians still are in process of dealing with some 30 German divisions in Latvia. Those forces must be eliminated or at least neutralized. But the big show, of course, has been the successful and highly profitable Red swing through the northern Balkans and into Hungary, thereby aiming a battering-ram at the Danubian gateway into Austria. The importance of that drive can't be over-emphasized.

The Red army stands at the gates of the Hungarian capital of Budapest astride the Danube. Moscow reports today that the heavy snow, followed by a bad sleet storm, has slowed the Red attack but the fact remains that Budapest is in a precarious position.

The fall of this great rail and river centre, which is a distribution hub for southeastern Europe, will open the route to the neighboring Australian border. It will make invasion of Austria possible, thereby creating another terrific threat to the heart of Germany.

52nd Division Of British Army Helps Canadians

By ROSS MUNRO
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With the 1st Canadian Army, Nov. 28 (CP Cable)—The 52nd British division fought under 1st Canadian army command during the battle of the Scheldt, and troops of this formation carried out seaborne landings on south Beveland and Walcheren islands, it was permitted to disclose today.

The 52nd joined the Canadians early in October and its first job was to relieve a western Canadian brigade on the Leopold canal bridgehead.

Then, on Oct. 26, units of this division crossed the Scheldt estuary from Terneuzen to land on the shore of south Beveland, linking with Canadian forces who had approached along a neck of land from the mainland, and help clear the island.

Infantry battalions of the 52nd followed up with a commando landing at Vlissingen (Flushing) and shared in the heavy fighting in the town.

Other troops of the division crossed the causeway leading from south Beveland to Walcheren and exploited a bridgehead originally gained by the Canadians.

The 52nd was the first division into Middelburg in the centre of Walcheren.

'VICTORY SUPREME AIM' SAYS KING GEORGE

HUN DEFENCE IN FRONT OF COLOGNE WEAKENING

U.K. Forces Will Be Reinforced To Fight Against Japs

King Opens 4th Longest Parliament in History

London, Nov. 29 — (CP) — King George, opening the 10th consecutive session of the current Parliament amid centuries-old ceremonies, today told the Houses of Commons and Lords that Britain intends to "reinforce as rapidly as possible the United Kingdom forces" now fighting against Japan.

"Victory remains our supreme aim," the King told members of the Parliament elected in 1935 and assured of office until the end of the war.

"Once, however, the war in Europe is over, the transition from war to peace will begin, and my ministers are actively preparing plans to ensure that without in any way prejudicing the active prosecution of the war against Japan an increasing part of our resources is made available for civilian production."

These words opened what has been termed the "victory session" of the fourth longest parliament in British history.

The King in his Throne speech declared the United Nations could "now look forward with greater confidence than ever before to those final victories which will give to the peoples of the world the just peace which is our chief desire."

His Majesty wore the gold-braided uniform of an Admiral of the Royal Navy.

Still in Mourning.

The Queen, still in mourning for her father, the Earl of Strathmore, wore a simple black dress and black hat at the colorful ceremonies in the House of Lords debating chamber. A silver fox wrap, a single row of pearls, and a diamond ornament on her lapel set off the Queen's quiet costume.

The Royal couple drove to Westminster. A guard of honor made up of home-guardsmen who will "step down" on Sunday after nearly five years of service, lined the approaches of the Royal gallery.

Most of the peers wore sombre morning dress, against which the white robes of the bishops and an occasional service uniform stood out in sharp contrast. So crowded was the chamber that members of the House of Commons overflowed into the strangers gallery.

The King's speech lasted exactly 13 minutes, and as he finished the whole assembly rose. Taking his Queen by the hand, the King led her down the steps of the throne and out of the chamber.

"I pray that the almighty may give his blessing to your counsels," were his final words.

Reviews Events of Year.

The speech reviewed briefly the events of the year since he opened the last session Nov. 24, 1943 — a session from which Prime Minister Churchill was absent because of the impending conferences in Cairo.

Looking ahead the speech forecast legislation for a comprehensive health service, National Insurance, a new scheme of industrial injury insurance, family allowances and some measures for the transition period after the war with Germany. Among these were mentioned expanding export trade and increasing the supply of civilian goods.

Praises Britain's Allies

In general, the speech added little to the words of the prorogation speech of yesterday — a ceremony concealed by censorship until today in order not to disclose to the enemy that the Royal Family would travel to Westminster again today.

In disbanding the ninth session of the current Parliament yesterday, the speech made a special point of praising Britain's Allies.

"Resounding victories have continued to reward the skill and valor of my Russian Allies," the speech declared and added later that His Majesty had "watched with warm admiration the great part which the French Forces of the Interior have played in ridding their country of the invader."

"The victories achieved," the speech said, "are the fruits of the close friendship which knits together my governments and those of my Allies."

The prorogation speech welcomed the establishment of a provisional government in France and the appointment of a permanent French member on the European advisory commission.

RAIL AND OIL TARGETS RAIDED IN GREAT FORCE

Essen, Misburg and Hamm Undergo Smashing Allied Attacks

London, Nov. 29. (CP) — More than 1,000 heavy bombers and 1,000 American fighters attacked rail and oil targets in northwestern Germany today.

The huge natural oil refinery at Misburg and the railyards at Hamm were the prime objectives of the Fortresses and Liberators, escorted by Mustangs, Thunderbolts and Lightnings of the U.S. 8th Army and 9th Air Forces.

British heavy bombers jolted German rail lines at Essen and Neuss in the Ruhr early this morning in the third straight operation squeezed in between the setting of the moon and sunrise.

Almost 4,000 tons of explosives were heaped on the 30 miles of railroad yards at Hamm, and on the Misburg oil refinery near Hannover, target of a heavy Sunday raid.

Some of the giant four-engined craft were flown by Canadians. The raid left Essen a mass of flame, Canadian fliers reported. "We could see great fires burning under the clouds after we bombed on the sky markers", said Flt. Sgt. John Robinson of Simpsons, Sask.

Bomb Through Clouds.

Bombardiers aimed their loads of explosives on Pathfinder flares dropped through layers of cloud which covered both cities.

An area of some four square miles of cloud reflected the glare of fires set in Essen. It was the R.A.F.'s second attack in 24 hours on Neuss, in the Dusseldorf area.

Several squadrons of British Mosquito bombers rocked Nuremburg, in southwestern Germany, with two-ton blockbursting bombs earlier in the night.

An air ministry communique said three bombers failed to return from the two operations.

British and American continent-based fighters and bombers flew almost 1,200 sorties yesterday. Five German planes were shot down but the U.S. 9th air force lost two medium bombers and two fighters and the R.A.F. 2nd tactical air force lost three fighters.

Air operations in Italy were restricted by weather. The Mediterranean Allied air forces flew approximately 470 sorties yesterday, from which three aircraft are missing.

COMMONS COMES INTO OPEN AFTER SECRET SESSION

Ralston to Speak and If He Votes With Govt. King's Hands Will Be Strengthened

By FRANK FLAHERTY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Ottawa, Nov. 29 (CP)—The House of Commons comes out into the open today after six hours of a secret session yesterday.

As tension remained at a high level and the general atmosphere of crisis continued there were some members at least who favored a shortening of the debate on motions of confidence in the government's army reinforcement policy.

Reports of disturbances in British Columbia army camps from which home defence troops are to be moved to concentration areas in eastern Canada prior to being sent overseas added to the tension.

Speaker J. Allison Glen issued the following statement after adjournment:-

"The House of Commons held a secret sitting from three o'clock today. General the Honorable A. G. L. McNaughton, Minister of National Defence, was present and gave information respecting the Canadian forces."

Presumed Answers Given.

Under censorship regulations nothing more can be published concerning proceedings at a secret sitting. Prior to the meeting there were a number of unanswered questions from members concerning the army reinforcement position, the number of reinforcements on hand, estimates of the number likely to be needed in the coming months.

These were addressed to Gen. McNaughton when he appeared before the House last week and he said the answers could not be given in public. Presumably the House got the answers yesterday.

Members on all sides looked forward with keen interest to the remarks of Col. J. L. Ralston, former defence minister, expected to come today. The stand the former defence minister takes on the issues

Most U.S. Papers Take Hands-Off Attitude in Conscription Controversy

New York, Nov. 29 —(CP)— A hands-off attitude has been taken by the press of the United States in its editorial treatment of the Canadian conscription crisis with the great majority of newspapers content to report the facts at length, generally with page 1 treatment, without commenting thereon.

The situation has evoked widespread interest throughout the country, day-to-day developments being followed closely even in sections as far from the borders of the Dominion as the deep south and southern Pacific coast. For the United States recalls its own bitter battle in 1940 over conscription and in the few editorial opinions expressed, sympathy with the Canadian position is readily apparent.

Indicative of the position the American press as a whole has taken in what it recognizes as a critical point in Canadian history was last week's comment by the New York Herald Tribune:

"Americans owe their excellent northern neighbor a debt of sympathy in this dilemma. We still have our own troubles arising from the existence of racial minorities, conspicuously the negro problem. And we should realize that in some respects the problem facing Canada is even tougher than this one of our own . . . The cleavages in Canada are those of language and religion intensified by a greater geographical and hence political concentration."

On the other hand, the Chicago Tribune, bitterly isolationist before the United States entered the war, commented yesterday.

"Most of the opposition to conscription has come from the French-speaking people always more or less exploited economically by the dominant English-speaking strain. The French-Canadians have come to look upon conscription as

Drive Into Holland, Germany Cost British and Canadians About 40,000 Casualties

—Churchill

London, Nov. 29 —(CP)— Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today that there had been approximately 40,000 British and Canadian casualties in the drive into Holland and Germany.

"In these operations, including the storming of the (Schedle) island of Walcheren which contained episodes of marvellous gallantry and great feats of arms, the British and Canadian forces suffered about 40,000 casualties," the Prime Minister said.

The Prime Minister announced for the first time that the port of Antwerp has finally been opened "and is now receiving the large convoys of ocean-going ships, thus making an incomparable sea base available for the nourishment of the northern group of British armies and the various groups of American armies also deployed in these operations."

It was to free this port that the 1st Canadian Army waged the successful, month-long battle to clear the Schelde estuary. That campaign in southwestern Holland ended Nov. 9.

Canadians Cleared Way for Drive.

It has been widely stated that the present offensive in the west was possible largely because the Canadians succeeded in clearing the coast of France, Belgium and Southern Holland, thus opening up vital ports and clearing a way for the use of Antwerp, most valuable of them all.

Gen. Crerar's troops, including British, Polish, Netherlands, Belgian, Czech and American units, were ordered to take control of the Schelde estuary and a dirty, nightmare battle developed in bad weather and over flooded terrain.

Casualties were heavy but finally the German 64th and 70th divisions were smashed and the estuary was in Allied hands.

British armored columns had taken Antwerp itself in September and in early October Canadians cleared the port area. But Antwerp is an inland port 40 miles up the winding Scheide and a force of nearly 40,000 Germans was left behind on the Schelde coast to delay its opening as long as possible. Big coastal batteries prevented ships passing up the estuary.

In the process of building a strong base in Holland, the British and Canadian troops captured 25,000 prisoners and it was considered that the German killed and wounded probably reached a similar total.

Influence of Schelde Victory.

Today's speech was the second this month in which Mr. Churchill mentioned casualties in Holland. In a speech at the Mansion House Nov. 9, he coupled the fighting in Belgium and Holland with that in Italy, saying "in these two operations very heavy losses have been sustained in the greatest proportion by the British and Canadian forces."

He predicted then that the Schelde victory soon would place Antwerp "at the disposal of the northern flank (of the Allied armies) which will presently move into Germany for the final struggle."

Even then it was known that the Canadian forces suffered heavy casualties, particularly in the furious fighting for a bridgehead across the Leopold canal. This formidable water barrier, a double-channel with a total width of 190 feet, had to be crossed to get at the Germans in the pocket south of the Schelde estuary.

U. S. DESTROYERS BRAVE MINED SEA TO SHELL ORMOC

American Shipping in Leyte Gulf Damaged by Jap Torpedo Planes

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Nov. 29 —(AP)— Action flared on both sides of storm-bogged Leyte as American destroyers braved the mined inner Philippine seas to shell Ormoc and the Japanese Air Force bombed United States warships and transports in Leyte Gulf, headquarters announced today.

(Tokyo radio, in unconfirmed broadcasts, said Japanese troops are locked in battle on little Morotai Island, 300 miles south of the Philippines, after a surprise counter-landing there Sunday.

(Tokyo also made the unsubstantiated claim that Japanese planes struck for the third straight day Wednesday at the American base on Saipan in the Marianas from which superfortresses twice have flown to pour destruction on Tokyo.)

Ground Forces Halted by Rain.

The naval and air action at Leyte reported today by Gen. MacArthur was in sharp relief to the ground situation where U. S. forces, pressing the enemy along the Ormoc corridor, still were at a near halt because of torrential rain.

American patrol-torpedo boats have been operating in the Camotes sea but this was the first appearance of destroyers. They had to move through narrow straits past enemy-held islands.

On the other side of Leyte, 30 Japanese torpedo planes and dive bombers swarmed through thick overcast during daylight hours Monday to hit American shipping in Leyte Gulf, but 13 were knocked down by ack-ack fire and two others destroyed by fighters.

SAYS GERMANS BEGIN TO DOUBT VALIDITY OF OATH TO HITLER

RED ARMY SURGES ALONG FULL FRONT OF E. SLOVAKIA

In Northern Hungary Russians Clear Enemy From Right Bank of Tisza River

London, Nov. 29 — (CP)—Fording flooded streams pouring down from the Carpathians, the Red Army has surged westward along the full breadth of eastern Slovakia, capturing more than 60 communities, Moscow reported today.

In northern Hungary the Russians cleared the enemy from the right bank of the Tisza river, occupying an additional 14 populated places. The advances measured up to 14 miles on two closely-linked fronts, that total more than 110 miles.

The German high command declared a new Soviet offensive west of the Danube in Hungary had reached the coal mining city of Pecs, carrying 23 miles beyond captured Mohacs. Pecs is about 100 miles south of Budapest. Moscow has made no announcement of a new drive in this area.

Visni Svidnik in Slovakia was captured after bitter fighting. It is in the southern approach to Dukla pass and 10 miles southwest of the Polish border. The advance in Slovakia was general down to the Hungarian border north of Nyiregyhaza, and within 25 miles of the Slovakian strongholds of Kassa and Presov.

Crossing of the Tisza put the last 35-mile stretch of the river in Soviet hands northeast from Tokaj (Tokay). The river's lower reaches south of Tokaj were already Russian-held.

Elsewhere along the 1,500-mile eastern front winding from the Baltic to the Balkans there was tenseness as the Germans awaited the first blows in Marshal Stalin's promised winter offensive.

Today that front is anchored in the Latvian capital and port of Riga. It stretches from Riga to the vicinity of Priekule, 23 miles south-

WAR IN EUROPE MAY LAST LONGER THAN HE FORECAST

Churchill Says His View Might Be Revised By Dropping Word 'Early' Before 'Summer'

London, Nov. 29 —(CP)— Prime Minister Churchill warned parliament today that the war against Germany might last longer than he had thought and that his earlier prediction might be revised by dropping the word "early" before the word "summer."

Mr. Churchill spoke after the 10th session of parliament had been opened by the King.

The Prime Minister, always outspokenly pessimistic concerning an early ending of the European struggle, had said previously that this phase of the war might last until "early summer."

Mr. Churchill gave glowing praise to the progress of the Allied armies on the Western Front. He said "the enemy everywhere has been thrust back," and added that "any large and effective break-through in the German front in the region of Cologne would have the highest strategic consequences."

Enemy Fighting on Own Ground.

Then, pausing, he told the House:

"We must remember that the enemy whose country is invaded has also the supreme stimuli which we ourselves responded to in the very dark days of 1940 and 1941."

The Prime Minister praised the fighting of the French troops near the Swiss frontier, where they slashed through to the Rhine, and declared it showed the French army "would rise again and that the French soldier, properly led and properly equipped, is unsurpassed."

The weather had badly hampered the British and American forces at the northern end of the front, he said, but the battle was continuing with vigor and "immense losses have been inflicted on the enemy."

He warned the House that hard work lay ahead in tackling a wide social program outlined in the Speech from the Throne. If the war should end early next summer, he said, "we cannot accomplish more than a small part of the program" by that time.

"Glorious and Massive Achievements."

Praising the American armies on the Western Front, he described the capture of Metz and Strasbourg as "glorious and massive achievements," and said that although American losses had been severe on northern sectors of the front the [illegible] greater to the [illegible]

He said he might give a full-fledged war review after [illegible] when "it may be much easier to put hard facts and cheering facts before the House."

The House cheered as Mr. Churchill ended his long address, devoted mainly to legislation to be tackled, with the assertion that the great powers "were never more closely and intimately and comprehendingly united than they are at this moment."

Advances Up to 10 Miles Made Inside Rich Saar Basin

Enemy Admits Withdrawal North of Strasbourg

By WILLIAM FRYE
(C. P. Staff Writer.)

London, Nov. 29 (AP)—German defences wavered before Cologne today and American tanks and infantry captured the ruins of the forest battlefield town of Hurtgen, broke organized resistance at Koslar and seized Jungersdorf after fighting three days for every house.

Advances ranging up to 10 miles were made in the centre along a 26-mile front inside Germany's rich Saar Basin. The U.S. 3rd army moved up to within eight-mile cannon range of the citadel of Saarbrucken. The Germans spoke of a general withdrawal north of Strasbourg.

Hurtgen is 27 1-2 miles southwest of Cologne. Jungersdorf is four miles from Duren (pop. 39,000) and Koslar is less than two from Julich. Both Duren and Julich are fortress towns on the Roer river line, last great natural barrier before the Rhine.

Hard Going.

Other Americans of the 1st and 9th armies crawling slowly forward along a 25-mile front between Linnich and Hurtgen in the Cologne plain east of Aachen fought for every house and cellar in several ruined villages. Some were within 22 miles of Cologne. Between the towns were intricate trench systems like those of the First Great War.

Though organized resistance collapsed in Koslar under the impact of the U.S. 9th army, a few Germans held out in the mud.

Canadian troops were fighting on German soil for the first time, having crossed the Netherlands border in the Nijmegen sector, presumbly in the wedge the Allies drove into the Reichswald two months ago.

Mop Up Stragglers.

The British 2nd Army mopped up enemy stragglers west of the Meuse river in Holland and probed the defence mazes before the fortress towns of Venlo and Roermond.

A Reuter News Agency dispatch reported the British front generally quiet except for attacks on two castles held by the Germans despite repeated air attack.

The U. S. 3rd Army grasped for Merzig, Rhenish Prussia fortified zone town near the Moselle river. The vanguards were two miles away. Others drove to within eight miles of Saarbrucken in the area east of St. Avold.

Lt.-Gen. Patton's troops fought into the French coal town of Saare Union, 21 miles south of Saarbrucken, and within 3½ miles of the border city of Saarlautern.

The large French traffic centre of Hagenau, scene of many pilgrimages to it Marienthal Convent, was threatened by troops three miles to the west. Railroads lead across the Rhine from there to Karlsruhe, 31 miles to the northeast, and to Neustadt.

Patton's 95th Division bolted almost 10 miles forward yesterday and crossed the frontier at Berus and Duren, a town of the same name as that before Cologne. That extended the 3rd Army front inside Germany to 26 miles, reaching northwest to Besch opposite Luxembourg.

On the southern flank, the French 1st Corps' drive east from Rougemont le Chateau and the French 2nd Corps struck west from Mulhouse, joining at Burnhaupt le Haut trapping a German force of undisclosed size in a 50-mile-square box between Mulhouse and Belfort.

The 9th Army before Julich captured a bridge intact at Altdorf over the Inde river, a little creek which flows into the Roer. Two more German tanks were destroyed, bringing the total for this army alone to 143 in the current offensive. The 9th destroyed an ammunition dump near Linnich on the Roer.

Canadian Girl On Ship Arouses Navy Curiosity

Leyte, Philippines, Nov. 29. (AP) A Norwegian merchantman dropped anchor at a United States fleet base and word went around that an attractive Canadian girl operated the ship's blinker signal system.

All ships were soon winking their blinker lights. Thus the navy learned she was 23, five feet two and weighed 126 pounds. But the courtship ended abruptly.

The yuong woman was wooed so ardently that her arm apparently gave out winking back.

ESCAPEES FROM REFORMATORY TAKEN WITHOUT RESISTANCE

Guelph, Nov. 29 (CP)—Robert Potter, 18, of Niagara Falls and James Leith, 19, of Derryville, who escaped from the Ontario reformatory late yesterday, were back in custody today. The young fugitives offered no resistance when recaptured near Corwhin five hours after their getaway.

The youth fled unnoticed from the dairy barns just before work gangs were brought in for the night. Leith was serving six months on an auto theft charge and Potter 18 months on several charges including shopbreaking and theft.

Montreal, Nov. 29 —(CP)—Camillien Houde, who has been mayor of Montreal on four different occasions, today was left in a straight fight for the mayoralty with Mayor J. Adhemar Raynault, the present incumbent. Deadline for nominations was passed at noon.

DEBATING CLUB TO HOLD BUN FEED

Thirty-fourth annual get-together of members of the Wharf Street Debating Club and their friends is scheduled for this evening at the South Front Street club rooms when aspiring office holders in the 1945 municipal field will be the honored guests. The annual bun feed at the harbor side club rooms is always a popular affair as tax-payers from Foster Ward turn out in numbers to hear the respective platforms of the aspiring councillors, public utility commissioner, and mayoralty candidates, and also to offer a few suggestions of their own. Tonight's meeting will in all probability receive the customary attention.

C.N.R. Veterans Re-elect Entire Slate of Officers

The entire current slate of officers for the C.N.R. War Veterans' Association in Belleville was re-elected to act for another year, when members of the organization convened recently at their annual meeting. Larry Amo was again elected as president this being the third consecutive term for which he has been chosen.

Vice presidents of the organization are H. Drury, H. S. McElrath, C. Smith and G. Secker. J. T. Walden is past president, with Albert Jones, honorary president, and treasurer; W. G. L. Hart, secretary, and Mr. E. Pigden, chairman of the sick committee.

Growth of the C.N.R cigarette fund was cited by the fund chairman, Mr Albert Jones, who reported that 1,548,300 cigarettes had been sent to Belleville service personnel overseas at a cost of $5,272. Two hundred and fifty names are now on the list, including nursing sisters, prisoners of war and men in the services in the different theatres of war. Each person on the list receives repeat orders of "cigs" every six weeks.

Sponsor Turkey Draw.

Despite the fact there are no administration costs involved in sending the smokes overseas, the cost to maintain the present list is $250 every six weeks. The Association is now sponsoring a Christmas turkey draw in aid of the cigarette fund.

Letters of appreciation for cigarettes sent overseas continue to be received by the C.N.R. vets, recent notes of thanks being from Pte. V. Whitely, and C. S. Bushell, member of the Irish Regiment of Canada, who at time of writing was in hospital following receipt of what he terms a minor wound. "I have been smoking English cigs therefore it was a pleasure to receive some good Canadian cigarettes", he said.

In order to keep mailing lists up-to-date and to ascertain what are being received by the boys overseas, those in charge of the cigarette fund are writing to each person on their list indicating the date upon which the last parcel was shipped anr asking acknowledgment of its receipt. Enclosed is a cheery Christmas card and a wish for a

A Pipe Dream

She wasn't a day over nineteen. Occasionally she tossed her pretty blonde head in a sharp jerky gesture. She puffed away contentedly blowing little smoke rings that etched themselves against the dark interior of the car.

A reporter edged by. He looked and immediately went into a mental huddle as to the best approach. After all, in these days of prowling wolves one cannot be too careful, unless he is a wolf.

"H-mmm, let's see" quoth the scribe's mental pal. "The match gag won't work, she apparently doesn't know the road to Toronto, since the car has an American licence, and the 'Where have I been you before' idea went out with 'Stormy Weather'."

The reportorial mind a blank, the newshound retraced his steps. He paused, looked at the blonde "eyefull" and nearly jumped out of the fourth estate pants when she asked in a Nelson Eddy voice, "Gotta match, buddy?."

Newspaper matches put in a magical appearance. The scribe made an effort to light one. "I'll take over from here" murmured the Bridge Street Grable. She placed the lucifers on the car seat, opened a smart handbag and produced a package of tobacco.

With a dainty forefinger she gently tamped tobacco into the smart little pipe she had been smoking. It measured about five inches in length and had a smart filigre design on its bowl.

"We gals can't get cigs in Connecticut," she murmured between puffs. "So we do the next best thing. Wouldn't trade this thing for all the coffin nails in the world. Besides it's cheaper, and the chiselling pals can't get in on it. We definitely do not loan our pipes."

She is Miss Dorothy Lamande of Hartford, Conn., who paused here on a trip to Toronto with her father, J. S. Lamande.

Reeve J.A. Moore Again Acclaimed In Elzevir Twp.

What is believed to be a record for the Dominion of Canada in county council circles was established in the township of Elzevir on Friday last when Reeve James A. Moore was given an acclamation marking his 34th consecutive year as head of his municipality.

The dean of Hastings County councillors also chalked up another record with his 31st consecutive acclamation. He has had only three elections during his long tenure of service to his township and county.

Reeve Moore was chairman of the Roads and Bridges Committee for seventeen years which in itself is believed to be another record.

Canadians Fight Inside Germany East of Nijmegen

By The Canadian Press

Canada's forces were reported today to be back in action in the battle for Germany. A Reuter news agency dispatch from Paris said they were fighting a mile within Germany in the Niejegen salient and around the Reichswald Forest.

This report followed the disclosure that the Canadians were holding a strip of enemy soil east of Nijmegen.

A field dispatch from Ross Munro, Canadian Press war correspondent, dated Nov. 22 and released for publication Tuesday, said that Canadian troops took up positions in the Nijmegen at the extreme north end of the Allied line in western Europe in a regrouping of Allied armies for the current offensive.

Some units have been holding a narrow strip of German territory just across the Netherlands border east of Nijmegen, Munro added. They are the first Canadians into Germany in this war.

(In Quebec City last Friday Rev. Emile Turnel, former Padre of Le Regiment de la Chaudiere of Lake Megantic, Que., a French-speaking infantry regiment of the 3rd Canadian Division, made public a letter in which the regiment's commanding officer said it was the first Canadian Army unit to cross the German border.

(Prime Minister Mackenzie King said in the House of Commons at Ottawa Monday that Canadian soldiers were fighting on German soil in some places.)

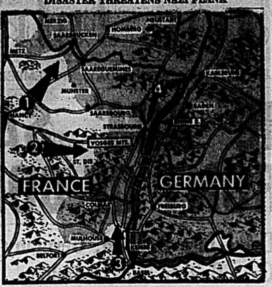
Munro's dispatch said the Canadians have been in a holding role with their principal task that of defending the approaches to the Nijmegen bridges over the Waal Rhine.

No Details of Strength.

The dispatch did not give any details as to the strength of the Canadian units in this sector or inside Germany.

Since the D-Day landings in Normandy last June, Canadian formations have fought their way steadily across northern France, through Belgium and into southern Holland. They played a key role in battering the German anchor positions around Caen during June, July and early August, and during the swift German retreat across France they swept along the channel coast, clearing the enemy from important ports such as Le Havre (which fell to British troops of the 1st Canadian army), Boulogne, Calais and Ostende.

DISASTER THREATENS NAZI FLANK



Spectacular drives of the French along the Swiss frontier (3) and up the lower Rhine, and the 7th American Army's smash to—and reports say, beyond—the Rhine at Strasbourg, have isolated an estimated 50,000 Nazis in the Vosges mountains, and have threatened the entire southern flank of the Nazi line with disaster. A new smash a bit further north has carried the Americans over the Sarr river (1). An Allied advance from Strasbourg to Karlsruhe (4) would seal off the defenders of the entire upper Rhine and lay open the way to Bavaria and southern Germany.

Their last big job was to drive the Germans from their Belgian and Netherlands mainland and island holdings covering the Schelde estuary, thus enabling Allied shipping to make use of the great port of Antwerp which fell into Allied hands almost undamaged in September.

On the Meuse.

A Reuter News Agency field dispatch reporting a conference between Gen. Eisenhower, Allied Supreme Commander, and Field Marshal Montgomery, commander of the 21st army group, at the latter's tactical headquarters, said Gen. Crerar's army was lined up along the south bank of the Meuse river and across the Meuse while Lt.-Gen. Dempsey's 2nd British army was lined up on the west bank of the river. It said "they will have priority places in the conference agenda of present and future operations."

This would place the Canadians in southwest and central Holland, where the Meuse runs roughly east and west and the British army on their right flank, in southwest Holland, where the Meuse flows almost due north before swinging west towards the North Sea.

Fight in Hip-deep Water

Both the 9th and the 1st Armies were fighting in flood-water and mud, sometimes hip-deep, in a deadly hail of mortar fire and against the stiffest opposition the Germans could muster. Supplies and equipment had to go forward on the shoulders of men or the tops of tanks.

Barmen and Kirchberg fell yesterday. The defences of the hamlet of Langerwehe, last important road centre held by the Germans west of the Roer, appeared to be breaking up.

The general picture of the 400-mile western front:

1. In the north, a deadly battle of attrition continued — object to destroy the bulk of German forces and reserves which were massed on this narrow front.
2. In the centre, Allied progress was swift in the western fringe of the Saar Basin and in the last sizeable corner of France.
3. In the south, south of Strasbourg, American and French units were consolidating and mopping up those Germans still in the difficult Vosges Mountains and Alsatian plain.

On all sections of the front, communications were being strengthened, supplies and reserves were moving up, and Gen. Eisenhower's assault forces of 55 or more identified divisions were being strengthened for yet another and more powerful surge at the vitals of Germany — the arsenal industrial centres of the Ruhr, Rhineland and Saar.

The 7th Army reached the outskirts of Zutzendorf and Berlin announced a withdrawal from the entire area north of Strasbourg.

IN MEMORIAM

SILLS — In loving memory of Elton Sills, who was injured in a rugby game and died November 29, 1941.

Nothing but memories as we journey on,
Longing for a smile from a loved one gone,
None knows the depths of our regret,
But we remember when others forget.
—Ever remembered by Mother, Father, Brother, Sister and Grandparents.

HARROW — In memory of my dear husband, Alfred Henry Harrow who died November 29, 1938.

When all is still and silent,
And sleep forsakes my eyes,
My thoughts are in the silent grave
Where my dear husband lies.
—Sadly missed by his wife, Abbie Harrow and Family.

HARROW — In loving memory of my dear grandfather, Alfred Harrow who passed away six years ago today, November 29, 1938.

God called him home, it was His will,
But in our hearts, we love him still;
His memory is as dear today
As in the hour he passed away.
I often sit and think of him
When I am all alone,
For memory is the only thing
That grief can call its own.
—Sadly missed by Lila and great grand-daughter Doreen.

Hanging of Four Men to Proceed As Scheduled

Toronto, Nov. 29 — (CP)—Execution of four men convicted of the "hot-stove" murder of Mrs. Viola Jamieson of Flanders will take place at Fort Frances, Ont., Attorney-General Blackwell said today. The four men sentenced to hang Dec. 6 are: William Schmidt, George and Anthony Skrypnyk and Elmo Tillonen. They are now in jail at Kenora.

Mr. Blackwell said no other action can be taken under the criminal code but to carry out the execution at Fort Frances where the men were sentenced.

"I have no power in the matter as existing laws require it to take place at Fort Frances," he said.

Recently, the Fort Frances council protested against the execution taking place in a wooden building on the jail lawn, contending children watched the construction in preceding executions. Arrangements are proceeding for construction of a similar building for the Dec. 6 execution.

PRAVDA CLAIMS POLISH REGIME IN LONDON HOSTILE

Paper Says 'Polish People Turn Back In Disdain From This Clique'

Moscow, Nov. 29 (AP)—Russia served notice through the columns of Pravda today that the Polish government in London had become a hostile political force with which any future negotiations were obviously impossible.

Accusing Polish reactionaries of a scheme to split the Allies and foster a new war, Pravda said it looked upon the withdrawal of Stanislaw Mikolajczyk as premier as destroying the last hopes of reapproachment with the London regime.

Mikolajczyk received gentle treatment in Pravda's discussion and apparently the possibility was envisaged that he and a number of other members of the Peasant party abroad might go to Lublin, the seat of the Soviet-sponsored committee of National Liberation.

There was no evidence here to indicate doubt that he would be welcomed by the committee if he chose to join it.

Liberation Committee.

With or without Mikolajczyk the Liberation committee continues as the governing machine for liberated Poland. Relying upon its friendship with the Soviet Union, it seems certain to consolidate its power as additional areas of Poland are cleared of the enemy.

Pravda declared the Polish government in London "does not strive for friendship between the peoples, but aims to sow seeds for a new war."

"The Polish people turn back in disdain from this clique," the Communist party newspaper declared.

The two-column commentary by Yakow Viktorov was given prominent display on the foreign page of Pravda. The article cited London newspapers as its authority for the belief Mikolajczyk tried to obtain an agreement from his cabinet to his return to Moscow to resume negotiations.

Pravda described Jan Kwapinski, who was named premier-designate after Mikolajczyk's resignation, as anti-Soviet and said his connections with the Socialist party were "camouflage."

$8,290 in Fines Levied for Sugar Ration Infraction

Montreal, Nov. 29 — (CP) —Chief Judge Gustave Perrault yesterday assessed fines totalling $8,290 on 4 Montreal firms for infraction of sugar rationing regulations. The charges included: obtaining sugar without surrendering ration cheques, failure to keep books showing sugar transactions and purchasing sugar above quota.

The firms fined were: St. Lawrence Candy Company, four fines of $1,250 each; Bonbons Duchatels Registered, $40; C. J. Relley and Son, $500, and Peanut Vendors, $1,150 and six fines of $100 each.

Says Nazis Resort To Mass Shootings Among Workers

Bern, Nov. 29 — (AP) — A dispatch today in the Schaffhausen Arbeiter Zeitung, quoting persons arriving from Germany, said the Nazis are resorting to mass shootings in an attempt to compel workers to stay on the job in armament factories.

The dispatch declared 300 workers were summarily shot on Gestapo Chief Heinrich Himmler's orders when a strike broke out at Mannheim recently after an Allied air attack.

At Duesseldorf another strike was quelled only after the Nazis received reinforcements in the surrounding area and massacred "several hundreds," the dispatch asserted.

Japanese Plan To Evacuate All of Burma

Myitkyina, Burma, Nov. 29 —(CP)—Air Force reports that the Japanese are retreating from the Mandalay area south towards Bangkok tended today to confirm advices that the Japanese plan to evacuate all of Burma.

In North Burma the Japanese were leaving behind only suicide units at key points in an effort to delay the advancing Chinese, latest reports said.

Forward Chinese elements which have by-passed Bhamo in their southward drive have not met any organized resistance.

The general Japanese retreat is by troops facing two Chinese armies, closing in on the northern stretch of the old Burma Road from Western China and North Burma.

Develop Further Thrust.

Kandy, Ceylon, Nov. 29 —(CP-Reuter)—While fighting still was raging at the approaches to Kalewa, Chindwin River port and gateway to Central Burma, an Allied thrust across the Chindwin further north was being developed today.

West of Kalewa East African forces were attacking Japanese positions in the gorge of the Myittha River, tributary of the Chindwin, supported by artillery, tanks and aircraft.

Further north, over the Chindwin River, Indian troops had taken the village of Nankan, three miles south of captured Nanbon and 16 miles south of Paungbyin.

1,500 Poles Attend Trial of Nazi Officials Of 'Extermination' Camp

Moscow, Nov. 29 —(AP)— The Soviet News Agency Tass reported today that the trial of six German officials of the Majdanek "extermination" camp drew a crowd of more than 1,500 Poles to the special court in Lublin's "Soldiers' House."

The state appointed five lawyers to defend the Germans, who face charges punishable by death. Four of the defendants were non-commissioned officers with an S. S. detachment which operated the Majdanek camp for three years.

Theatres in Lublin exhibited newsreels of the Majdanek camp, showing excavation pits where human ashes and bones were discovered.

Hopes None Too Bright Of Finding Solution

By C. R. BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Chicago, Nov. 29. (CP)— Delegates from 54 countries went into the 29th day of the International Civil Aviation Conference here today with vague and not too optimistic hopes that a key would be found to the Anglo-American deadlock.

It was reported that Viscount Swinton, British delegation leader, was awaiting instructions from London on his possible acceptance of a Canadian compromise proposal submitted to the opposing groups Monday.

That proposal, offering a compromise between the Liberal, open competition on global routes advocated by the Americans, and the sharply-restricted exercise of pick-up traffic operations by long-distance operators, asked by Britain, is believed to be the last hope of Anglo-American reconciliation on international regulation of world air commerce.

Today there was little for the hundreds of delegates to do.

British and American delegations were meeting separately in their respective quarters and it was reported H. J. Symington, head of the Canadian delegation, was being consulted by both.

Vining on Stand On Manslaughter Charge Over Drowning

Toronto, Nov. 29—(CP)—Edward R. (Ted) Vining, charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Barbara Martin, 19, one of 17 passengers who were drowned aboard the excursion cruiser Olga, June 4, took the witness stand today in his own defence.

Vining, who also faces a charge of criminal negligence in connection with the partial capsizing of the Olga, said he did not know there were 30 people aboard the boat when it went on its fatal cruise. He added that when he was told there were 30 people on the Olga, he said he did not believe it.

Questioned as to what type of livesaving equipment there was aboard the boat, he said there were eight cork lifebelts and 11 kapok belts and cushions.

"How is it that all the witnesses who testified said they only saw two or three lifebelts in the water?" Hugh Donald, Crown Counsel asked.

"I can't say," Vining replied. "I only saw two or three in the water myself."

"Did you know there was anyone on the wheelhouse?"

"No. If I had known that, I would have kicked them off."

Several Arguments

Vining told the court he had had several arguments with Sidney Smith, co-owners of the Olga, with regard to the number of passengers the boat should carry and where they should sit. He said Smith "told me to mind my own business several times." Smith was one of the 17 who were drowned.

Defence Counsel Mayer Lerner, of London, asked the accused why his boat was not licenced. Vining said in looking about for a boat to buy, he had a letter from a Mr. Ditchburn who was a well-known boatbuilder, which described a boat (the Happy Days) larger than the Olga and which said it did not need a licence.

Vining said Smith would collect the fares and then tell him how many passengers there were aboard the boat. On June 4, however, Smith had not yet told Vining the total number of passengers when the accident occurred.

Accused testified that Smith had bought the Olga, paying $1,200 for it. He said they were supposed to be "50-50 of the financial end of it." Vining said he was to operate the boat and get paid a salary out of the proceeds.

In answ eotr O .s

In answer to a question by Mr. Donald, Vining counted the number of passengers he believed to be on the boat, the total coming to 18. Earlier, Provincial Police Cpl. Ben Milligan had testified that when Vining came out of the water, he told Milligan there were "about 17 or 18 persons aboard."

Amateur Boater

Admitting to have never operated a boat as large as the Olga, Vining said he was an "amateur boater" and knew only "what Mr. Quinn (the customs inspector) had told him about operating a boat for hire.

"Why did you tell the press there were 30 people aboard the Olga," Mr. Donald asked Vining.

"I did not tell them that, They told me. I did not know there were 30 people on the boat."

Asked to explain what might have become of the 19 life saving articles of equipment, since only three were recovered, Vining said that several of the sail boats that had come to the rescue had never before had life belts, but he knew "some of them have now."

Other Witnesses.

Other witnesses at the morning session were J. E. Dicker, a conductor on the London and Port Stanley railway, who operates a boat on Lake Erie; Edward Burger of St. Thomas, a student at the University of Western Ontario, also operator of a boat for hire at Port Stanley; and Mrs. Vining.

Burger said he had been introduced to Smith as Vining's boss, and added that Vining had often helped rescue people from the lake.

Yesterday two defence witnesses told the court that accused had argued with Smith with regard to people sitting atop the wheelhouse of the Olga. They were Mrs. Margaret Wray and Mrs. Kathleen Carter who were aboard the Olga the previous night to the accident and said they were sitting on the wheelhouse roof.

Slight Response Is Seen to Call For Strike Against Pierlot Govt.

By ROGER D. GREENE
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Brussels, Nov. 29. (AP)—A call by the resistance front for a nation-wide general strike in protest against Premier Hubert Pierlot's government apparently had gained little response today.

Columns of demonstrators, however, were reported converging on the capital for a "national day of protest".

The Communists, estimated at 40,000 strong in the resistance movement, called for a full general strike until M. Pierlot's government collapsed, while other resistance groups urged only a one-day strike.

(In Moscow, the Soviet Army newspaper Red Star linked the Pierlot government with a discussion of survival of the Fifth Column in western Europe. "Firing at the people, the Pierlot government has proved its special regard for elements that collaborated with the Hitlerite invaders", Red Star said, adding: "A Fifth Column still attempts to prevent consolidation of democratic forces for speeding up the defeat of the enemy of mankind.")

While the situation in Brussels remained tense, there were few omens of danger. British troops and Belgian police stood by.

First clashes between police and demonstrators were reported to have taken place on a road outside to Brussels.

Pierlot was given a resounding vote of confidence yesterday by the Belgian Chamber of Deputies. He told the cheering chamber he would not step down in the face of demonstrations.

Alexander Says There Is No Short Cut to Germany

Rome, Nov. 29. —(CP-Reuter) — Field Marshal Sir Harold Alexander, newly-appointed Allied commander in the Mediterranean, reiterated today "there is no short cut to Germany until we beat the German army."

He told the United States Army newspaper, Stars and Stripes, to "give the infantrymen the right picture: that Italy is not of indirect importance but rather of direct bearing on the whole matter. Let him know that he is winning the war as much as any man on the Western front."

Field Marshal Alexander said offensives don't just happen. An attack didn't start because Marshal Stalin in the east or Gen. Eisenhower on the Western Front or he wanted to attack in Italy.

"This is a huge team—I would like to say an American football team except that I don't understand American football. But say it is like our British football—there are some men who hold and then pass the ball and others who score."

Field Marshal Alexander said the Po Valley offered the Germans the best possibilities for a defensive winter as the northern of the Apennines and the water courses in the valley were a difficult problem for the Allied artillery and armor and made Allied assault more difficult than the German defence.

730,749 Prisoners Taken Since D-Day

(By The Canadian Press)

Allied armies have captured at least 730,749 prisoners on the Western Front since D-Day, the equivalent of 73 German divisions as now constituted.

Actually the total captives are probably thousands greater because latest official figures as of today are from two to three weeks old for the U. S. 9th, the British 2nd and 1st Canadian armies.

Captives officially announced to date:

U. S. 1st Army 206,966
U. S. 3rd Army 126,923
1st Canadian Army 95,132
British 2nd Army 94, 794
U. S. 9th Army 55,670
U. S. 7th Army 62,170
French 1st Army 69,195
French forces with British and Canadian armies 20,000
Total 730,749.

BRANDS STATEMENT AS FAKE

Washington, Nov. 29. (CP)—Dr. H. H. Kung, vice premier of China, said in a statement last night that a London report that Madame Chiang Kai-Shek may establish a Florida residence is "an unmitigated falsehood".

Dr. Kung said Madame Chiang, in hospital because of illness, was unable to comment. His statement, issued by an aide, did not mention the London report that President Chiang and Madame Chiang have separated.

200 Canadians From W. Europe Will Get Leave

By DOUGLAS AMARON
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With the 1st Canadian Army in Holland, Nov. 29 —(CP Cable) — Two hundred Canadian soldiers from the Western European theatre with the equivalent of five years' overseas service to their credit will spend Christmas at home in Canada.

This first draft of home leave contingents left their units last week and will sail from England in December. Further drafts of five-year troops going home for 30 days' leave under the recently-announced government plan will leave monthly if shipping is available.

The 2nd Canadian Corps had the largest representation in the first contingent with 145 names. Names of the more than 1,000 eligible were placed in a gasoline tin and the luck of the draw decided who should leave.

The troops will have a full 30 days at home and while away will retain their ranks and receive full pay and allowances. Their places overseas will be filled by temporary replacements.

Britain's Service to World

Canadians and Americans in this North American Continent can be thankful that in this war they have been free from visitation of the enemy. They had only to read what the British people have endured and achieved, how they have suffered from the evil of the war-making Huns and how one home in every three in Great Britain has been destroyed or damaged during the war now in its sixth year. 131,116 civilians have become casualties among the total of 733,030 casualties for Britain. Of civilian casualties 57,298 were killed, while the armed forces casualties of 563,112 included 176,081 killed. More than a third of all British men from 14 to 64 are in the armed forces. 29,629 merchant seamen have been killed. Nearly all the women from girls of fourteen to 59 are in uniform or industry.

Britain has provided a huge number of planes and tanks and machine guns. In her fight for freedom her commercial exports from the United Kingdom declined to half.

Her shipping losses have been eleven and a half million gross tons, two thirds of her tonnage before the war. Allied ships lost were more than half British.

More than twenty-two and a half million civilian British had been moved, scattered from homes for the cause of freedom.

These are some of the experiences of Britain during the war.

In the words of Brendan Bracken, British Information Minister, "one tremendous fact" stands out clearly in the newly issued White Paper, that "the total war effort of the population of Great Britain is greater than that of any other belligerent."

The whole story is one of sacrifice and courage shown by the British people. Their efforts have not been in vain for they with "the tremendous generosity of the United States" and the help of Russia and the other Allies see victory approaching steadily.

Mr. Bracken's graphic words, "the agony of Britain under bombing and dull monotonous food" tell in part a story of British greatness in suffering and endurance.

In America no such calls have been made upon the people. Their land and homes have been safe from destruction through what Britain's people did and suffered for the world.

The ability of Britain to suffer in a great cause and to triumph is painted in these words, when he refers to Britain "selling out" so much that she loved to be able to fight for the sake of the world. "We have sacrificed most of our Victorian inheritance. What was the treasure of our grandfathers has gone and it has been well and gladly sacrificed."

Britain has borne the burden of humanity in a full measure, true to her tradition of faith in mankind and in human brotherhood. While what she has given up has been very great what she will gain in the moral power and the service performed for humanity will be one of the blessings enjoyed by the world in the future.

This burden Britain has borne without boasting, proud to be able to serve.

"Drops Very Successful"

One of the war's most remarkable feats of supply dropping from the air, and at the same time one of the heaviest blows to the Germans retreating in the Balkans, has just been achieved by the Royal Air Force.

The supplies were for Marshal Tito's army in Yugoslavia—the greatest quantity ever dropped in the Mediterranean zone in a 48-hour period: 660 tons delivered by 500 aircraft. Heavy and medium bombers of an R.A.F. group, placed at the disposal of the Balkan Air Force, contributed nearly 400 sorties to their total.

The most important aspect of the operation was its tactical timeliness. For it reinforced those Partisans who are in the path of the Germans trapped, or almost trapped, in Yugoslavia and anxious, above all else, to keep their line of retreat open.

The supply dropping was also coordinated with R.A.F. air attacks. The R.A.F. bomber group made two trips to the Sarajevo rail yards on the enemy's only rail escape line to the north during the 48 hours of the supply dropping. Thus they were hitting out themselves as well as helping Tito's men to strike.

The drops began in daylight, and the supply planes went down low, some to 300 feet—a dangerous business when flying among hills—to insure accuracy. There was no Luftwaffe opposition, but some flak. All the aircraft returned to base before dark, and then began at once to refuel and reload before taking off again to make more drops during the night. Among the stony hills and waterlogged valleys at pre-arranged places the Partisans had started bonfires in agreed patterns, as a guide to the fliers.

By midday the next day the ground crews at the airbases had hung another load of containers on the aircraft. In daylight the air crews could see heaps of collected containers on the ground below in lanes ready for transport to pick them up and take thew to the Tito fighters.

Communication between Marshal Tito's forces and the Allied authorities is now so well established that, after each supply dropping mission, the R.A.F. in Italy receives messages describing how the containers fell, and the key phrase in these reports is: "Drops very successful."

Dover Reaction

(London News Chronicle)

There has been more illness in Dover, attributable to war strain, since the enemy cross-Channel guns were silenced than there was at any time during the four years the town was under shell-fire.

Doctors' surgeries are filled daily with people who complain that they are suffering from sleeplessness, lack of energy, a feeling of impending disaster and general malaise.

"During the really bad times," said a leading doctor, "it was remarkable that there was an almost complete lack of such symptoms among our patients.

"I have prescribed more bromide during the past month than I did during the whole of the preceding year."

He thought the present troubles arose from reaction following the great strain Dover people underwent just before the fall of Calais and Boulogne.

How Germans Aided Invasion

(New York Herald Tribune)

The army revealed one of those little freaks of war which no longer needed to be kept secret:

On the first night of the invasion of southern France, the Americans plugged into the Nazi power system and lighted the beach with electricity supplied by a German-operated plant fifteen miles away. The army thought this was too good to be true—getting enemy electricity to light their way into France—and that the Germans would promptly cut it off. But for some reason the Germans kept on for three weeks pumping electricity into American installations. In that period nearly one-third of the electricity which lighted and powered the Allied invasion was furnished through the courtesy of the German army.

Where She Drew the Line

(Leonard Lyons, in New York Post)

Beatrice Lillie's return to America, after an absence of five years, brought on an avalanche of night-club, movie and radio offers. When Miss Lillie, or rather Lady Peel, was here last she was offered a role in a Bing Crosby picture. "First you're a bar-maid," the producer told her, "and in the final scene you become a titled lady—Lady Buffington." . . . I'll play a bar-maid, because I'm not a bar-maid," Lady Peel told him, "but I'll not play a Lady, because I am a Lady."

The motto of chivalry is also the motto of wisdom; to serve all, but love only one. —Balzac.

MOUTH ORGAN

It was once just the toy of a lad,
Now it sings under carrier decks.
When the weather in Burma is bad
And the boys seem in mud to their necks
And the air has the dampness of death,
Some chap with the musical gift,
Who was born with a song on his breath,
Gives his down-hearted comrades a lift.

"Harmonica" now it is called.
"Mouth organ" we knew it of old,
But wherever a column is stalled
Or boys are off watch in the hold
Or the planes have come in from the skies
Or on rafts where a few are adrift,
Some lad with a mouth organ tries
The spirits of comrades to lift.

We thought it in happier years
A toy for a youngster to blow.
Now an organ of faith it appears,
For it goes where our forces must go.
It is small, but it's great in its way,
For the saddest of moods it can shift,
And the songs it was fashioned to play
Give the fellows who hear them a lift.

TAPIOCA

It is hard to believe, but tapioca pudding is made largely of a substance that comes from a species of poisonous plant.

"Tapioca," a word of South American Indian origin, is the name we give to a wholesome vegetable food obtained from the starch in the roots of the poisonous plant known as "bitter cassava," which is indigenous to tropical America but now widely cultivated in other parts of the world.

In Latin America the cassava plant is widely known as "yuca" and "mandioca."

According to a South American legend, the food value of the cassava root was accidentally discovered by a Spanish explorer lost in the jungle of Brazil.

He had heard from the Indians that the sap of the cassava plant was highly poisonous, and, preferring a quick death by poison to a slow one by starvation and fever, he ate a bowl of soup prepared by boiling cassava roots in water.

Instead of dying he lived to tell the world how this pleasant and digestible food saved him from death.

As a matter of fact the milky juice of the bitter cassava is highly poisonous and cannot be eaten in its natural condition without considerable danger, but the application of heat, as the explorer discovered, destroys the poisonous property.

Not infrequently the tubers of the cassava plant, which may attain a height of ten feet or more, weigh as much as 25 or 30 pounds.

The juice is squeezed from them and placed in vessels where the starch deposits on the bottom. After being separated from the fibrous constituents of the root the moist starch is spread on iron plates and exposed to heat sufficient, with the aid of constant stirring, to partly rupture the granules and cause them to agglomerate into the irregular pellets which, when cooked, become the hard, translucent tapioca used in puddings and soups.

Before Pearl Harbor the United States received most of its tapioca from commercial plantations in the Dutch East Indies. Since then various substitutes for tapioca have been developed. So-called "pearly tapioca" consists of small, smooth grains prepared from potato starch.

HARD TO PLEASE ANYBODY ANY TIME

Honestly it is difficult to say anything that won't bring about as cordial a crack on the uh-uh as on the ou-wow.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union of ——— say thank you for your fine message of Oct. 11, wishing each child could take the pledge against alcohol or tobacco. We are doing all we can to bring this very thing to pass .. .. .. (Mrs. C.C.W. Corresponding Secretary.)

I am a young minister in the ——— Church, and I want to thank you for your excellent teaching regarding the use of alcohol and tobacco. I am very much concerned about the increased . . . (Signed).

So far we're happy about the whole thing, although I confess there is some trepidation in the back of my mind about the effect of a suggestion I contemplate making here for the benefit of the older folk. However, time to cross that stream when we come to it. Now comes a third letter from a woman who bears the name of a famous leader of women who died fifty years ago:

I have rejoiced in your sensible advice to young folks smoking and drinking, and your warm commendation of the W.C.T.U. However, I was amazed at your recent outburst—"I wish they'd drop the Christian part of the name . . .for I know some of the finest mothers who are not Christians". In other words you'd like to have the W.C.T.U. bow God out! I'm sure I have read in your own column more than once "God bless the W.C.T.U." —but perhaps you didn't really mean "God". I wonder if you ever heard of ——— as a Doctor would you say she was the finest nurse who cared for the patient only until the most critical stage. . . Your remarks do not indicate, Dr. Brady, that you know personally the Christ of the "Christian" and I respectfully commend Him to you.

(Signed . .. .)

I didn't say the half of it. I'd say it now, with unmistakable clarity, only I know it wouldn't be printed.

What I meant was, of course, God bless all good mothers whether they profess to be Christians or not. And that's all I meant. What this patronising correspondent thought about the nurse I can't imagine. No matter. I still say God bless the mothers who ask their children to give a pledge against using alcohol or tobacco before they come of age, and to renew that pledge on some solemn occasion every year. I tell you that is a great boon for any kid, whether his or her mother is a Christian or not.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Thanks for the Green Tea.

A month ago a nice kind lady who must have remarkable insight sent Ol' Doc Brady something out of this world, to wit, a package of GREEN tea. It has brought high dudgeon and discord to the Doc's heretofore tolerably peaceful household. It seems that all of a sudden everybody just loves green tea, whereas for a long while now everybody but the old geek himself has taken black tea and pretended to like the stuff. Nevertheless I am grateful to the nice kind lady who intuitively diagnosed my complaint and I hope she will forgive me, but somehow her letter got by me to the chucker, so I don't know the nice kind lady's name or address. In ordinary times I might speak sharply to the secretary who failed to warn me, but now, well, you know how things are. Just the same, green tea was never so good before.

Attention Nesters.

A letter signed like this: "H. Whosit"—and I always look at the signature before I read the letter—takes little of my time. I am conscious of the scarcity of good doctors and for that reason I'm willing to go beyond the pale if I believe I can help any one. But let's be honest, folks. I don't care if your name is Whosit, but I want to know whether it is Hiram or Hannah Whosit, and probably also whether it is Hiram or Hannah Whosit, it is Mr., Mrs. or Miss.

(Ol' Crank Brady.)

Running Ear

Have you a pamphlet or leaflet giving information about chronic running ear? I have had a running ear for nine or ten years and . . . . Why not tell the true facts about smoking? My father died of cancer of the throat caused by smoking.

D. E. J.)

Answer— Yes, if you provide stamped pre-addressed envelope, I'll send you pamphlet that deals with chronic running ear. Cause of cancer is unknown.

It Comes to a Boil.

You say the skin does not absorb anything. Dr. ——— says boils are from pus-producing bacteria rubbing into the skin from soiled fingers or clothing.

TRENTON

Child Injured When Hit by Car

Trenton, November 29—Six-year-old Nancy LaMoore, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert LaMoore, 98 Shuter St., received severe injuries on Tuesday morning about 11.30 when she ran into the path of a car owned and driven by Dr. T. S. Farncombe of Trenton.

The child had just left St. Peter's School and was crossing the Highway from the north to the south side at the intersection of Dundas and Queen. With her small chum, Helen Ann Kelley, of 181 Dufferin Ave., she allegedly stepped out into the street directly into the path of the car which was being driven west on Dundas St.

Witnesses said the child rolled over several times under the car from the front to the rear of the car. She suffered a fractured left hip, severe bruises and slight concussion. Dr. Gordon Johnson administered first aid and had the child rushed by ambulance to Belleville General Hospital.

The Kelley child was uninjured.

24 Cases Presented

Magistrate T. Y. Wills presided over Trenton Police Court on Tuesday, when twenty-four cases were heard, with County Crown Attorney Lt.-Col. B. C. Donnan, prosecuting.

W. Simpson, James MacDonald, and Everett Rushnell, all charged with assault, inflicting bodily harm. A doctor's certificate was produced for Rushnell stating he was unable to appear. The other two pleased guilty and Simpson was given six months' suspended sentence and ordered to pay $3.00 costs, while MacDonald's case was enlarged for one week for sentence.

C. Windover, appeared on a charge of fraud, and his case was enlarged for one week.

Twelve paid the usual $13.000 for breach of the Liquor Control Act, and two were fined $4.50 for breach of the Highway Traffic Act. One traffic case was dismissed due to the wrong number of the car being taken. This was verified by a letter from the Toronto Police.

Two appeared for non-support and one case was withdrawn as a settlement had been reached between the parties. The other was enlarged for one week.

A school attendance case was enlarged till called on.

before the House is considered one of the keys to a political crisis which causes members to go about with grim and thoughtful faces.

Has Only One Vote

The man who resigned because the government declined to take the course it has since taken in making home defence troops available for overseas service has only one vote, but by casting it with the government he can add greatly to its strength and by voting the other way do much to shake confidence in the administration.

The secret sitting opened at three o'clock yesterday and continued until 11 o'clock at night with the usual two-hour break for dinner.

Three Progressive Conservative members, Joseph Harris (Toronto-Danforth), Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe) and C. K. Desmond (Kent) remained away because they were opposed to the House meeting in secret.

The meeting followed a long caucus of Quebec Liberal members attended by Prime Minister Mackenzie King and Gen. McNaughton.

After the meeting several of the Quebec Liberals who have the tough personal problem of choosing between loyalty to their party and loyalty to the anti-conscriptionist principles of their constituents predicted there would be no more floor crossing.

Three Cross Floor

Two Quebec members, Charles Parent (Quebec West and South), J. E. Fouliot (Temiscouata) and Wilfrid Lacroix (Quebec Montmorency), have already crossed the floor.

Those who predicted there would be no more crossing the floor said the Quebec members who remained on the Liberal side would vote for the government on the main confidence motion but indicated there might be an amendment to give expression to their views.

The point made by Mr. King in his Monday speech that the vote is not on conscription but on support of the war effort is believed to provide the basis on which most of them can adhere to the government. Mr. King argued the question of conscription for overseas service was settled in 1942 when the House passed bill 80, which gave the government power to draft men for overseas service.

The feeling that any possible alternative government to the present would still continue to apply conscription for overseas and would be even less acceptable to Quebec voters than the present is also believed to be factor in the minds of the individual members.

merely another form of exploitation. It would be none too tolerable if imposed by a home government which was none too considerate of French wishes and is less tolerable because conscription is being enforced in support of an imperial war."

Other comment included:

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette: "In this crisis the government of Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King has yielded to the extent of ordering partial conscription for overseas service. Only a month ago he had said that such a step would bring on a general election, precipitate national dissension and perhaps weaken Canadian unity and strength for generations to come. Apparently a majority of the Canadian people prefer to risk all that than leave those gaps in the ranks of Canadian volunteers as they drive forward in the climactic battle for a free world in which Canada will again have the opportunity to handle its own peculiar problems in its own way."

Boston Herald: "Probably an overwhelming majority of Americans, whose own servicemen, whether draftees or volunteers, are subject to assignment in any part of the world, will wish the Mackenzie King government a large and quick vote of support."

Baltimore Sun: "The Prime Minister has found himself on the horns of a dilemma . . . It is possible the present government may fall and Canada be thrown into a general election sooner than Mr. King had planned."

Fort Worth, (Texas) Telegram: "Canada, in the fifth year of a global war, has awakened to the fact that she has as much at stake in the conflict as any other nation, and to the sobering realization that anything short of all-out effort is not enough. It is another case of the people being several jumps ahead of the government in their thinking."

Allentown (Pa.) Morning Call: "Canadians . . . did not hesitate to tell us what to do about choosing a president and a congress. We should not hesitate about telling them America is very much disappointed that Canadians are shying off from participation in the war in Europe . . . the Canadians in all too great numbers seem to have made up their minds to let Americans and Englishmen and Frenchmen fight this common war. We cannot have any high regard for Canada if such a stand be continued . . ."

The War Today—

Britain's Colossal War Effort Epic of Sacrifice for Survival

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

Today's Special: We shouldn't be surprised to learn any time now that Germany is putting out peace feelers again. My guess is that these inquiries will concern mainly the question of the personal security of Hitler and his captains. There's little else they could hope to bargain over, since unconditional surrender is customary for a country so utterly beaten as Germany will be.

Britain's colossal war effort is presented graphically and forcefully in the government White Paper issued yesterday in London, providing an epic in the history of the Allied stand against Nazi enslavement.

Britain has suffered greatly. Her casualties already crowd 750,000. One-third of her homes have been destroyed or damaged. As her colorful Minister of Information, Brenden Bracken, comments:

"We have sacrificed most of our Victorian inheritance. What was the treasure of our grandfathers has gone, and it has been well and gladly sacrificed.

John Bull can be proud of his contribution to the preservation of our civilization.

It's a matter of extreme satisfaction that all members of the United Nations can be credited with having given of their best, each according to his talents. That's the thought that impresses itself on me in reading John Bull's great record—and it's vastly important because it should remove any grounds for reproach or jealousies among the Allied powers in the matter of the respective war efforts.

This time we should be able to avoid the bitterness which grew out of comparisons in the last war.

The present conflagration has been different, for it has been literally a fight for survival. It has been one for all and all for one in the "blood, toil, tears and sweat."

For Beauty and Grace

Rub elbows with a cut lemon to whiten them.

By HELEN FOLLETT

WHEN budgeting your time for good looks attention, do please give your arms a looking-over. Hair gets curly-cued, complexions are lubricated and hand-painted, finger tips carry a red cherry shine, but what do the arms get from the cosmetic feast? Not a crumb.

Maybe you thing there's nothing much wrong with arms. For heaven's sake, where are your eyes? They gather freckles and gooseflesh. They can be too thin or too fat. They may be awkward of movement; if so, awkwardness should be corrected. Jerky arm flinging is not exactly au fait.

Before getting your manicure you can have a hand and arm treatment, if you so desire, and can spare the time. The professional treatment starts with lubricating from finger tips to shoulders with a good whitening cream. This preparation bleaches and softens the skin and the massage movement starts the circulation going.

While the cream remains on, a refining powder is applied, forming a paste, which smooths bumps and sweeps away dead skin scales. This powder also has a whitening action. The third step is applying a fragrant lotion to further soften and refine the texture of the skin. One refreshingly scented with apple blossom is delightful. The treatment takes about thirty minutes.

You can give yourself this same treatment at home with a little concentration, and with special attention to the massage movement.

Goose flesh disappears under frequent lubricating, often is treated effectively with one of those milky, semi-liquid hand lotions. Friction with borated talcum is recommended.

Watch your elbows. You never see them: you may not be aware that the skin is grey and coarse. To whiten them, to remove the grey cast, plunge them into a cut lemon. Rinse with clear water, apply cold cream.

Pretty arms are a glorious good looks asset, worth cultivating.

Mrs. W.C. Mikel Addresses Guild On Red Cross

Addressing the regular monthly meeting of the St. Andrew's Guild in the Church Hall on Tuesday evening was Mrs. W. C. Mikel who spoke on the subject of Red Cross work. She urged all women to keep working at the Red Cross unit because even though victory appears certain, more and more workers are going to be needed to aid in relieving distress in bombed and devastated countries. Mrs. Mikel mentioned the Junior Red Cross with 226 branches in Hastings County and a membership of 600. Health rules are being stressed for these juniors, who have contributed large sums of money to the work of caring for needy children.

Besides the war work which constitutes the greater portion of the Red Cross work at present, Mrs. Mikel mentioned other activities, which included home nursing, highway aid stations, fire and disaster victims, also victims of torpedoeing and the work of the 29 outpost hospitals in Ontario. She also mentioned the emergency kits which are available in Belleville in case of epidemics. Mrs. Mikel made mention too of Prisoner of War parcels, 12,500 of these being sent every week from Toronto at a cost of $2.50 each. Ten million have already been sent. Mrs. Mikel had an array of Red Cross work on display.

Presiding for the meeting was Mrs. J. Wilson. In the business period, donations of money were voted to the Mission Band, the Missionary Society and the Hospital Auxiliary. A brief report on the work of the Hospital Auxiliary was read by Mrs. I. L. Moore.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

A Second Marriage

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

1.—I have a problem on my hands. Will you please help me? I'm going to marry soon for the second time, and I'm marrying a man who has not been married before. You see the first time I was married the ceremony was performed by a justice of the peace, and I wore a street dress. But now my prospective bridegroom and I want very much to have a formal wedding, with bridesmaids and ushers, and I want to wear a white wedding dress and, if possible, a long bridal veil. But somehow I feel like a hypocrite to do this, and I'm afraid people will say that I have no right to be dressed in white. What is your opinion?

2.—If the groom wears a tuxedo, should all his attendants wear tuxedos also?

3.—Also I wonder if it matters who gives me in marriage? I have no close male relative, but I have several friends who have long been close family friends.

M.P.

1.—Your own feeling as to what you should do in plans for your second marriage is the right one. . . and I am sure you would deeply regret going against convention and good taste. You should not wear white, and of course no bridal veil. You may properly wear a pastel or deep-toned dinner dress (floor-length, simple in design) with a smart little hat. Or you may wear a street-length afternoon dress with corsage; or your travelling costume. You may have a maid or matron of honor; your bridegroom, a best man . . . no bridesmaids. Keep your plans simple, but remember that your wedding can be lovely even though informal.

2.—Yes.

3.—Does your church denomination require that you be given in marriage? If it does, you may properly ask a man friend-of-your-family to take over this duty.

Opera Escorts Are Not Necessary.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

1.—If several young ladies wish to dress in formal evening clothes to go to the opera, must they be escorted?

2.—What are the duties of a matron of honor at a wedding where there will also be two bridesmaids? And must the matron of honor be escorted?

3.—Is it customary for the bride's family to pay for the dresses of the wedding attendants?

A.B.

1.—No.

2.—It is the matron of honor who holds the bride's bouquet during the ring part of the ceremony, and who when the bride leaves the altar to begin the recessional, adjusts her veil and train. These duties, and the general procedure for the wedding, will be explained by the minister at the wedding rehearsal. The matron of honor walks alone in the processional, after the bridesmaids, and before the bride and her father. In the recessional she may walk alone (considered the best procedure), or, if the bride prefers, with the best man.

3.— No. Although all the items of the costumes of her attendants are selected by the bride, each attendant pays for her own costume. And this is why of course, the bride should be most thoughtful about choosing clothes that are not too expensive, particularly in these days of limited budgets.

Do Women's Informal Clothes Make for Slovenliness?

One of the wittiest of poets has said that eyes are the magnifying glasses of our persons. And anyone who has seen a girl paint a fresh mouth on her face every fifteen minutes is inclined to agree with Alexander Pope.

Those fresh mouths, on they go, at funerals, in churches, restaurants, buses, even rushing for trains. With beauty parlors on every other street corner, and the pursuit of beauty one of the country's great industries —are women becoming slovens?

Unpressed slacks, turbans askew, slippity sloppity shoes, and now a picture of a couple of college girls who've neglected to tuck their blouses into their "pants," recalling the small boy's taunt at an enemy "Giddy giddy gout, your shirt tail's out." The stringy, floating bobs of these devotees of higher education look as if relations with comb and brush had been definitely severed.

Residents of the town in which this college is situated — and it's one of the best women's colleges in the country — have risen in protest at the appearance of some of the students. They declare that the girls wear floating shirt-tails and dungarees around the village but get all dressed up when there's some place to go.

Whether it's due to the war or not, and in spite of those beauty parlors on every other corner, so many young girls, and pretty girls at that, seem to have given up the smart, crisp well-turned out appearance which was their hallmark only a little while ago.

If girls will wear slacks, and here's hoping they may have mislaid their hand mirrors and do not get an impartial back view, why not have their "pants" pressed once in a while? If they go in for turbans, they should not put them on as if they had a "mad" on the entire world, themselves included.

Most girls have the beauty of youth, or, as the French call it "beauty of the Devil," and heaven knows in this sad, war-torn world we need all the beauty we can muster to keep up our spirits at the moment.

With the dishevelled sisterhood on every hand, it is certainly a relief on the eyes to regard the well-turned out servicewomen.

The Marry Go Round

A Wife—Or a Paper Doll?

When a young man writes me describing the girl he expects to marry and asking if I think she will make him a desirable wife, I always answer by firing back a lot of questions. Because these are the things he should know about her—but seldom bothers to make sure of.

My first question is, is she the girl to whom you have an impulse to go when your heart aches or your head aches or something has knocked you off your trolley? Is she the one person to whom you could tell your troubles and confide your mistakes and be sure of sympathetic understanding? Is hers the shoulder you'd like to lay your head on when you are all in and defeated?

2. Is she a congenial pal—an ideal comrade with whom you always enjoy yourself? Is a party never dull to you if she is there; and is the most riotous party a dud if she isn't? Do you enjoy simple things like long walks, talks, books, going to art exhibits or movies or trimming the Christmas tree together? Does she never bore you or get on your nerves?

3. Does she understand you — your aims, your hopes, your ambitions, and even your weaknesses and peculiarities? Does she brace you, stimulate and inspire you, and put meaning into your work and significance into your job? Does she somehow give you new pep and a zest for life? That is mighty important to a man, whether he is in the midst of the fight in Europe or the Pacific or back home, trying to make a new life for himself after the war.

4. Finally, and most important, is she your most loyal admirer booster and Cheer-Leader? Does she bolster up your self-esteem and always cure you of your inferiority-complex? Does she recognise the intrinsic fine qualities in your character down underneath all the boyishness and selfish exterior? Does she make you think of yourself as a pretty fine and capable fellow?

Is she the girl who has faith in your ability or your skill or your talent—the girl who believes in you?

Because the wife who will make a man happiest is the one who has the heart to understand and sympathise with him, the brains to inspire him, the character to brace and boost him, and the loyalty to stand by him!

If your girl hasn't these four qualities, you'd better go and buy yourself a paper doll!

Do What Your Doctor Does If Child Is Listless

Because the tongue is the upper end of the stomach and bowels, it is usually the first thing a doctor looks at when he examines a sick child. He knows that a coated tongue and bad breath is a danger signal —a warning of an upset condition below, which may lead to real illness.

Don't you take chances — look at your child's tongue and check the breath every day! And at the first sign of bad odor on the breath or a coated tongue, give Children's Own Tablets. Small, pleasant-tasting tablets made especially for youngsters from runabout age to 15 years, they are wonderfully effective in helping to clean out harmful wastes and sweeten sour, upset stomachs. No drastic weakening flush-out action like many old-fashioned laxatives have.

NOVEMBER

I love the smell of smoke
Upon late Autumn's air;
The lazy warmth that turns to frost
And coldly lingers there.
The dull and dreary days that cloud
The mind with deep unrest
Are never dull or drear to me;
I take them to my breast

I love the furrowed fields of brown;
Bordered by dead grass,
I love to seek November's woods;
And through old meadows pass.
I love the bare elm's graceful limbs
And the stately upright pine,
I love to search for secrets hid
Beneath deep root and vine.

I love November's unseen strength
That does not flaunt its worth;
But harbors deep God's secret
That gives to earth new birth.
—E. Pearl Brummell.

Nonagenarian True To the Union Jack

London, Nov. 28. (CP)—An Englishwoman of 92, ordered by the Germans to leave her home in Florence, Italy, refused. She was given a time limit at the end of which she was to be compulsorily evacuated. She still wouldn't go and when German soldiers came to move her they found her in her night clothes, in bed, covered by a massive Union Jack.

Two days later, still triumphant in her own home, she was killed by a shell which wrecked the house.

Reporting this story, a Red Cross correspondent wrote that "through all their sufferings British exiles in Italy kept faith with the highest ideals of their great heritage".

Airmen Build Homes At Remote Air Post

By KATHLEEN REX
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

A West Coast R.C.A.F. Patrol Base, Nov. 28. (CP) —A 15-minute trek through the forest and you're in Dobbieville. Sometimes it's difficult getting there at night because the road you travel is dark and the path is no highway.

The clay mud sticks to your boots and when you miss one of the sharp turns in the trail you may bark your shins on a tree-stump if you're not careful. But once you've stubbed your toe on your own door-step and landed inside your own cabin —well, its swell to be home.

Married air force personnel at this remote bush station hacked Dobbieville out of the wilderness themselves with the help of a few axes, a bulldozer and typical R.C.A.F. bulldoggedness.

Perhaps when Sqdn. Ldr. Roland Dobson, officer commanding a certain squadron up here, suggested to his men that they build homes near the station, he little realized so many would take him at his word. First one log cabin, then another, went up until a typical pioneer settlement stood in the small forest clearing. It was named Dobbieville after its founder, Sqdn. Ldr. Dobson, whose home is in Barrie, Ont., has since been posted to Toronto, but his "city" continues to flourish. Dobbieville still spells home to many an airman and his family.

Take the Majors for instance. FO. Charlie Major, his wife Gerry and two-year-old John, claim Winnipeg as their home-town but they insist that life can be fun even if you have to lead it in a home-made cabin.

Of course once in a while it does have its little difficulties, Gerry said. "I still have to get used to this business of ordering food by mail."

It seems that Gerry had waited nearly a month for the weekly boat to bring food and household supplies she had ordered from Vancouver. "It all came at once", she said. "—just look at that food—$50 worth of it". She pointed to the crates and boxes which lined one wall of the small cabin.

"This is great country for children", Charlie said. "Plenty of fresh air and at least you don't have to fret about them getting run over by automobiles up here—there are none".

"The only thing I have to worry about with John is that the airmen keep giving him candy", Gerry sighed. "I think I'll put a sign around his neck one of these days saying, 'Please do not feed.'"

The Goodyear Research Laboratory, dedicated to scientific research, is believed to be the finest laboratory for its purpose in the world.

This is a Goodyear Synthetic Rubber Tire!
Goodyear dealers have it ... for eligible drivers only. It is the result of Goodyear's forty years' experience in tire-building plus Goodyear's specialized knowledge of synthetic rubber ... gained through unceasing research and testing.

Out of Goodyear Research...
...A RUBBER LIFERAFT ...A BULLET-SEAL "GAS" TANK
...MANY SECRET DEVELOPMENTS OF WIDE POSTWAR USEFULNESS
...AND A CONTINUOUS STREAM OF TIRE IMPROVEMENTS!

Since its foundation, at the turn of the century, Goodyear has carried on with relentless energy its quest for improvement in the making and application of better rubber products.

In the Goodyear Research Laboratory, skilled chemists and engineers with "shirt sleeve" imaginations, utilize all the skill, all the experience, all the knowledge Goodyear has acquired through more than forty years of working with rubber.

There is no waiting for the results of Goodyear research: Ideas and improvements, created by need, become practical realities in the laboratory. Then, tested and proven, in day to day service ... they are incorporated into modern Goodyear products.

Spurred by war, many history-making products, born of Goodyear research, are serving the fighting forces of the United Nations. Some of these are illustrated below; some must remain secret until another day.

During the years that have passed, many Goodyear discoveries have been adopted as standard in the tire building field. During these years tire performance has improved immeasurably ... tire costs have consistently reduced.

Goodyear continually reaches ahead of tomorrow to provide the best for you today. That is one reason why there was no delay in utilizing synthetic rubber to meet the needs of wartime. Goodyear was ready when the need arose. Long ago Goodyear discovered how to use this new material.

In today's Goodyear Synthetic Rubber Tire you get all the benefits that Goodyear skill and experience can put into a modern tire. If you are eligible for new tires ... Goodyear is your best buy.

Rubberized Life Rafts, developed by Goodyear, save the lives of airmen when planes are forced down at sea. These rafts inflate in seconds with chemical gas released by a rip cord.

Bullet-Sealing Fuel Tanks for warplanes are another product of Goodyear research. When a bullet pierces the tank the puncture is automatically sealed, to eliminate the hazard of fire and loss of fuel.

Dektred is a new Goodyear "war paint" that provides a flame-proof, non-skid, weather-resistant floor and deck covering for ships, trucks and aeroplanes. It also has many potential civilian uses.

Goodyear Pliofilm: A transparent, waterproof, moisture-proof wrapping material with literally thousands of applications as positive protection for moisture sensitive products.

LifeGuards, another Goodyear development, replace ordinary inner tubes, provide positive blow-out protection. If a blowout occurs, the LifeGuard carries the load, allows the driver to steer to a safe, sure stop.

DETROIT WINGS STRENGTHEN HOLD ON THIRD PLACE

Rossmen Defeated Right at Home by 6-3 With Hollett Starring

(By The Canadian Press)

Detroit Red Wings, for the third time this season, showed they are masters over Art Ross' Boston Bruins by scoring a 6-3 victory over the Rossmen before 11,000 spectators at the Boston Garden in the only National Hockey League game last night.

The win strengthened the Border City team's hold on third place, sending them to within two points of the second place Toronto Maple Leafs.

Red Wings were paced by veteran Bill (Flash) Hollett, former Boston star, who scored two unassisted goals and set up the first Detroit marker, made by Ted Lindsay, rookie from Kirkland Lake, Ontario.

While the Wings held their American rivals scoreless in the first and last periods, they still were unable to stop Bill Cowley, classy Bruin centre, from boosting his league-leading point total to 24. He got an assist with veteran Herbie Cain on Bill Jennings' first goal of the second period and also on Pat Egan's counter in the same session.

Lindsay and Jud McAtee netted the only goals of the first period and Hollett and Joe Carveth scored twice for Detroit in the second. Count Grosso got the other wing goal.

Pat Egan, hefty Bruin defenceman, scored Boston's other goal seconds after he bounded out of the penalty box from serving his third minor misdemeanour of the game.

The luck of the guy! Allan Dodd, former collegiate wrestling star at Oklahoma University, met Hollywood's famous Goldwyn Girls while working in a picture. The girls—and what lovelies—formed a syndicate to back Dodd, agreeing they will take care of him until he lands a contract. When he gets one, he must pay them 10 per cent of his earnings for five years. The papers are being signed above by three of the girls—Karen Gaylord, Georgie Lange and Deannie Best. Toronto, Nov. 29 — (CP). — Competition on western race tracks might not be as keen as that on tracks in eastern Canada and the United States, but it's just as tough, says little Bobby Summers of Winnipeg. The classy jockey returned home the other day after a triumphant 16-month stand on eastern tracks.

Summers told Bill Good of the Winnipeg Tribune that the western thoroughbred circuit is as tough as any on the continent, although the calibre of the nags isn't as high. There is more chance of getting hurt on the small western tracks — most are of the half-mile variety—and the jockeys aren't as capable and careful as the experts in the big time, naturally.

Summers is one of the group of western Canadian riders who have made good in the big circuit. Georgie Woolf, Ted Atkinson, Johnny Longden, Eddie and Herb Litzenberger are some of the others, who got their groundwork on tracks in Calgary, Regina and Saskatoon.

Arclight Rugby?

A suggestion that night football and longer schedules may have to be adopted in Ontario has been put forward by Tommy Moore in the Hamilton Spectator. It will be impossible for a team to keep on an even keel financially playing only three league games a season, says Moore, because "no longer do the athletes play for glory and tin cups." At least two games a week would have to be played to extend the schedule, and night ball is the only solution — there's a certain law against playing anything on Sundays.

Incidentally:

When Cap'n Jim Sutherland of Kingston, Ont., appeared at the Ontario Hockey Association annual meeting in Toronto, it was his 55th appearance at the yearly confab. Guess what Cap'n Jim, staunch backer of Kingston's hockey hall of fame, talked about . . . Jimmy Orlando, storm centre of that celebrated military service case early in the war, is stationed at Camp Debert, N.S., with the Canadian Army now. He isn't playing hockey though. The former Detroit Red Wing is in bed with several broken bones plaster-casted after a motorcycle accident . . . Before Ottawa Glebe Collegiate and West Hill High of Montreal, they were talking of the wonderful opportunities the schoolboys had for promoting amity and understanding on the football front. That faded rapidly in a riproaring dispute between the two centres, with one of the Montreal referees calling the Ottawans "stuffed shirts" and other things . . .

CAPITALS BEAT ST. LOUIS 3 TO 1

(By The Canadian Press)

Indianapolis Capitals defeated St. Louis Flyers 3-1 last night at St. Louis in the only game scheduled in the American Hockey League. The victory put Capitals into a first-place tie with Pittsburgh in the Western Division.

Neither side scored during the first period, but Indianapolis started off the second with a bang when Dick Kowcinak tallied within 34 seconds. Tony Bukovich added another about the middle of the session.

Butch McDonald made the Capitals' third tally midway through the final period and about a minute later Johnny Jakkula scored Flyers' lone goal.

Revised Schedule For Junior O.H.A.

Toronto, Nov. 29 — (CP)—Secretary William A. Hewitt of the Ontario Hockey Association today issued a revised schedule for the Association's seven-team junior A series. The revision was made necessary by the withdrawal of the Hamilton team a day before play began in the series Nov. 18.

The remaining seven teams—Toronto Young Rangers, Toronto Marlboros, Toronto St. Michael's, Oshawa, Port Colborne, St. Catharines and Galt — will play a schedule of 81 games including Feb. 24. Ten of the games have already been played. Three of the games are listed as four-point contests. Play-offs open the week of Feb. 26.

St. Catharines Swamps Marlboros on Home Ice by 11-2 Count

(By The Canadian Press)

St. Catharines Falcons today enjoyed a first-place tie with Toronto St. Michaels in the O.H.A. Junior "A" circuit, each having three straight victories, as a result of the Falcons' 11-2 victory on home ice over Toronto Marlboros last night.

Oshawa, in second place, has played only two games and won both of them.

Last night the Falcons led 4-0 at the end of the first period and 6-0 at the end of the second.

Peterson, Dawdy and McMurdy each scored two goals for the Falcons the other goals coming from T. Smelle, White, Delmonte, Davis and Edwards. Kane and McNabney netted for Marlboros.

New York, Nov. 29. (AP)—At the Football Writers luncheon Monday, Fred Walker wisecracked: "You went to Princeton, eh? You must have had a lot to apologize for". . . . Jimmy O'Connor Sinks Four To Swamp Volants

Ottawa, Nov. 29 — (CP)—Jimmy O'Connor, who made his debut in senior hockey company here last night as a member of Montreal Royals, dealt Hull Volants a double dose of grief by scoring four goals to pace Royals to a 9-2 decision over Volants in a Quebec Senior Hockey League fixture before a paid crowd of 2,721.

Volants were in the picture only briefly. They got the first goal when Eddie Amboise polished off a three-way play with Edgar Mentzel and Rod Lorrain, but from then on the Royals had things all their own way.

The Montrealers, cutting pretty patterns with their passing, skated Volants to a standstill. They led 3-1 at the end of the first period, held the lead by a 4-2 count at the second interval, but even then were in no serious danger of suffering their initial setback.

Royals broke loose with five goals in the final frame. Jack Carthy was O'Connor's closest rival with a goal and two assists, while Ernie Laforce, Henry Hayes, Gerry Heffernan and Mike McMahon supplied the remaining Royal counters. McMahon was making his first start of the season.

Basketball, next on the sports calendar, makes a somewhat early entrance in New York as two pro teams pry off the lid. In this action shot, Irv Torgoff of the Philadelphia Spahs takes the ball from Ed. Terzynski of Oshkosh.

ALL RILED UP!

Seems as though "Whipper Billie" Watson has his hair all mussed up over tonight's team match at the Hume Arena when the "pride of York Township" teams up with "Irish Tom" Collins in a battle royal against that pugnacious pair of Ivan Rasputin and Al Dunlop, whose ring roughness preceded them long since. There'll be no holds barred when these four tangle tonight. For good measure promoter Tunney has Chief Thundercloud and Joe Christie in the semi-final and to round out his greatest show of the year Jimmie Burke opens the card against Bill Stack.

RECORD TURNOUT IS ANTICIPATED

Toronto, Nov. 29 — (CP) — Ontario Minor Hockey Association officials said today a record attendance is anticipated at the Association's 10th annual meeting in Toronto Saturday. Delegates to the meeting have been invited to attend the Ontario Hockey Association's annual conference of referees the same day.

Already midget and juvenile entries have been received from St. Andrew's College, Aurora, and Bowmanville and juvenile entries from Cobourg, Delhi, Hespeler, Simcoe, Tavistock and Welland. Juvenile and bantam entries have been received from Kingston and a bantam entry from Elmira.

Secretary J. L. Christie made public a paragraph from a letter he received recently from St. Catharines saying that the O.H.A. junior A team from that city — currently tied with Toronto St. Michael's College for first place in the junior A series—has nine players developed on the bantam, midget and juvenile teams. "If we can eventually produce an O.H.A. team of homebrews then we will feel that all these morning practices at 6:30 . . . were not in vain."

Joe Krol, star quarterback of the Hamilton Wildcats, is winner of the Imperial Oil trophy as the Ontario Rugby Football Union's most valuable player who combines sportsmanship with his performance.

Announcement of the award was made at Toronto last night by Frank Lennard, president of the O.R.F.U. Its award is on the basis of votes by players on all league teams. The 1943 winner was Bob Cosgrove of Toronto RCAF Hurricanes.

Krol was the leading scorer in the O.R.F.U. this past season. Honorable mention went to Arnie McWatters of Ottawa; Ross McKelvey and Sammy Sward of Toronto's Balmy Beach; Bill O'Brean of Hamilton and Gord Brennan and Jim Cummings of Toronto Indians.

Executive of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association at a Toronto meeting in Christmas week will decide the venue of next spring's Allan Cup final for the Canadian Senior Amateur Hockey championship. Representatives of the C.A.H.A. conferred in Toronto yesterday with officials of the Vancouver Exhibition Association to discuss the possibility of holding the Allan Cup final at Vancouver.

The Dominion of Canada Rifle Association announced last night its small bore competitions will be held during January, February and March next. About 700 teams representing units of the Canadian (Reserve) Army are expected to take part in the annual small bore competition.

Pittsburgh Hornets yesterday acquired a new centre and two new wingmen from Montreal Canadiens. They are Johnny Mahaffey, centre, and wingman Gerry Plamondon and Claude Campeau. Art Giroux, Hornet right wing, was sold to St. Louis Flyers.

Hal Newhouser of Detroit has been named the American League's most valuable player, the second left-handed hurler chosen since the Baseball Writers' Association of America first made the award in 1911. The Tigers' temperamental twirler edged out Paul Trout, his right-hand pitching partner, by a narrow margin.

At Toronto last night the Incorporated Canadian Racing Association announced that the suspension of Chris Stable of Kitchener and of trainer Bill Chris has been lifted. The suspensions were made during the recent meeting at Dufferin Park. One Chris horse, Mere Frolic, remains suspended.

Thomas A. Teather, former coach of St. Catharines senior lacrosse team, last night was elected president of the St. Catharines Athletics Lacrosse Association. He is the father of three members of this year's Canadian champion Athletics, now in the armed forces — Tom, with the R.C.A., George, with the R.C.A.F. overseas, and Jack, with the Royal Canadian Engineers.

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

The United States Municipal News, published by the Conference of Mayors, culls from Sunshine Magazine, the following:

"A man bought several dozen boxes of cigars, and had them insured against fire. When he had smoked them, he put in a claim against the insurance company that they had been destroyed by fire. The company refused to pay and the man sued. The judge ruled that the company had given the man a policy protecting against fire, and must pay. As soon as the man accepted the money, the company had him arrested on a charge of arson."

Neat little tale. The moral being we gather: Insurance companies are not so dumb that honesty isn't still the best policy—even toward an insurance policy.

Around the Town.

Seems the St. Mike's-Belleville Collegiate junior six-man rugby game has been postponed until Thursday afternoon....A win for the "Collegians" will give them the Quinte crown, while an "Irish" victory will force a sudden death saw-off....B.C.I. will be minus the services of Johnny Rollins placing more responsibility on the shoulders of Bob Strachan, Diamond, Locke, Carefoot and company against Coach Doran's speed of Ed Barrett, Semark, Moher, Peets, etc.....The outcome should be interesting..See where Harry Davis, popular first baseman of the Toronto Maple Leaf baseball club, has been named manager of the Leafs for the 1945 season. Prexy Pete Campbell made the announcement yesterday after releasing Burleigh Grimes some months ago....Davis is a veteran of 16 years in Professional baseball, the last three having been with the Fleet Street Toronto team.... President Joe Samain and Sec. Don Lee, of the Belleville Men's Softball League, are making gala plans for the first league banquet ever attempted by the local softball fraternity....It is hoped a goodly representation of team personnel will be on hand next Tuesday to learn the inner workings of what makes softball tick.

Looking Backwards.

Reminiscing about the science of drop-kicking, which he declares is now a lost art, Mike Rodden, Kingston sport columnist goes on to say: "It was Frank Shaughnessy of McGill who brought about a reformation. He catered to the goal from placement and there was one season when McGill used an artificial mound on which to tee the ball, thus providing much amusement for their opponents.

So the goal from the field gave way to the placement and only a few players, Annis Stukus of Toronto being one of them, became proficient in the art. And yet as I look back into the years I see placement kickers who were vastly superior to Stukus at his best. 'Bull' Ritchie, of the University of Toronto seniors, was one of them and the late Jack Maynard of the same team was another. They reigned in an age when touchdowns were converted from placement kicking, the rule being that the ball had to be held by a teammate in line with the spot where the touchdown was scored and this was in operation until 1920, believe it or not.

On many occasions Ritchie and Maynard were called on to try the convert from the side line while 'shooting' at a very narrow target and yet they succeeded far oftener than they missed. Now with all the shouting about the art of placement kicking and about Stukus there isn't a placement kicker anywhere good enough to shine the shoes that Ritchie and Maynard used to wear."

Remember When.

The Norton H. Crow Memorial Trophy for 1939 was awarded Larry O'Connor, Cobourg and Toronto hurdler and sprinter, five years ago today after the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada judged him the outstanding amateur of the year. O'Connor was a member of the Canadian Olympic team of 1936 and of the British Empire games two years later.

Eight in All.

No doubt all eight grapplers Promoter Tunney is bringing to town tonight will ultimately be part and parcel of the feature attraction — team wrestling. Of course in the main scrap the fans will have Ivan Rasputin and Al Dunlop as the melodramatic villains, while Billie Watson and Tom Collins as the village heroes in some tag team rasslin'. However, the night's fun will come to pass when the over-zealous preliminary contestants gather around to take in the sights. They always finish up as principals, which should make eight in all. It will be interesting, as well as entertaining, from the spectators' viewpoint.

Watch Connie Mack.

Says Dog Vaughan in the Windsor Star: "Connie Mack has maintained for years, ever since 1941 in fact, that he expects to win another American League pennant before he retires....His activities in the last few weeks would indicate that he may be counting on 1945 for the fulfillment of his dream.... First, he arranged a working agreement with the Toronto club of the International League; then he made a bid for the Minneapolis franchise in the American Association.... That deal did not materialize but his efforts indicate the trend of his thoughts....For many years the A's have been labelled the second worst club in the big leagues, their only rivals in mediocrity being their fellow occupants of Shibe Park, the Phillies....This past season, however, Mack's outfit finished just a step out of the first division, with the aid of Class AA connections....Late in the campaign, Connie paid $25,000 for catcher Jim Pruett, an American Association standout at Milwaukee and Hal Peck another Brewer star, is believed to have set him back as much more.. All of which adds up to a snappy slogan—"Watch Connie's drive in '45!"

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 544
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

If you jump to a game on the least provocation, it is time you brushed up on your bridge education.

Keep working on this hand:

♠Q 3
♥A K Q J 10 8 6 2
♦A
♣A 6

With this hand a player opened with four hearts. His excuse was: "I know it's gonna play in hearts and I can make a game in it with what I have. No use fooling around."

"Your side may miss a slam that way," he was told. His reply was: "Of course not. My partner knows what I've got. If he can see slam after that, he can go to it."

That kind of talk sounds reasonable when it first hits your eardrums. But opening with a game bid is unwise. There are lower bids that will surely get there. Meantime, partners can swap advices.

By employing lower starting bids, immediate game bids are reserved for special signals. They are then used for sacrifice shut-out, or uncontrollable-urge purposes.

What is the standard signal meaning of an opening bid of four in a major suit (hearts or spades)? It shows a long suit and no sure trick in any other suit.

Such a bid admits it may be defeated two or three tricks if partner has no help. It asks partner to pass unless he has at least three aces and a king. For sound game bids, use something else.

The beauty of any good bidding system is found in its effective signals. The best signals therein are requests for certain kinds of co-operation from partner.

One of these efficient signals is the forcing two bid. So, if a player sees enough to make a game, he need not bid a game at once. He can use a forcing signal to ask partner's help until game is reached.

Thus, an opening game bid has an unusual meaning. It says: "I'm taking a gamble, partner. So, keep your nose out of this."

Task of Reaching Buried Men Now Appears Hopeless

Burton-on-Trent, England, Nov. 29 (CP)—A physician who had been working steadily for more than 36 hours at the scene of Monday's bomb depot disaster near here said today that rescue work might have to be abandoned soon as the task of reaching buried men appeared hopeless.

"The men buried in the dump," he said, "are covered by thousands of tons of earth. It would take weeks of hard work by hundreds of men to reach some of the galleries. The authorities probably will recognise the hopelessness of it."

Only a relatively few bodies were recovered in all-night labors. It still is feared the number of dead might exceed 150.

Whatever the decision may be, besmeared and weary workers put on their oxygen masks again at dawn and resumed their burrowing into the gas-filled caverns.

A coroner's inquest into causes of the blast was adjourned after preliminary proceedings.

The Bartislava radio asserted the exposion was caused by "a German V-weapon."

Meaning The Young Patriots, and pop said, A fine looking body of boys.

We're going to have a secret meeting just before supper and it's my turn to make up the secret password for tomorrow, I said, and pop said, That's quite a responsibility.

The main thing is, I want to be sure it's a password that nobody can guess, I said. I've got it all made up already, pop, so will you see if you can guess it, pop? I'll give you 3 guesses, I said, and pop said, My first guess is Vermiform.

Well G, pop, why should it be that? I said, and pop said, Why shouldn't it?

Being a good answer, and I said, I'll give you a hint, pop, just to see if anybody could guess it even with a hint. It starts with a B, I said, and pop said, Then my 2nd guess is Wax.

But jimminy, pop, wax dont start with a B, I said, and pop said, Beeswax certainly does, it starts with a bee making the honeycomb from which we derive beeswax.

Anyway, pop, wax is wrong, I said. So you've got one more guess and I'll even give you another hint. It means about the same thing as watch out, I said, and pop said, My 3rd and final guess is Bother.

Well how does that mean watch out? I said, and pop said, Bother is the exclamation commonly employed by refined people to indicate their anoyance when they leave their watch out in the wet grass over night.

Still wrong, I said. Oh well, I guess if you cant guess it even with 2 hints, I guess nobody cant, I said. The password being Beware.

By HYE BOSSIN

That recent blast at Hollywood stars cutting their playing time on the war fronts didn't win much support from soldiers generally, although it appeared in an army newspaper. Paulette Goddard, for instance, mails 23,000 pinup photos monthly to meet overseas requests . . . Cara Williams has had feature roles in films but won't be satisfied until she's a star. Asked by a reporter to name her favorite star, she said "Cara Williams." Refreshing honesty . . . Michael Curtiz will direct "The Life of Will Rogers," a film that many are anxious to see. No doubt it will enjoy greater success than "Mark Twain," a grand picture which did only fair at the box-office. Rogers and his wit are still alive in the memory of most persons.

Do you remember the hit film of two years ago, "Sergeant York?" It was about Alvin York, the soldier who killed and captured more Germans than any other in 1914-18.

In Nova Scotia there is a community called New Germany. The theatre there is operated by a man named Alvan Yorke.

Being a lover of prose I must admire the manner in which Dr. Willard Brewing of St. George's United Church, Toronto, joined his praise of two films with religious themes, "The Great Dr. Handel" and "Going My Way." Said Dr. Brewing: "One is the song of the angels in the hills, the other the echoing song of street urchins. Handel would have exulted to have Bing Crosby's boys' choir under his baton for an hour". . . . Hollywood guide: "That man standing there is the fellow who used to put his right hand in the lion's mouth in animal films." Sightseer: "What's his name?" Guide: "Lefty". . . . Manager of the Imperial Theatre, Canada's largest, is named Tom Daley. He recently played "Arsenic and Old Lace." One of the opening scenes is in a graveyard and there is a tombstone bearing his name. He's been getting jocular condolences ever since.

Censorship of movies is becoming increasingly controversial, some newspapers contending that there should be one board with common standards for all Canada, instead of one in each province.

There are those who think that signs outside of a theatre should explain that certain films are not juvenile fare. Opponents of that idea point out that it is the surest way to accomplish the reverse of what is intended.

Years ago a theatre man whose business was bad, no matter how good the film, got an idea. He pasted signs about the next attraction all over town. And right across the centre of a scene on the sign he pasted a white strip. Everyone got the idea that the censors had ruled that the film had something too provocative for the public to see.

The theatre was crowded that week.

The CBC, which controls television in Canada, intends building an experimental station in Montreal . . . Gracie Fields, 47, told an interviewer the other day: "Nothin' fancy about me. I'm just like anyone else. Can't even sing as good as some. Just a little louder." British producers didn't think she would be a movie attraction, so for her first picture they offered her a percentage instead of a salary and she got rich overnight . . . PICTON

Federation Wants New Market For Surplus Cattle

Picton, Nov. 29—The Federation of Agriculture was responsible for preventing a strike in the abattoirs and thereby saved farmers a great deal of money, asserted K. Betzner, first vice-president of the Ontario Federation, who was guest speaker at the annual meeting of Prince Edward Federation. He gave this as an instance of the value of the organization, which, he said should enjoy the support of all engaged in agriculture.

There is need for organization for both economic and social reasons, the speaker pointed out. The post-war era will bring new methods of transportation and keener competition. Agriculture must be organised and ready to play its part. Many parts of the world will have to be fed by the farmer, and to do this there must be organization.

Floor prices are essential and quality must be maintained, said Mr. Betzner. The Federation did not desire bonuses, but parity prices for their farm products, but had been forced to accept these bonuses in order to secure fair returns for the farmer.

The speaker stressed the importance of farm radio forums and urged that more attention be paid to health.

D. O. Reynolds, president, announced that the local Federation is ready to give financial assistance to new forums. Farmers are entitled to cost of production plus ten percent, he believed, and said the only way to get it is by organization.

A resolution was passed asking that the government open a market for surplus cattle.

Directors elected were, Clifford Peck, William Nightingale, Ameliasburg; C. Tice, Sam Danford, Hillier; L. Allison, B. R. Baxter, D. O. Reynolds, Morley Williams, Hallowell; Willis Sills, Athol; John Thompson, Harold Spencer, Sophiasburgh; Harold Herrington, Picton; Carson Scott, S. Palmatier, South Marysburgh; Amos Hicks, North Marysburgh.

To Support Clinic.

Support of the Blood Donors' Clinic was pledged at a meeting of the Kinsmen Club Monday night. The great need for blood plasma, was stressed by J. P. Williams. To date 487 Picton people have visited the clinic at Belleville, and many more from other parts of Prince Edward County. The possibility of having a clinic visit Picton, was discussed. Directors elected were W. G. McLean, William Gillies, Dr. K. McQueen.

All Picton school children were entertained yesterday afternoon at the theatre for the film, "Going My Way" which deals with boys' work.

To Give Ditty Bags.

Sailors on H.M.C.S. Hallowell, frigate named for the township here of that name, will receive ditty bags at Christmas time as a gift from local citizens. A total of 175 bags were packed Monday night, with C. H. McGibbon in charge. Each bag contains a large number of treats. As well, East Lake canners donated eight cases of tomatoes, the Baxter Canning Co. of Bloomfield, 8 cases of tomato juice; Cloverdale Cheese Co., 20 pounds cheese; Prince Edward Fruit Growers, 4 hampers apples, Cherry Valley canners, five cases of canned goods; a friend, a bushel of hickory nuts. These will be sent separately, to be enjoyed by members of the crew.

AN APPLE FOR EVE

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER ONE.

The ground was cold and spongy from the rains. Loveday hooked her sturdy boots on the lower rung of the old three-bar fence, crossed her arms on the top bar, and put her head down on them. She felt the January sun, flooding down from the west, warm on her back and purred like a drowsy cat.

The tall man who was with her had no need to lift his feet from the chilly earth, for they were shod in the high-laced boots into which his trousers were tucked. The remainder of his visible costume consisted only of a leather coat snugly buttoned up to the roll collar about his neck. His thick fair hair was bare.

"That," said Loveday, looking up at him sidewise through a lock of her loosened hair without raising her head, "was a scramble!"

"It was grand," the man added, still breathing a little hard.

"But aren't the woods wonderful this time of year when everything's soaked and everything smells so divine?" she demanded.

"You're wonderful," Larry Ingersoll answered simply; "I never saw a girl climb like that."

"Oh, I'm used to it. After all, I was born here and my grandfather used to drag me on walks when I was so little that I had to be carried over the streams."

"I thought your grandfather was dead."

"He is, and my father too. But this was years ago. My father farmed this place; he never wanted to go off it," Loveday said. "My grandfather was Dr. Owen Hugh Gurney."

She said the name impressively. She had raised her head with its untidy soft hair lumped at the nape of her neck and was looking at her companion seriously with her round gray eyes. The hair was a pale indeterminate brown with a patina of gold over its straight soft thickness.

"Ought I know that name?" Larry asked.

"You would if you came from around here. But then," she conceded kindly, "you don't come from around here. Everyone adored him. He died six years ago when I was thirteen."

"You're only nineteen?" Larry asked. "You seem so much older. I've got a sister your age and she seems nothing but a kid."

"I've been mostly with older people," the girl said, thinking it out.

"Never been anywhere but here?"

"Oh yes. Two years in Canada in a convent school."

"Did you like it?"

"Loved it. But I've been here since I was about seventeen. I took an English course at the Union High here in Indian Hill."

"You've quite a place, and stock too," the young man said respectfully, looking at a trio of young horses which came galloping across a neighboring corral with great flinging of clods of mud.

"We did have, but those aren't our colts. All this is rented to a Portuguese now. We get all the milk and eggs we want from Joe Bettancourt, but that's all," Loveday said. "You see, there isn't a man in the family to run the place."

"That's right. But you've got a mother?"

"We don't know very much about each other, do we?" the girl said with a little laugh. "But then after all, this is only the fourth time we've met."

"Fifth," he said briefly, with a swift glance that was as swiftly removed. The word had no more significance than a hundred others he had said, but somehow it and his manner thrilled her and she knew she would remember and treasure this particular moment.

"Oh yes, if you count that night at the dance."

"I do count that night at the high-school dance. You were Cinderella. You vanished at ten o'clock."

"Joe and Maria—that's the wouldn't stay any longer," she were to bring me home, and they afraid to telephone. It took me two explained.

"I had the heck of a time finding out who you were, and then I was afraid to telephone. It took me two days to get up my nerve," he said aggrievedly.

"I don't know why everyone downtown talks as if Mother and Granny were ogres," Loveday said, laughing again. "They're not. The only reason I don't ask you up to the house is that they'd make you so uncomfortable. Granny sits in her room upstairs from nine in the morning until nine at night, and Mother is usually with her. They talk about old times until I feel as if I were in my fifties or my eighties too. If I wanted to use either parlor I'd have to begin warming it up three days in advance. The dining room is the warmest room in the house, but Mother keeps flats of young plants in there. My grandmother is a little deaf, and she'd ask hundreds of questions about you, 'Who'd thee say? Does thee know anything about him, child? Is thee related to the Dawson Ingersolls, young man?'"

"Quakers?"

"Didn't thee know that?"

"But listen, you don't talk like that all the time?"

"I do when I'm talking to Grandmother Gurney. She doesn't like anything but the plain speech."

Larry was looking at her thoughtfully, his manner absent. Loveday felt the blood coming up in her face.

"You're the strangest, most fascinating girl I ever saw," he said. And that was something to treasure and remember too!

"What's your religion, Larry?"

"None."

"None! But that's not possible. Thee isn't an infidel!" But she was laughing. She was a great girl for laughter, he thought, and when she laughed she showed big white teeth in a wholly charming manner.

"No, I believe in God. But we never went to church or Sunday school." Larry jerked his head backward toward the house. "Don't you get lonely?" he asked.

"I walk downtown nearly every day and market. Mrs. Bettancourt or the mailman or somebody brings me home. Then I help Mother in the garden, and Thursdays and Sundays, when Wing Foo and Annie Lum go away, I cook. We used to have a woman named Delia—Delia Dillon, isn't that a pretty name?—to do the upstairs rooms. But she left after Grandfather died, so Mother and I do it all now. And I read—and write poetry—" She finished with a little half-ashamed laugh.

"I'll bet you write good poetry," he said.

"You're the one who ought to be lonely," she accused him suddenly. "Away from your family and your friends in a little place like Indian Hill."

"They're not so far. Bakersfield," he said. "I can get there in two hours and a half."

"Oh, I thought you came from the East!" Loveday laughed. She was ready to show those big white teeth. "How little we know about each other!" she said again.

"We know enough," the boy answered, suddenly sober. And again her pulses thrilled a little. "No; I went to Princeton, and afterward around the world. But my folks have always lived in Bakersfield," he said.

"Around the world!" There was longing in her voice as she looked at her own little strip of the wet, wooded world that lay below them. "China—India—" she mused. "did you go alone?"

"No, on a cruise. I played the piano in a four-piece orchestra," he explained.

"D'you play the piano?"

"Enough for that. I never had a lesson. You say we don't know much about each other, but I think we know enough to know that we—we like each other, don't we?"

He moved closer along the fence and put his arms about her. Loveday was outwardly motionless, but her thoughts and emotions raced and tumbled in a mad confusion. A boy—a tall, likeable boy had his arm tight about her. She felt his breast hard and strong against her own; his mouth was close to her cheek.

"We know we like each other don't we?" he said again. She managed to raise her lashes, and their eyes met. She caught her breath childishly.

"Well, of course," she managed to say. And then he was kissing her.

When, after a long moment, they drew apart, and the familiar scene stopped swaying and revolving before Loveday's dazzled eyes, the sun had dropped behind the western hills. The factory whistles from Indian Hill sounded for five o'clock.

"I've got to go in," Loveday said. But she said it without conviction, her folded arms on the top rail of the fence, her bright head laid on them, and her face turned sidewise toward Larry with a sleepy smile. She was a tall, slender girl, with something about her broad shoulders, her squared chin with its deep cleft, and her wide mouth that made her beauty a little unusual. Today she was dressed carelessly enough in old blue cotton slacks, well-worn laced brown shoes, and a thick roll-top white sweater. "I must go in," she repeated.

"No, you mustn't," Larry said jealously.

"I must. We have dinner at six, and I have to have a bath."

But still she made no move to go, and presently he had his arms about her again, and again they kissed each other. And this time Loveday did not feel afraid.

Then she broke away and raced up the narrow back stairway, peeping in upon Annie Lum and Wing Foo as she passed the kitchen and emerging, at the top of the flight, upon an upper hallway across which the light in a big south bedroom was lying in a warm, rosy slant.

This was her grandmother's room, and her grandmother was in it now, talking with her mother. The older woman established in a winged big chair beside a coal fire, wore the Friend's garb infinitely becoming to her placid face that was broad with a cleft chin, like Loveday's.

"Thee looks like a gypsy," she observed in mild disapproval.

"You're late, Loveday," her mother said. Mrs. Gurney was unlike her Quaker mother-in-law; she was small and wiry with no gray in her thick, plainly dressed hair and despite her more than sixty years with something young—almost childish—in the abrupt quickness of her manner. Life had dealt Martha Gurney heavy blows, but Loveday never thought of her as being abandoned to grief or changed by grief. Mother had always been like this, rather silent and always busy, interested in flowers and cats and birds and all small animals rather than in people, sleeping soundly, eating with relish, loving books, contented. Her husband's mother had lived with her all through her married life and for ten years of her widowhood.

"We walked up to the Widney place!" Loveday explained, still breathing happiness and excitement and of the cold sweet-out-of doors. "It's heavenly in the woods! One little Japanese quince, at the top of the orchard, all in bloom, and Widney's acacias out."

"Who's 'we'?" Mrs. Gurney asked. Loveday flushed and laughed.

"Lawrence Ingersoll. The boy I told you about. The boy I met at the school dance the night I went with the Bettancourts last week."

"I thought you saw him yesterday too, Loveday."

"I did. But only for a moment down town. Today I was just starting to walk when he drove up the road and said he had to go up to Widney's to see about putting a pole line through their place. So he parked the car and we walked."

"Thee likes this young man, Loveday?" asked the Grandmother.

"Larry Ingersoll?" color flooded Loveday's face and she laughed.

"He's terribly—" she began and paused. Grandmother did not like extremes in speech. "He's really nice," Loveday amended it. "We like each other."

"What does thee know of him?"

"His people live in Bakersfield, and he went to Princeton, and he's working for the Gas and Electric people."

"Mother?"

"Mother, father and three sisters, I think. He seems very fond of them all." Loveday added the last phrase to fill a sentence.

"How old would thee say he might be?"

"Twenty-seven next week. We have the same birthday. We found that out at the dance. But he seems younger—sort of boyish and—and sleepy and young—and laughing about everything."

The room was old-fashioned and cluttered with the flotsam and jetsam of a long life.

But it was a comfortable room, rich with memories of faith and peace and deep affection. The clean scent of fresia lilies were floating through the other scents tonight, mingling with the smell of woolens and books and of the fire that flickered stubbornly behind the polished steel rods of the grate.

"Has he kissed thee?" old Betsy Gurney asked quietly after a silence. Loveday looked over her shoulder with a startled laugh.

"What—what made you ask that, Grandmother?"

"Thee looked as if he might've." The old voice was untroubled and unreproachful.

"Yes. He did. Today," Loveday admitted, busy with the coals again, the tips of her ears red.

"Don't promise thyself to him unless thee means it," said her grandmother.

"Promise myself to him!" Loveday echoed, scared, happy, taken by surprise.

"He'll ask thee to, Loveday," the old woman said, "I want thee to make me a promise. Be a woman of the world, Loveday. If thee loves this man, then bind thyself to him with ropes of steel. Through good, through bad, bearing his children, keeping his house. If thee does that, thee'll work thy way out to happines in the end. If thee engages thyself to marry him, keep thy word. It's a troubled world today," the serene old voice went on, "because we have not kept our covenant with the Lord. Men have broken their promise to Him, and so He keeps no promise to them. But let it be different with thee. In little things, in big things, keep thy word. Pay thy bills—"

"If I made a promise I would always keep it," she said.

"Not many do. Not many do," her grandmother murmured, half to herself.

It had been Dr. Knowles, superintendent of the high school who had introduced them. Loveday, like the rest of the girls, had taken her contribution to the evening's feast; she had been standing at the cake table in the big school-house corridor with Mrs. Knowles, when the two men had come up.

"Oh, Loveday, a marble cake!" Mrs. Knowles had said. I'm going to put it out of sight under the table here and see if I can't get it when they raffle off the leftover cakes! Did you make it,"

"Who else?" Loveday had been in holiday mood that night; the atmosphere of the decorated and lighted school-house, the flags and banners and ropes of evergreen and the scraping of the violins as they tuned up, had been exhilarating. She had worn her only dancing dress, far from new, on this New Year's night, for it had been worn many years before it had been made over for her. It had been exhumed from one of the attic trunks; its rose-flowered brocade was neither smart nor young in pattern. But that had not mattered; it had been infinitely becoming to Loveday Gurney's fresh, glowing beauty she had found no fault with it.

The man who had come up with Dr. Knowles had been of the type that no girl at the New Year's dance could quite ignore, be her affections placed where they might. Larry Ingersoll was tall, with a mop of thick fair hair pushed carelessly back from a wide forehead and from a face whose very lack of handsomeness was attractive in itself. High cheek-bones, deep-set eyes with a sleepy smile perpetually twinkling in them, a mouth firm above a hard line of chin, and a long thin body that he carried with a slight stoop; there was no analyzing what made him fascinating, but fascinating, without the slightest effort, he was.

He danced beautifully, and Loveday loved to dance. It had been a bitter disappointment to her when at ten o'clock Joe Bettancourt had come up to her apologetically with the news that Maria was worrying about the baby, and he had to get up early in the morning, and they were going home. Loveday had promised to go home with the Bettancourts. But at ten o'clock!

But the disappointment had been somewhat softened the next day when in the post office down in the village she had met Larry, and after that laughing talk they had managed to see each other every day.

Once, thought the girl dreaming in her red dress in the red firelight, once in the pouring rain, when they had gone, dripping and breathless, into Singers' for ice cream, and more than once, in the library, whose dimly lighted alcoves had afforded them a chance to talk unobserved.

But today had been the best. Today, leaving the gate of Friends Haven with more than a vague hope in her heart that somehow, if she walked to the village, she might encounter Larry, she had been thrilled to see his mud-spattered car racketing up the rough road and to have him stop to ask her—before even recognizing her—if this was the road to Widneys'.

Spirit of Britain Subject of Talk At Kiwanis Club

Members of the Kiwanis Club heard one of the finest addresses given before the club this year at their weekly luncheon at the Quinte Hotel on Tuesday when Stewart Richardson, managing editor of the Northern News spoke on "the Spirit of Britain" taking his own family in the tight little Isle as symbolical of the British people. It was a story, told in simple language yet with a sincerity, that one could almost feel and he received a fine ovation at its conclusion.

In the absence of President Jack McVeigh, who was with his wife attending the funeral of his wife's mother in Saginaw, Michigan, Mrs. Spencer being instantly killed in an automobile accident, Bruce Lattimer, past president of the club, presided. Ted Schwab led the community singing with Bill Navin at the piano. The cigars were passed and congratulations were extended to Jay Doyle, who recently became the proud father of a boy. William O. Steer, congratulated the team that was responsible for the blood donors at last Thursday's clinic, when 68 gave their blood, 42 being new donors. He also thanked Messrs. Wrightmeyer, Cummings and Holway of the Brewers' Corporation, who have undertaken at the expense of the Corporation to canvass the various industries of the city.

Send Letter to Ministers.

A letter will be sent to the ministers of the several churches of the city requesting that an appeal to the congregations be made on behalf of the Blood Donor Clinic. Herb Reed reported on the bingo held on Monday night and asked that the boys turnout and help put the project over. Mark Vanner told the members that to miss the party at Kiwanis Centre next Wednesday night will be to miss the treat of the season. Jack Trudeau, chairman of program announced the list of speakers for the remainder of the year and the members would be advised to attend and in this way boost the attendance records of the club, which have been slowly sinking of late.

Paid Sterling Tribute.

The speaker was introduced by Dr. F. S. Gibson and after thanking the introducer, Mr. Richardson stated that he wanted to pay tribute to a great and courageous people, that have suffered without complaining through a long and painful ordeal. He stated that the British people were tired and weary after the last war and there had been a great strain on the manhood. "They soon realized that the new world for which they had fought and died was not to be forthcoming" said the speaker. In 1926 the general strike came that crippled industry and increased unemployment and suffering but there were no casualties nor bloodshed. Money was needed for many things and Ramsay MacDonald, then prime minister, reduced the army and then slashed the navy to its lowest level. Early in 1934 the students of Oxford passed their famous resolution "not to fight for King or country" and Mussolini believing that the British would not fight marched into Ethiopia. Baldwin soon after made his famous speech, when he said "Britain must remember that her borders are on the Rhine." Early in 1936 and 1937 Germany realized that Europe was on the verge of dramatic things and to cement the friendships of the Commonwealth, the King and Queen paid a visit to Canada in 1939.

Came With Suddenness.

The speaker stated that the war came with great suddenness in 1939 and one would not think that it is nearly five years that three little destroyers, the Exeter, Achilles and Ajax, sunk the Graf Spee in southern waters, when the big German battleship could have blown any one of the three boats right out of the water. He told of the fall of France in 1940 and the coming home of 300,000 from Dunkirk leaving everything they possessed on the shores of France. "There were lots that gave up at this time but Britain did not," said Mr. Richardson. Then came the desert fighting and Germany decided to attack Russia and soon a voice was heard, "Open a second front," but Britain paid little heed and pursued the war in her own way and course. Tribute was paid to Churchill, the man of destiny, and the one whom the British turned to in their time of trouble and anxiety and he has led them through to what will be final and complete victory. He told of the life of his father and mother in war-torn Britain as an example of the lives of thousands in that Island. He showed they never wavered in their great faith and in their love for the homeland. He showed that many countries had contributed greatly to the culture of the world but that Britain had contributed her love of freedom. Appreciation of the address was expressed by Ernie Finkle.

FRANKFORD

Presentation

Frankford.—On Friday evening last, friends and neighbors of the Eighth and Ninth of Murray Township, numbering well over a hundred, gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Terry in honor of Mr. and Mrs. W. Remington and family, who are leaving this community to make their home elsewhere. Mr. Remington was the cheese maker at the Rogers' Factory.

Mr. Albert Caskey was chairman for the evening and a short program was conducted as follows; a musical number by Miss Marion Free; choruses by the girls of the Tabernacle school and Zion school. Mrs. Cecil Frost presided at the piano for community singing. Readings were given by Mrs. Wm. Johnson, Mrs. Frank Rose and Mrs. Albert Caskey. Miss Vera Frost contributed a vocal solo.

Miss Paisley read an address to the guests of the evening expressing the regret all felt in losing them from the neighborhood and wishing them all of the best in their new home. A presentation of a table lamp and two occasional chairs was made. Mr. and Mrs. Remington were taken entirely by surprise and each thanked their friends in a few words for the lovely gifts.

Lunch was served and the singing of "For They are Jolly Good Fellows" and "A White Christmas" brought the enjoyable program to a close.

In the afternoon on Friday the schoolmates of Miss Margaret Remington in the first form of the Frankford Continuation School surprised her by presenting her with a beautiful silver bracelet on her departure from their midst.

Bride-Elect Feted.

A large number of friends and members of the Catholic Women's League of Frankford, gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alec Good, Frankford on Tuesday night to honor their daughter, Miss Kay Good on the eve of her approaching marriage. A miscellaneous shower of many lovely and useful gifts was presented the bride-to-be. She expressed her thanks to her many friends for the presents and the kind thoughts that prompted the giving of them.

The evening was spent in playing games at which everyone had a good time. Following the games a delicious lunch was served by the hostess.

Personals.

Mrs. G. W. Dickson spent last week visiting her daughter, Mrs. Edwin Warren and family at Kingston.

Mrs. G. Carlisle and Carolyn, Mrs. Don Rogers and children, are spending some time visiting at the home of their mother, Mrs. Murdock at Madoc.

ARCISZEWSKI TO FORM NEW CABINET

London, Nov. 29. (AP)—Tomasz Arciszewski, president-designate of the Polish government in London, tonight was given the assignment of forming a new cabinet.

An official Polish spokesman disclosed that Arciszewski had been chosen by President Wadyslaw Rackiewicz after premier-designate Jan Kwapinski admitted his mission was a complete failure and resigned.

Cattle Glut Toronto Yards

Toronto, Nov. 29. (CP) — Cattle receipts at the Union Stockyards here have been heavier during the past few weeks, than for comparable periods in a number of years, and the congestion in the local yards is the most severe in some years, J. S. Fletcher, manager of the stockyards, said today.

Better class cattle would move freely into consumer channels for domestic and army use. The crowded condition at the yards is largely due to the poor type of cattle and is going to take at least several days to clear, he said. Mr. Fletcher pointed out that the poorer class of cattle had to be boned which required more time and more skilled labor than that required by butcher cattle.

Delegation Asks Aid for Residents Of North Norway

Stockholm, Nov. 29 (AP) — A parliamentary delegation asked the Swedish government today to do everything possible to aid residents of northern Norway forced from their homes by the Germans, "even if it means taking the greatest risk"

It seemed obvious the parliamentarians had in mind a break with Germany—perhaps even war.

Foreign Minister Christian Gunther advised the legislators that Belrin had rejected a Swedish proposal to provide assistance for the thousands of Norwegians evacuating their properties under Nazi orders.

Mr. Gunther had declared in a previous speech that continuation of the German terorr tactics in Norway would be bound to lead to a deterioration in relations.

'Buzz' Beurling To Be Married

Montreal, Nov. 29—(CP)—George (Buzz) Beurling of neighboring Verdun, fighter ace of the defence of Malta, will be married here today, to Mrs. Diana Gardner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman D. Whitthall of Vancouver.

The bride is the widow of Flt. Lt. Edwin Charles Gardner, who was killed three years ago by British anti-aircraft fire on his way back to base after a flight over enemy territory. The wedding will be "extremely quiet."

It is expected the couple will honeymoon in the Laurentians.

Beurling said last week a stomach injury had led to his medical rejections by the R.A.F.

Archdeacon Gower-Reese will officiate at the wedding in St. George's Anglican Church.

PLAINFIELD

R. E. Council Branch Holds Meeting In Front Rd. Church

Plainfield—The Annual S. S. Convention of Thurlow Township pReligious Education Council was held in Front Road Church on Wednesday last.

The afternoon session opened at 1.30 p.m. by everyone registering and putting their questions in the question box.

Mr. Arthur Clazie very warmly welcomed one and all to the church. Worship theme "Suffer Little Children" was given by Front Road S. S. The children, under Miss Bernice Robinson gave beautiful selections of music which were much appreciated.

Rev. Mr. Trumpour then introduced Rev. Lora Carlson, Field Secretary from Toronto who was the guest speaker for the day. His afternoon address being "Some Home Problems which the Church Can Help". In his address Rev. Carlson said the church should not have make the sacrifice to come out. Sometimes we wonder if we want the gospel? The church is everyone's whether we attend or support it and our community is better for it being there. We often speak of so few being there but if the faithful few would set themselves to task they could accomplish much. He said, "One of the most valuable programs of the church is visitation. In our visits to the different homes we come in contact with the parents and so make them feel we are interested in them and their children. In this way we can get them coming to our S. S. and church.

Business was then conducted and an invitation was given to hold the convention at College Hill in 1945.

A demonstration was put on by Mrs. H. Harrison, "A teacher visits a Home". She was assisted by Mrs. Elliott and Mrs. Prindle. This was taken in the form of two dialogues. The first home she is met by the mother of one of her S. S. class who is very glad to meet her and promises to attend services soon. The other woman is a very sullen and uninterested mother who sees no harm in her son skating instead of going to S. S. In the end as the teacher talks with her she kindly consents to do her best to interest her son in S. S. A lively discussion followed led by Rev. Carlson.

An address "Visitation Evangelism", its motive and method by Rev. Mr. Lougheed was very interesting and beneficial.

Reports from the Department Supt. were well given. Just one report not being read or sent in.

Rev. G. T. McKenzie led a discussion on, "Things we would like to see done in our Township".

The meeting adjourned for the tea hour. A supper was served by the Front Road ladies'.

The evening session opened with a song service of negro spirituals led by Rev. Carlson.

Worship service was conducted by Carmel S. S.

Rev. E. M. Cook, Foxboro, gave a Literature talk and gave ideas of what books can be procured to help in one's every day living.

The question box was then opened. Rev. Mr. McKenzie with the help of others tried to answer them suitably enough for a child to understand.

Rev. J. Dilts spoke a few words to the convention.

Report of the nominating committee was given by secretary. This year Thurlow is joining with Tyendinaga and combining the convention for another year. This will include the following Sunday Schools of the Shannonville charge: Shannonville, Melrose, Salem and Mt. Pleasant. The new name under which it is to be directed is "Thurlow, Tyendinaga S. S. Association." Rev. Mr. Lougheed, minister of that charge thanked the convention workers for their thoughtfulness.

Election and installation of officers was conducted by Rev. Mr. Trumpour. The following officers were elected:

President, Mr. A. Clazie, R. R. 6, Belleville.

1st. Vice President, Mr. C. Wilson, Foxboro, Ont.

2nd. Vice President, Mr. J. M. Wood, 4 Evans St., Belleville.

Sec. Treas., Mrs. Fred Prindle, Plainfield, Ont.

Department Superintendents:

1. Children's Work, Mrs. Frank Pringle, Melrose, Ont.
2. Girls' Work, Mrs. Seldon Homan, Corbyville, Ont.
3. Boys' Work, Mr. C. Wilson, Foxboro, Ont.
4. Young People, Mrs. Horace Casey, R. R. 6, Belleville, Ont.
5. Adult, Mr. H. Scollan, Point Anne, Ont.

7. Missionary, Mrs. O. Bertrand, Corbyville R. R., Ont.
8. Temperance, Mr. Russell Ritz, Corbyville R. R., Ont.
9. Leadership Training, Rev. E. M. Cook, Foxboro, Ont.

Resolution committee was called and Mrs. H. Harrison read the following resolutions.

1. That this convention is very grateful to the trustee board of this church building in which to hold the sessions of this convention.
2. The Ladies' of the church for the sumptuous repast which they have provided for us.
3. To Rev. Carlson for his inspiring leadership.
4. To the ministers present for their helpful discussions.

To the school children, Miss Barnum and Miss Robinson and to all the members of the executive.

We recommend that the executive visit the schools and report.

We recommend that some project be carried out in each S. S. as the result of the study and discussion on church and home relations which is the theme of this convention.

Mr. C. Eggleton, retiring president, thanked all those who had helped him in the past few years he had been in office and wished Mr. Clazie the very best in the coming year. Mr. Clazie then took charge.

Front Road choir then favored with some music and offering was received.

The evening address by Rev. Carlson was well given on, "The Home as an Agency of Christian Education." The home must stand behind our church and then the church is the training ground of our young people.

Rev. Carlson also said that in sending in reports another year one should report on the Y. P. U. Mission Bands, C. G. I. T. Mission Circles and Tuxis Groups any of the young peoples' meetings.

Rev. Mr. Lougheed closed the meeting with prayer.

Private M. Sopha, Twice Wounded, Is Back Home

Marmora—Private Marshall Sopha, son of Mrs. G. W. Henderson of Marmora, an original member of the Hasty.Pees, is back in Canada after five years of active service. He is assured a six months' stay in Canada and has a furlough expiring December 27. He has been twice wounded, the first occasion being the bombing of Reigate, England on September 30th., 1940. He was badly woundd in the left knee. He was later a patient in the Canadian hospital which for both World Wars has been furnished by Lady Astor. He spoke appreciatively of her interest in each individual soldier receiving hospitalization there. While he was there, Their Majesties, The King and Queen, paid a welcome visit. Private Sopha next became a casualty in Italy where on December 14th., 1943, he received a bullet wound in the left arm. While a convalescent in a hospital near Naples, Mt. Vesuvius staged a three days eruption sending forth ashes to mingle with the rain which fell for the same period. Private Sopha said that the English climate perfectly agreed with him while he knew of many who could not say the same. He liked the country very well as a whole but was rather partial to London and greatly enjoyed visits to Bristol and Bath. He paid several visits to Rome during his stay in Italy and said that that city as well as Naples possessed some fine modern buildings in addition to the old historic ones. Before leaving Italy, he fraternised with four Marmora boys, Lieuts. Robert Scott and Percy Gray and Privates Wilfred Gray and Raymond Nobes. Just before he was wounded he was able to renew acquaintance with another Marmora boy, Private William Knox, who since then has been taken prisoner by the enemy.

Cabinet Sustains Premier Pierlot

Brussels, Nov. 28 (AP)—British tanks and steel-helmeted troops guarded the Belgian parliament today as the Chamber of Deputies gave Premier Hubert Pierlot a vote of confidence.

Street car workers had struck several hours earlier, demanding resignation of the Pierlot government, and columns of marchers were reported converting on the tense capital to join in a "National day of protest" tomorrow against Pierlot's regime.

British troops set out to disarm one column of 600 marchers from Mons. First reports said 200 persons of the Mons delegation had surrendered arms without a struggle.

The Chamber of Deputies voted 116 to 12 for Pierlot's bill vesting him with extraordinary powers.

Just before the vote was announced Premier Pierlot told the Chamber that his government would not resign in the face of demonstrations.

Cheers several times interrupted his speech, and afterward many members stood and applauded.

Meanwhile the Communications Minister's Office announced the street car strike which tied up Brussels this morning and had ended with no concessions, since it said, none had been asked.

"The strike was more in the nature of a demonstration to call attention to dissatisfaction with food and coal shortages than a strike," a ministry official said.

Huge Death Toll May Result From Dump Explosion

Burton-on-Trent, England, Nov. 29—(CP) — Estimates of the death toll in yesterday's explosion of an R.A.F. underground dump still ranged from 20 to more than 250 today. A former British Army officer declared "Enough bombs for hundreds of major raids on Germany" were detonated in the blast.

Scores of persons "simply have disappeared and until we can check up on them we are unable to say whether they are dead or alive," a Burton policeman said. The Press Association said the toll might mount to 250 or more.

One bomb burst and the rush of air apparently acted as a detonator for all the bombs in the dump, situated near Burton. This detonating wave underground caused the earthquake effect felt several miles away, driving many persons to air raid shelters.

The blast shook the entire countryside like an earthquake, and sent bombs high into the sky. They rained down like a large-scale enemy bombardment.

Scores were trapped in wreckage. Rescuers tunnelled through rubble to bring out safely 40 persons buried in a munitions works near the scene.

Windows 32 miles away were broken by the explosion, one of Britain's worst in the war. Secondary blasts followed.

Craters torn out by falling bombs hampered rescue workers.

Hundreds of cows were reported killed. Buildings, trees and telegraph poles in the vicinity were hurled into the air and shattered.

A cement factory was destroyed. Buildings at the bomb depot simply disappeared.

"Nothing like it was ever seen on a battlefield," a witness said. "Roads are churned up. Part of a village is gone; the rest is rubble. It looks as though every house had a direct bomb hit. Everywhere there are craters."

FORMER DEFENCE MINISTER TO SUPPORT GOVT.

AMERICANS CAPTURE LINDERN ON ROER LINE

Col. J. L. Ralston Says Army Pools Need Reinforcing

Cannot Support Amendment Asking Total Conscription

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Ottawa, Nov. 30 (CP)—Col. J. L. Ralston, a front-line soldier of the First Great War, in sober, fluent phrases Wednesday night told the Commons of his urgent anxiety over immediate reinforcements for Canadians overseas which led to his break with the government on Nov. 1 when he resigned as Defence Minister.

For 2 1-4 hours he traced developments since, when overseas in late September and October, he came to the conclusion that draftees must be made available for service overseas if Canadian units were to be kept up to strength.

Once or twice, Prime Minister Mackenzie King indicated he differed with Col Ralston's interpretation of events.

When he had completed his review, Col. Ralston said that in spite of his criticisms of the actions of the government, he would support it in a forthcoming vote of confidence in order that the troops in battle should have reinforcements with the least possible delay.

Gen. McNaughton, Col. Ralston's successor as Defence Minister, listened from a gallery seat.

Crowded Galleries.

The former Defence Minister, speaking before crowded galleries which have marked the "crisis session" since it opened a week ago, said he could not support the Progressive Conservative amendment to the confidence motion. This amendment would involve total conscription, making all the 60,000 home defence army effectives available for overseas by compulsion instead of the 16,000 authorized under an Order-in-Council passed last week.

But he said he laid upon the Prime Minister and Gen. McNaughton the responsibility of seeing that proper reinforcements were made available, even if more than the 16,000 had to be sent overseas by compulsion. He said the shortage of men had become more serious than perhaps had been indicated in the House thus far, and that his recommendation on Nov. 1 had been that 15,000 draftees be made available without delay.

Gen. McNaughton assumed office Nov. 2 pledged to attempt to obtain the required men by voluntary enlistments, and Col. Ralston said he was concerned over the delay which had occurred in the period when another appeal for voluntary enlistments was being made and before Gen. McNaughton's recommendation for overseas conscription was accepted by the cabinet on Nov. 22.

Moves An Amendment.

Earlier yesterday, Victor Quelch (SC—Acadia) said the 10-man Social Credit Party would support the government on the confidence motion but he also moved an amendment calling for the use of all persons in the armed forces in any theatre of war; assurance of adequate supplies and reinforcements for those overseas; economic security and financial reforms after the war and elimination of war-time controls as soon as possible.

Hon. Earl Rowe (PC—Dufferin-Simcoe) gave the House the official assurance of the Progressive Conservative Party that it would "cooperate with any government which, under leadership that will ensure equality of service, offers proof of will and determination to send to our soldiers overseas the reinforcements which our war commitments demand".

(COL. J. L. RALSTON—age 4.)

Ralston Highlights

(By The Canadian Press)

The government was informed last June that there might be need of breaking up a formation or using home defence troops to provide reinforcements overseas.

On his return from overseas in October Col. Ralston had informed the cabinet that 15,000 trained reinforcements were needed overseas at once.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King had asked a "purely hypothetical question" when he asked members of the cabinet if they would head the government. Mr. King had indicated in conversation later that he had no intention of resigning.

Col. Ralston confessed he would like to have finished his task in the defence department until the end of the war.

Reserves in infantry reinforcement pools overseas are "almost if not entirely exhausted." By the end of January the Army would be without infantry reinforcements overseas and the units themselves would be under strength.

Arrangements for leave for men with long service overseas had been worked out before Col. Ralston resigned Nov. 1.

Col. Ralston would have been prepared when he was Defence Minister to accept the provision made by the government since his resignation for sending 16,000 home defence troops overseas, but he would have objected to the "piecemeal" method.

Col. Ralston would support the government on the vote of confidence motion. To vote with the opposition might lead to a delay in getting reinforcements overseas.

Eisenhower Using Seventy Divisions

London, Nov. 30. (CP)— A German military spokesman was quoted by the Berlin radio today as saying Gen. Eisenhower had thrown 70 divisions into the great offensive on the western front.

This suggested a minimum of 850,000 combat troops were opposing the outnumbered Germans along the entire front.

The official D.N.B. dispatch placed the crucial battlefield in the Aachen area and said the fighting was in progress in a sector 16 miles wide and nine deep. This tallied roughly with Allied front reports.

The Germans claimed British attacks south of The Netherlands town of Helmond were repulsed "before the enemy was able to launch his apparently planned big offensive".

Children From Torpedoed Liner Laughed in Face of U-Boat Captain

London, Nov. 30 —(CP)— The Daily Mail today told of the sinking of the 20,000-ton Canadian Pacific liner Duchess of Atholl in October, 1942, while en route from the Middle East to Britain with 826 persons aboard, many of them women and children.

Without a sign of panic, passengers abandoned the torpedoed ship in 21 lifeboats. The submarine surfaced and its commander gave the Nazi salute to lifeboat occupants near him.

"His answer was a burst of laughter from the children and the V-for-Victory salute from men and women," said a survivor, Daniel Reynolds of Liverpool.

A United States army plane located the lifeboat fleet and a naval vessel raced to the rescue.

The Daily Mail also said the 20,000-ton liner Viceroy of India was sunk by a German submarine in the Atlantic in November, 1942, while bringing United States troops to Britain.

The newspaper published two dramatic photographs of the ship in its death throes, one showing it wallowing heavily on its side and the other as it plunged to bottom, its bow high out of water.

Both photographs were taken from a rescue ship. No details of the sinking or the rescue of troops were given.

ANGLO-AMERICAN TRADE AGREEMENT IS NEGOTIATED

Lend-Lease Cut Nearly In Half and Britain To Pay for Goods Used for Re-export

By JOHN F. CHESTER
(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

London, Nov. 30 (AP)—Prime Minister Churchill revealed today a far-reaching Anglo-American trade arrangement whereby, after the defeat of Germany, lend-lease would be cut nearly in half but Britain would pay cash for United States materials intended for eventual re-export from Britain.

Hammering home Britain's necessity for, and intention of, rebuilding its largely-vanished export trade, the Prime Minister reminded the House that "it is no part of the lend-lease act to provide general relief or to provide for post-war reconstruction or to aid our export trade"

"We shall pay cash for any additional supplies we may wish to take from the United States for export purposes," he declared.

He added that the removal of uncertainties should make it possible for exporters to lay plans now "with assurance" that they could become effective after the war with Germany ends.

To Cut Inflow.

The Prime Minister said that after Hitler's defeat Britain hopes to be able to cut inflow of lend-lease goods from the United States by about 50 per cent.

Mr. Churchill said also that his statement had been agreed to "almost sentence by sentence by our American colleagues." Therefore he declined to expand on it when questioned.

The House cheered when he said he considered "the statement I have made is one of a highly satisfactory nature."

"Never has there been a more thorough understanding of the facts of the economic position and the problems of Great Britain and the United States of America on both sides than we have now been able to reach," Mr. Churchill said.

"Lend-lease—that very great act—has stood us and our Allies in good stead and we never asked nor expected any assistance which is not strictly within its terms and provisions," the Prime Minister declared.

Arrangements Made

Arrangements already had been made in Washington, he said, as to "what the American administration feel it is proper and right for us to have in accordance with the terms" of the act. He added:

"The end of the war with Germany will make possible large reductions in some of our requirements. We expect our needs will be met by a program at a rate not much more than half of what we have been receiving in 1944. All of these supplies and services will be exclusively for the joint war effort against the common enemy."

Mr. Churchill reminded the House that lend-lease was an act which "was for the defence of the United States and is strictly limited to what is necessary for the most effective prosecution of the war by the United States and its Allies."

"The prolongation of the war into what will be for us the sixth and seventh year means that certain improvements are essential if our national economy is to be as fully effective as possible for the prosecution of the war.

GERMANS RETAKE 3 STRONGPOINTS NEAR BOLOGNA

U. S. 5th Army Troops Forced to Relinquish Hold on Monte Castellaro

Rome, Nov. 30 (AP)—Uncorking their strongest counter-attacks in recent weeks German troops have recaptured three Allied 5th Army strongpoints in the sector southeast and southwest of Bologna, Allied headquarters announced today.

The British 8th Army, still engaged in heavy fighting in the Albereto area five miles northeast of the Bologna-Rimini highway stronghold of Faenza, drove back a determined German counter-attack.

Fifth Army troops were forced to relinquish their hold on Monte Castellaro, just north of Monte Grande, in the area south of the Bologna-Rimini highway town of Castel San Pietro.

Farther west in the difficult mountain country west of the Bologna-Pistoai highway the Germans recaptured Corona and Monte Belvedere.

The battle for Corona and Monte Belvedere was the most violent of the entire front and put an end to the period of uneasy waiting in the mud of that area.

The Germans first launched two counter-attacks with about one infantry battalion. Both were repulsed. Later they renewed the attack with two battalions and a covering force of tanks, self-propelled guns and mortars, as well as rocket launchers.

The 5th Army troops in the face of the new assault were forced to pull back to prepared positions, headquarters said.

The counter-attacks at Monte Castellaro also were supported by a heavy concentration of artillery and mortar fire. This position 9 1-2 miles southeast of Bologna is important to the Germans for the defence arc they have set up around the city.

Monte Grande, dominating feature of the area, was still in Allied hands, however.

6TH MAJOR RAID HURLED AT HUNS WITHIN 36 HOURS

Almost 1,300 U. S. Heavies Climax Pulverizing 48-Hour Offensive

London, Nov. 30. (CP) —Almost 1,300 American heavy bombers climaxed a crushing 48-hour offensive against German rail and oil targets today with raids on four synthetic refineries in the Leipzig area and the railroad yards at Saarbrucken.

More than 1,000 fighters from bases in France and England, went along to keep of German interceptors.

These raids followed a pre-dawn assault by R.A.F. Mosquitos on Hannover.

Headquarters of United States strategic air forces in Europe said oil plants at Bohlen, Merseburg, Zeitz and Lutzkendorf, about 100 miles southwest of Berlin, were hit by the waves of heavy bombers.

Others jarred the industrial capital of the Saar mining area, Saarbrucken, eight miles on front of the American 3rd Army.

The great daylight raid was the sixth major aerial operation hurled at Germany in less than 36 hours.

A few hours earlier one of the largest United States bomber fleets seen in weeks had rumbled away from British bases and headed east.

The daylight raid followed another jab by British Mosquita bombers, which unloaded two-ton blockbusters on Hannover last night. This rounded out four big bomber operations in a 24-hour period.

Allied air forces flew more than 2,000 fighter and medium bomber trips into Germany and Northern Holland yesterday.

No Increase Likely In Dec. Liquor Ration

Toronto, Nov. 30—(CP)—Official circles at Queen's Park said today there will be no increase in Ontario's liquor ration of 26 ounces a month for December. There have been reports that the quota might be increased to 52 ounces for December only but officials said the supply is not sufficient to warrant the increase.

B-29S HIT TOKYO AS JAPS THREATEN TORTURE TO FLIERS

Foretaste of Campaign 'To Destroy Heart And Nerve Centres Of Jap War Machine'

San Francisco, Nov. 30 —(AP)— Tokyo, its defences reported by the Japanese radio to have been penetrated at least twice in five hours Wednesday (U. S. time) by Superfortresses, is getting a foretaste of a campaign "to destroy the heart and the nerve centres of Japan's war machine."

Gen. H. H. Arnold, commanding general of the Army Air Forces, placed that interpretation last night at Kansas City on a gathering drive which has put bombers over Tokyo in three days within a week.

This air war on Japan proper had these ramifications:

Fires started Wednesday raged for a considerable time in Tokyo.

Incensed Tokyo radio announcers fumed that any flier who parachuted after "blindly" bombing Tokyo would be "killed on the spot by the angry Japanese people."

Premier Kuniaki Koiso held a cabinet meeting yesterday because—to quote Tokyo radio—"in due course various bottlenecks are expected to appear with many expected resulting effects."

In Whipsaw action along the bombing road to Tokyo, Liberators from Saipan cratered the Volcano Island airfields the enemy has been using to send fighters in raids on the Superfortress bases at Saipan.

Attack In Waves.

Today a Japanese Imperial headquarters communique, broadcast from Tokyo and recorded by the Federal Communications Commission, gave this unconfirmed version:

Twenty Superforts attacked in "several waves" from between midnight and 4:30 a.m. Thursday (Tokyo time).

"The fires that continued to rage in part of the areas affected . . . were put under control by 5:30 a.m."

No claim was made of any B-29 being shot down.

Incendiary bombs, dropped in the new raid "from great heights from above the clouds," touched off fires in "several places" but "most of them" were put out immediately.

The attacks were spread over "the Metropolitan area and its vicinity, also a part of the Sunyen district." A domestic broadcast previously had told of simultaneous attacks on Shisuoka prefecture south of Tokyo.

"First with our B-29s, then, as we get bases closer to Japan, with our Fortresses and Liberators, we're going to destroy the heart and the nerve centres of Japan's war machine.

War Takes a Personal Turn For Soldiers of Canadian Army

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 1st Canadian Army, Nov. 30—(CP Cable)—The war has taken a personal turn for soldiers of the 1st Canadian Army, fighting on German soil for the first time in this war.

From company, battalion and brigade-scale battles, the fighting has subsided to patrol activity where platoons and sections are coming into their own.

Presence of the Canadians in Germany was disclosed this week but their role has not be spectacular. French-speaking troops are among the Canadians in this German salient.

(This dispatch did not locate the scene of the actions but a field dispatch from Ross Munro, Canadian Press war correspondent, dated Nov. 22 and released for publication Tuesday, said Canadian troops took up positions in the Nijmegen sector at the extreme north end of the Allied line. He said some units had been holding a narrow strip of German territory just across the Netherlands border east of Nijmegen.

(Another Canadian Press war correspondent, Maurice Desjardins, said in a dispatch dated Nov. 12 and released for publication Wednesday that Le Regiment De La Chaudiere of Lake Megantic, Que., took up positions in Germany in the de Wyler Forest east of Nijmegen and these troops became the first Canadian unit to operate entirely on German soil during the war. These Canadians were about six miles northwest of Cleve at the northern end of the Siegfried Line.)

From wooded country overlooking marshy ground where the Germans have their trenches, the Canadians have been sending out patrols and in minor skirmishes have killed or captured Germans and lost men of their own. Artillery and mortar fire exchanges have been moderately heavy.

The weather in the last few days has been against anything but small-scale activity. Cold rain made this muddy — and in some places flooded — country muddier and wetter.

The air force has been pretty well base-bound but yesterday was one of the finest days of the autumn and Canadian aircraft flew 534 sorties. A German headquarters was among the targets.

Meanwhile from southwest Holland came word of an unsuccessful German attempt by a force of about 30 men to make a reconnaissance raid on captured North Beveland Island in the Schelde estuary this week. The enemy underestimated the strength of the force holding the island and lost every man, including one officer killed.

Strategic Centre Lies Only 28 Miles From Dusseldorf

U.S. 1st Army Breaks Into Open From Hurtgen Forest

By WILLIAM FRYE
(AP Staff Writer)

London, Nov. 30 —(AP)— United States 9th Army troops captured strategic Lindern today in an extension of the great Allied offensive which was cracking the Roer river line shielding Cologne and Dusseldorf.

Farther south, The U. S. 1st Army finally won the fortified towns of Lamersdorf and Grosshau in its drive out of the Hurtgen forest.

Lindern lies 14½ miles from the Prussian arsenal and rail city of Muenchen Gladbach and 28 miles from Dusseldorf.

Canadians Send Out Patrols.

(At the northern end of the line Canadian troops, fighting in Germany for the first time in this war, have been sending out—patrols, Douglas Amaron, Canadian Press war correspondent, reported. Other dispatches have identified the Canadian sector as just across the German-Netherlands border east of Nijmegen.)

The 9th Army also fought in the streets of burning Beeck near Lindern. Both Beeck and Lindern are on the railroad leading to Munchen Gladbach. Survivors of the Lindern garrison, made up of Hitler's best S. S. troops, plodded to prison cages after yielding to the American flame-throwers, tanks, artillery and bombs hurled against the hamlet.

Deadly Place for Germans.

Infantry driving into the Tiger tank nests in Beeck found more dead Germans on the street than in any other town yet entered on the Cologne front. Prisoners said their comrades were felled by white phosphorous shells which filled the skies before dawn.

During the night, the Germans tried vainly to regain high ground dominating the Roer river bastion of Linnich just east of Beeck. Artillery, particularly Tiger-busting eight-inchers smashed most of the attacks.

Men of the U. S. 1st Army burst into the open from the pines of the Hurtgen forest, where hundreds from both sides have died since mid October.

Little action was reported from the British 2nd Army front before the Maas stronghold of Venlo to the north, or from the 1st Canadian Army's sector in Germany east of Nijmegen in the area of the De Wyler forest.

Gains were scored along the entire 25-mile front on the Cologne plain east of Aachen and Geilenkirchen where the 12th Army group was battling behind flame-throwers, tanks and terrific artillery and air barrages. The Germans declared the combat to be one of the greatest battles of attrition in history. The new 9th Army attack won high ground dominating the key town of Linnich.

Into Higher Ground

The U.S. 3rd Army on the Saar front pushed into high ground overlooking the Saar river and within easy shot of the Merzig stronghold of the Siegfried line. Gains averaged a mile all the way to the little French rail town of Saare Union as frost-hardened mud fields gave tanks firmer footing.

The 3rd, with the 1st and 9th Armies on the Roer, constitute Gen. Bradley's army group of which 23 American divisions of 275,000 or more men were charging at the foe.

The U.S. 7th Army, flanking the 3rd to the southeast, was bursting the bonds of German resistance along its line. It sidestepped the strongly-held French rail centre of Hagenau, 31 miles southwest of Karlsruhe, where the Germans have stores of ammunition and fuel. Lt.-Gen. Patch aimed his divisions straight at Karlsruhe, a city of 190,000 beyond the Rhine in the shelter of the Siegfried Line.

The 7th and the French 1st Army had wrested half the Alsatian plain from the enemy and had reached within 25 miles south of Strasbourg. The French were moving slowly north from Mulhouse to tighten the Colmar clamp to roughly 40 miles.

Push Thru Pill-Boxes.

The new attack by the 9th Army northeast of Geilenkirchen ran into alert and stubborn opposition, but carried swiftly through old pillboxes of the Siegfried Line yesterday before resolute counter-attacks slowed its momentum.

Field dispatches reported "good progress" even though the Germans opened flood gates of Roer river dams, inundating its valley to widths of nearly a mile. Infantry moved into Lindern and Beeck behind flame—throwers after shelling the enemy garrisons with high explosives and phosphorus shells.

Beeck burned while a battle raged in its streets.

The Americans stood on the Roer several miles north and south of the fortified town of Julich, nine miles northwest of Duren. There the Germans wrecked the bridge.

Allied air might hit German guns and communications all along the front and well back in the Cologne plain, thick in mud.

23 Miles From Cologne.

The nearest approach to Cologne still was 23 miles. At Lindern the 9th Army was 28 miles from Dusseldorf, Germany's 11th largest city of 540,000.

The offensive was two weeks old today, excluding the preliminary probing around Metz by the U.S. 3rd Army.

Opposition to the 3rd was increasing as Lt.-Gen. Patton's men came under the long guns of the Siegfried Line.

Despite the water obstacles in the path of the onthrusting Americans, the Divisions now drawn up along the Roer constitute "a serious threat to German defences in the Ruhr-Rhine area and hence both Cologne and Dusseldorf", an official statement said.

FUR COAT WILL BE DRAWN FOR FRIDAY

After several weeks anticipative waiting on the part of Belleville and district members of the fair sex who have had their eyes on a certain $500 fur coat, the day of decision as to whom will wear the coat is at hand with the lucky winner to be decided on Friday evening at the Capitol Theatre. For some time past members of the local Kinsmen Club and their friends have been selling tickets on their fur coat raffling project with tomorrow evening having been set as the date for the draw. The draw for the fur coat will be held at 8.45 according to theatre manager Thomas Mascaro.

BLAZE UNDER GRATE CAUSES EXCITEMENT

Dropping of a cigarette butt into the sidewalk grate outside Christians' Front Street store caused a small flurry of excitement shortly after seven o'clock Wednesday evening when smoke from paper refuse billowed up through the basement floor into the store. The local fire department was called with members quickly extinguishing the blaze before damage of any material nature resulted. After all danger of fire was past, however, smoke hung heavily beneath the store ceiling and was easily discernible from the street despite the fact doors were opened to permit it to escape.

MOTOR ACCIDENTS ATTRIBUTED TO STORM

As the result of the season's first heavy snow storm Wednesday evening, two motor accidents were reported on city streets, both attributed somewhat to the respective vehicles skidding on the snow-covered pavements.

On East Dundas St. an automobile driven by F/Sgt. Walter Shankin, Deseronto, skidded when the driver applied the brakes of the vehicle at the intersection of Church St. The car skidded into a support pole with the result the fender, headlight and axle were damaged.

Later in the evening on Highland Ave., a bread truck driven by Fred Marner, 52 Burton St., skidded on the snow and was in collision with a larger transport with no particular damage reported.

WIFE OF POINT ANNE FLYING OFFICER ARRIVES FROM U. K.

Among the forty-two British wives of R.C.A.F. personnel arriving recently to make home for their husbands whom they met and married in Britain, is Mrs. Dorothy Jenkinson, wife of Flight Lieut. G. P. Jenkinson of Point Anne. During her trip across the Atlantic and on the train en route to her new home, Mrs. Jenkinson was particularly impressed by the food, claiming it to be a definite contrast to that in Britain. A former member of the W.A.A.F. Mrs. Jenkinson was Sgt. Watch Keeper at Lincolnshire, which was severely bombed. Coming to Canada with her was her ten-months'-old baby, Valeria G.

WHITE SHEET FOUND ON C.N.R. FLAG POLE

Whether it was the work of a prankster or not is unknown, but when employees at the C.N.R. station went to work this morning they were surprised to see a large white flag-like sheet fluttering before the breeze atop the flag pole situated on the station grounds. When the flag was hauled down it was found to be a large white bed sheet with the words — "Viva la Canada" crudely painted across the face of the sheet.

Whether the placing of the flag was the work of an anti-conscriptionist or not naturally could not be determined. However, the makeshift flag was given into the custody of the Canadian National special police with instructions to fully investigate the matter. Local police were also notified of the incident.

3 Deer Downed With Three Shots In Five Minutes

Although the hunting season is now ten or more days past, it is still not too late to recount the experience of a Sidney township hunter who possibly broke all modern records for consistency of marksmanship when in something less than five minutes and with only three shots, exactly three deer were downed by the unerring nimrod.

The hunter in question is Mr. Barton Hinchcliffe of Wallbridge, and tax-collector for his township. With other members of his party, including a brother-in-law from Eldorado, Mr. Hinchcliffe went into the woods in the Millbridge district. Their dogs scared up four deer out of a thicket and one was downed fore it. But I'll never do it again maining three being chased towards Mr. Hinchcliffe only to have the tax-collector-hunter with three well-directed shots just about catch up on the season's hunting for his party.

"I still hardly believe that I got those three deer with only three shots," related Mr. Hinchcliffe, "and I'm not asking anybody else to be- by the Eldorado huntsman, the re- in a thousand hunting trips".

Belleville Girl Has Busy Time In Fleet Mail Office

In the shadow of Ottawa's Capital Hill, there is working these days what might be called the busiest group of people in the Royal Canadian Navy. Here in the Fleet Mail Office, Canadian Jack Tars and Jill Wrens are toiling strenuously in an effort to get away the thousands of letters that arrive daily for distribution to the boys in blue at sea.

Included in this group of busy naval bees is Leading Wren June Whiting, daughter of Mrs. I. Whiting of 20A Bridge Street, West.

The attractive twenty-year-old brunette, member of a fighting naval family has been in the senior service for the past eighteen months and is extremely proud of the trim blue and white uniforms of Canada's sailor girls.

She received her basic training at Galt, Ont., and shortly afterwards was transferred to HMCS "Bytown", in Ottawa.

These are exceptionally busy times for Wren Whiting as thousands of extra, letters and parcels accumulate daily for the fighting sailors' Christmas parties. Huge sacks of mail go out daily from the Fleet Mail Office to the lads on Canada's fighting ships and at far-flung outposts of war.

June has two brothers in the Navy, Jack is a stoker and Roy, a signalman.

Fishermen Pay Fines for Fishing With Gill Nets

Charges preferred under the Game and Fishery Act dominated today's County Police Court held before Magistrate T. Y. Wills at the Court House.

Wilfred Brant and John Brant of the Tyendinaga Reserve, pleaded guilty to individual charges of fishing in the Salmon River with a seine, contrary to the fishing laws of this province. A fine of ten dollars and costs was imposed in each case. Two Consecon commercial fishermen by the name of Goyer also paid minimum fines after admitting to violations of the Game and Fishery laws, namely that of fishing in prohibited waters with gill nets.

The names of Gordon and Donald Dempsey, Rednersville, were also called to face charges of fishing in prohibited waters with gill nets. At the request of Mr. Charles A. Payne K.C., counsel for the accused, was granted a week's enlargement to prepare a defence.

Theft Charge Dismissed.

A charge of theft was dismissed against Geraldine Davis of Trenton, after Crown Attorney R. C. Donnan assured the court the prosecution did not have sufficient evidence to place the young lady on trial. However, Doreen Ryckman, also of Trenton, was arraigned on a charge of stealing $40 from Mrs. Jeanette Sine, College Street. Mr. Payne asked for an enlargement in this matter also and bail was set at $500.

LAC. Harvey Faithful, of the R.C.A.F., pleaded guilty to a charge of stealing a wristwatch and bath robe from Anna Powell of Grimsby, Ont. Mr. Donnan informed the Bench that restitution had been made and moved for a suspended sentence. County Farmers Experienced Fairly Good Year Despite Dry Season

Hastings County experienced a fairly good year from an agricultural standpoint despite the fact that grain crops were well below the average, Agricultural Representative Lynn Fair told the County Council Agricultural Committee in his annual report on Tuesday.

Grain crops were such that a fairly large quantity of western grain was shipped in in order to maintain production of livestock. Cereal grains were considerably less than average, the report stated as was thee hay yields although the quality of the latter was good.

Milk Flow Less.

Pastures were reasonably good but were adversely affected by hot dry weather which resulted in a sharp decrease in milk flow from that of the previous year. Corn was a good average crop.

Hog production was maintained reasonably well at the 1943 level, Mr. Fair stated. This was made possible through heavy purchases of western grain. Increased demand for eggs resulted in stimulation of poultry flocks and consequently the poultry population of the county has noticeably increased.

Many farmers felt, Mr. Fair said, that the general price of agricultural products has not been sufficiently advanced to overcome the increased cost of production. One of the greatest factors in this, is the increased cost of wages for labor.

Pleased With Co-Operation.

Farm labor had been very scarce in the county, he added, but a number of farmers' wives, and families had worked hard in the fields and did a fine job in the harvesting of crops with a minimum of outside help. He paid tribute to the Belleville Chamber of Commerce and the National Selective Service office here for the fine co-operation afforded the farmers of the county.

Accredited cattle population of the county is 1837 head with forty-seven accredited herds. Sheep amount to 19,712 head valued at $142,898. Twenty-five new flocks were established in the county during the year and all have been supplied with a pure bred ram under the Dominion Ram Loaning Committee.

46,742 Hogs.

County swine were numbered at 46,742 with a value of $496,474 in Mr. Fair's report. Hog production showed a decrease of 8,000 over the 1942 production of 54,000. In 1940 Hastings produced 57,000 hogs; in 1941, 66,000; in 1942, 84,000 and 1942, 54,000.

Fifty-one farmers and farmers' sons and one woman went to the western provinces from this county to assist with harvesting operations.

Referring to county contests, Mr. Fair pointed out that the Junior Farmer Judging Contest had been won by Royden Davis, Greenview; the Boys' and Girls' Club work by Glen Haslett, Bonarlaw; Coaches' prize by Gordon Davis, Greenview; the County Live Stock Judging by Ray Hall, Trenton, who received the Warden's Trophy; E. Burris, Madoc, who earned the P. C. McGuire Trophy and S. Elliott and R. Sills, Tweed, who annexed the C.N.R. Shield.

Local Men Express Opinion in Paper On Reciprocal Trade with U.K.

Included in a Financial Post query of a cross section of Ontario opinion as to whether Canada should guarantee to buy certain British goods after the war in return for guaranteed British purchases of Canadian aluminum, wheat, bacon, lumber, etc., and if so what British goods, Messrs Jamieson Bone and Harry Ackerman expressed the following opinions which appear in the current edition of the Post.

Mr. Bone Said: "This is a subject to be dealt with by trade commissions of both countries. We, of course, want to sell our natural products of the farm, forest and mine but we isolate ourselves behind unconscionable tariffs on imports of British natural products which are cotton, woollens, steel goods, automobiles etc. Our manufacturers must stand more on world prices, the same as the farmer which means our very high tariffs must be considerably reduced with special reductions for empire goods. The public won't stand longer for $700 cars selling for $1,300."

Mr. Ackerman believed it would be good policy for Canada to guarantee the purchase of British cottons, woollens and any other goods that can be handled on a profitable basis after the war in exchange for Canadian bacon, wheat, lumber, cheese, apples, canned goods, etc.

"The exchange of commodities," he said, "between Canada and the Motherland should make for a better feeling. Canada is part of the British Empire and nothing can cement friendship more fully than a mutually profitable exchange of goods. A child would be very ungrateful not to give all preference possible to its parents."

Local Veteran of Last War Says Brutality Is Innate in Hun Character

Fundamentally the German is a savage beast at heart, he only required Hitlerism to fan the flame of natural brutality into fires of bestiality and cruelty.

That is the opinion of Percy Ford, Station Street, who was a prisoner of war in a coal mining district near Munster, Germany, for a year during the First World War.

On his back are broad six-inch weals, livid twenty-five-year evidence of German whips wielded by the Kaiser's men upon those unfortunate prisoners who were caught trying to escape, or as in this case, allowed pieces of stone to appear in coal mined by their hands.

Captured by Enemy

Ford, then a seventeen-year-old private in the 6th Battalion, Wiltshire Regiment, British Imperial Army, was captured at Mont-le-Prien, and transferred to Camp Shamrock IV near Munster where with other Allied prisoners he was sent to work in the coal mines.

A few months after his capture, he, with several other prisoners including three Russians, made their escape from the mines. Hiding by day and travelling by night they covered 125 miles to the Holland border, but here Dutch guards refused them permission to cross and they were recaptured by German searching parties.

Back at their camp, the recaptured prisoners were placed before a high white stone wall, hands in air, while German bull-whips cut and slashed their backs as punishment. This occurred twice weekly for a period of four weeks. Plates of thin watery soup, and a piece of black bread was their daily diet. Besides this, they were forced to work in the mines under heavy guard.

Chosen For Brutality

"These men, specially chosen for the job wreaked their anger upon the prisoners at every opportunity. A small piece of stone discovered in the coal mined by the prisoners was a signal for a general outburst of cruelty on the part of the guards," Ford stated. "I have seen men given a dozen lashes for what the Germans called attempted sabotage when the stone was found."

International law decrees that officer prisoners of war are not allowed to work, but Ford added, "the buck private in those days did not live a life of ease. I don't know what conditions are in prisoner-of-war camps in this war, but the Germans haven't changed their spots in 25 years and I don't imagine it's any too pleasant, despite letters to the contrary."

He was repatriated in December, 1918, thirteen months after his capture.

Medical Journal Claims Cold Vaccines No Value

Chicago, Nov. 30 —(AP)— Vaccines popularly supposed to prevent or cure the common cold were condemned today as having no proved value in a report published in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The joint report by the A.M.A. councils on pharmacy and chemistry and industrial health, included vaccines administered hypodermically, by swallowing capsules (oral vaccine), and by local spraying of the upper respiratory tract.

"Decisive evidence of the value of any vaccine is not forthcoming, and the weight of careful studies clearly indicates that none of the vaccines now available, when administered by the routes advised, has proved of value," the report said.

Colder Weather To Follow First Heavy Snowfall

Winter coats and galoshes made their initial appearance today as a driving snow heralded the first approach of winter.

And with the weatherman promising a more or less consistent supply of the white stuff, snow-shovels and domestic snowplows will likely be in full action by nightfall.

Residents are advised not to lay aside their fur coats and galoshes because sub-zero temperatures in the west promise a spell of winter here also, although it is expected to arrive in a considerably modified form.

The Dominion Meteorological Bureau says that "it will be colder for a day or so."

On the prairies, Edmonton, Saskatoon and Swift Current experienced 18 degrees below zero yesterday. This cold spell is moving east.

"But it will be modified to a considerabe extent" says the weatherman, "because the lakes are still warm. It may get a little colder than it has been so far."

The War Today—

New Drive by U.S. 9th Army May Have Great Significance

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
(AP War Analyst)

The U. S. 9th Army's fresh drive against the German northern flank, along the flooded valley of the Roer river in the Rhineland, strengthens the belief that another big Allied push in this vital zone is imminent.

One suspects this was the subject of the mysterious conference Tuesday night "somewhere in Belgium" between Gen. Eisenhower and Field Marshal Montgomery, commanding the 21st Army Group in the north.

If the present push does develop into a full-fledged offensive it likely will be calculated to turn the enemy flank, compelling the Germans to fall back from the Roer and accept battle in the open plain west of the Cologne-Dusseldorf sector of the Rhine. The grim purpose of these tactics is to force Field Marshal von Rundstedt's armies up against the Rhine and annihilate them.

Battle of Cologne Plain

That's the main business of the Allied Command right now—to kill or capture German soldiers. We mustn't forget that the developing battle of the Cologne Plain probably is the decisive engagement.

Von Rundstedt himself has invited these tactics by electing to defend the Cologne Plain to the last ditch. With this in view he has massed in this area all the troops he can rake up. He even has weakened his defence of the great Saar industrial centre on the southern end of the fighting front.

Why should the German commander take such chances because the Ruhr manufacturing area, which lies behind the Rhine opposite the Allied northern flank, is vastly more important than the Saar. Without the Ruhr Germany couldn't carry on.

Antwerp Port Now in Use

Two developments may have opened the way for another offensive. Prime Minister Churchill gave away the secret of one yesterday when he told the House of Commons that the great Belgian port of Antwerp actually is handling cargoes once more.

The other development lies in the fierce fighting which has been proceeding along the northern flank. Slowly but steadily the Allies have flung the Germans back from strong positions which blocked progress towards the Cologne Plain.

Don't the Germans know what's cooking? Of course they do. Their commentators for days have been predicting an offensive on this northern flank. The fact that the Nazis have opened dam flood-gates on the Roer to block the 9th Army clearly indicates they believe a fresh crisis is close.

Gen. Eisenhower Inspects 1st Canadian Army

By Douglas Amaron

Somewhere in Holland, Nov. 30—(CP Cable)— The 1st Canadian Army and attached British and Polish divisions have played host to Gen. Eisenhower for a day.

The Supreme Commander who has been touring the armies under his command came to the Canadians yesterday and felt this morning after 24 inspection-filled hours. He spent the night at army headquarters as Gen. Crerar's guest.

Eisenhower devoted yesterday morning to the Canadian armored formations. During the afternoon he visited a British corps and a British hospital, inspected Polish infantry battalions and saw a reconnaissance and fighter-bomber wing of the R.A.F. that works with the Canadians.

The General—whose visit could not be publicized until he left the area—began his tour by inspecting a guard of honor from the South Albert Regiment, one of whose squadron commanders, Maj. David V. Currie of Moose Jaw, Sask., and Owen Sound, Ont., received a Victoria Cross earlier this week.

An impressive flame-throwing exhibition was staged by three sections of Wasps commanded by Capt. H. N. MacLean of New York City.

Three Ontario regiments provided sections for this demonstration. The commanders were Sgts. Georgie Guild, Niagara Falls, E. K. Kilk, Welland, and M. T. E. Philbin, Windsor.

One field squadron of the Royal Canadian Engineers staged a rafting demonstration. Lieut. F. N. Zimmerman of Noranda, Que., was commander of the working party aided by Sgt. MacPhain, Timmins, Ont.

59 Persons Killed InBombExplosions

London, Nov. 30 (CP)—Air Secretary Sir Archibald Sinclair told the House of Commons today the latest information indicated 59 persons were killed or presumed killed in the bomb depot explosions near Burton-on-Trent in Staffordshire Monday.

He said seven air ministry employees lost their lives and 20 others are missing and thought to be dead. Among civilians living and working in the vicinity nine were killed and 23 are missing, presumed killed.

Ten air ministry employees are in hospitals, nine other persons are missing and three injured.

Sir Archibald said there is "no reason to think that the explosion was due to enemy action."

(A eGrman broadcast shortly after the blast alleged it was caused by a V-weapon.)

Sir Archibald said "the total loss of bombs is less than 4,000 tons, no more than is dropped in a single raid on Germany." A former officer in the Royal Engineers previously had told the authorities that millions of pounds worth of bombs, sufficient for hundreds of raids on Germany, were stored in the subterranean dump.

Sir Archibald told the House a court of inquiry had been ordered.

Vining Trial Ready for Jury

Toronto, Nov. 30 —(CP)— Trial of Edward R. (Ted) Vining of London, Ont., on charges of manslaughter and criminal negligence in connection with the death of 17 of 30 passengers aboard the pleasure boat Olga when it capsized off Port Stanley last June 4 is expected to come to a close late today.

Mr. Justice G. F. McFarland will make his charge to the Ontario Supreme Court jury this morning. Crown and defence counsel completed their summations before court adjourned yesterday.

Crown Counsel Hugh Donald said the charges against Vining were justified by evidence and that accused had displayed an "utter disregard for the safety of the passengers in his charge."

Defence Counsel Mayer Lerner, however, said in his summation that there was no evidence to substantiate a charge of manslaughter.

Victory - the Supreme Aim

His Majesty King George Sixth in the brief throne speech opening the tenth session of the longest parliament in British history emphasized the impressive fact that the winning of victory still remains "our supreme aim." The speech showed that the war against Japan is to be pressed to the utmost after the defeat of Germany and that once the war in Europe is over the transition from war to peace may be begun without prejudicing the prosecution of the war against Japan. The address highlighted the great confidence of the Allies in the victories to come which will give the world the peace "which is our chief desire."

The tribute to the Allied nations in the prorogation speech the day before referred to the resounding victories of the Russian allies and the amazing strength of the Free Forces of France in the liberation of their country.

On no Parliament in Britain's long history has fallen so heavy and continued a task as that of battling the enemy of democracy and freedom which has fallen to the present Parliament. Its duties are not yet finished, they will continue until the end of the struggle. In the history of the British Parliament, that of these war years will occupy an outstanding position.

The Moment "Not to Slacken"

"We have to carry the war through to its closing stages with all the energy of unity, not only at home among ourselves, but among the great United Powers of the Grand Alliance who I am happy to say were never more closely and interestingly and comprehendingly united than they are at this moment," said Prime Minister Winston Churchill in the British Commons on Wednesday in which he warned against over-optimism as to the time when the war with Germany will be ended.

His advice to the House and through it to the nation was most carefully phrased and stressed with the utmost of his gift of language. "I must warn the House and Country against any indulgence in the feeling that the war will soon be over." He then went on, "It may be, but do not indulge in that feeling that we should now be able to turn our thoughts to a new phase in world history which will open with the close of this war."

Then Mr. Churchill said, "The truth is that no one knows when the German war will be finished and still less how long the interval will be between the defeat of the Germans and the defeat of the Japanese."

This is not the first time he has expressed this caution. Some months ago he spoke in words "to damp down premature hopes."

At that time "I could see disappointment in several quarters as I looked round the House and I followed this up quickly by indicating the late spring or early summer as periods which we must take into accounts as possibilities."

He expressed his "present inclination as not at all to mitigate these forecasts or guesses—for they can be but little more than guesses. Indeed, if I were to make any change in the duration of unfolding events it would be to leave out the word 'early' before the word 'summer'."

The Prime Minister pointed out that weather had made the task of the British and American troops extremely difficult and the fourth element in war, mud, had played a formidable role. The Germans had not yet been driven back to the Rhine nor had a strong bridgehead been established, though the battle is continuing with the utmost vigor.

The Prime Minister said his object was "to dissipate the lightly founded sensations that we can divert our eyes from the war and turn to the tasks of transition and reconstruction or political controversies and other diversions of peace which are dear to our hearts and rightly dear to the democracies in action because without controversy the democracies cannot achieve their healthening processes," and "the war issue weighs preponderantly and intensely upon us and upon every form of our national life. All else must be subordinated to this supreme task."

The attention must be centred on the foe, he said, and "this is just the moment not to slacken." He went on, "Of the races with the calendar nearly all of them are won in the last lap and it is then, when one is most tired, when the sense of boredom seems to weigh upon one, when even the most glittering, exciting brilliant events are, as it were, covered by satiation, when the headlines in the newspapers, though perfectly true, succeed one another in their glowing emphasis and yet the end seems to recede before us. This is the time to "give that extra sense of exertion and effort, that boundless and inexhaustible dynamic energy that we have shown—and which, records made public, emphasize in detail that we have shown during this struggle."

It is the duty of all to show tirelessness and "it is one thing to feel this tremendous drive of energy at the beginning of the war, when your country is likely to be invaded and you do not know that you will not have to die honorably—but soon—it is one thing to exhibit those qualities which certainly the House has never been restrained from, at such a moment, and quite another to do them in the sixth year of the war." Mr. Churchill warned that the enemy whose country is now being invaded "has also the supreme stimuli which we ourselves responded to in the very dark days of 1940."

Never has Mr. Churchill spoken with more directness and insistence upon carrying the burden of the war with the entire energy and spirit as he did on Tuesday. His address gave the answer to the sense of undue optimism which would handicap the war effort as the United Nations are surging to the defeat of the enemy.

Poetry and the Fighting Man

"The men of many nations who went forth from these shores on June 6, 1944, may not have repeated snatches of poetry to themselves, though one poem, called 'A Soldier's Prayer,' which was published only the other day, suggests that many of them may have poetry in their hearts. It was written anonymously in the African desert late in 1942, by a man who had gone through the retreat to Dunkirk and the evacuation. He wrote that when he and his comrades reached the sea:

'My eyes were blind, my feet were torn,
My soul sang like a bird at dawn!
I knew that death was but a door.
I knew what we were fighting for.
Peace for the kids, our brothers freed
A kinder world, a cleaner breed'."

—(From "War Review" given by Wickham Steed, from the BBC in London.)

Tired Pedestrians

(Winnipeg Tribune)

It must be borne in mind that the average pedestrian is a little more tired, a little less alert these days. He or she is probably working harder, worrying a little more. There are more elderly people on the streets. Many men and women who in normal times would have retired are carrying on with their jobs, trudging through the streets to and from work.

All this spells caution and more caution. It means caution on the part of everyone, motorists and pedestrians. We must all be seized with a fixed determination to do our share to make our streets and roads safe places in which to ride and walk.

Nazi Conscience

(London News Chronicle)

A Belgian who was instrumental in making use of Wehrmacht facilities for resistance purposes was once impelled to ask one of the corrupt officials:

"You are a Nazi and believe in Hitler. Will you tell me how you reconcile that with your—you'll pardon me—somewhat questionable activities of the black market?"

The Nazi, who had just accepted several thousand francs to deliver what he was informed were cases of textiles to France, replied:

"There is nothing wrong in it. Didn't the Fuehrer himself once write that we Nazis must make the most of life? That is all that I am doing. That is what every Nazi is doing."

It is our own vanity that makes the vanity of others intolerable to us.—Rochefoucauld.

Tyranny sways not as it hath power but as it is suffered.—Shakespeare.

LOSS

Used to think I had to win
Every game I played;
Heart and soul went fighting in,
Rashly unafraid.

Then, the bitter truth to tell,
Whimpered at defeat.
Never took it very well;
Wanting victory sweet.

When I'd let my temper flame,
This I learned was true:
I'd not only lost a game;
I'd lost something, too.

Now I know the game is fun.
Though to win I'd choose,
Hard I try, when all is done,
Just the game to lose.

JEWESS AND AUTHORESS

"Jewess" in the sense of a Jewish woman occurs only twice in the King James Version of the Bible.

Both instances of this term in the English Bible is in the Acts of the Apostles.

Acts 16:1, referring to Paul in Syria and Cilicia, says: "Then came he to Derbe and Lystra: and, behold, a certain disciple was there, named Timotheus (Timothy), the son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek."

In connection with Paul's detention in Herod's judgment hall at Caesarea, Acts 24:24 says: "And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess, he sent for Paul and heard him concerning the faith of Christ."

I Chronicles 4:18 refers to the wife of Mered, the Calebite, as "Jehudijah," which is an attempt to rend literally the Hebrew "yehudiyyah."

The Revised Version renders this "the Jewess."

According to I Chronicles 4:18, the woman "which Mered took" was "Bithiah the daughter of Pharaoh." Why a daughter of Pharaoh should have been specially designed "the Jewess" is not clear. It may have meant that Bithiah, though a daughter of Pharaoh, adhered to Judaism; that is, she was a Jewess from the standpoint of the Egyptians because she was married to a Jew.

But some authorities suppose that the text here has become dislocated and that the true meaning is that Mered had two wives, one being Bithiah the daughter of Pharaoh and the other "the Jewess."

The suffix "ess" was formerly more widely used in English than at present to denote female persons of animals. "Jewess" was used in Wyclif's 14th-century translation of the Bible, and it is found once in Shakespeare, where it is applied to Jessica in The Merchant of Venice.

Although we still speak of a "lioness" and a "tigress," the "ess" suffix has been gradually falling into disuse.

We still say "actress" and "seamstress," but nowadays agent-nouns denoting occupation or profession are treated as of common gender whenever possible. "Governor," "author" and "writer" are applied to women as well as to men. "Authoress" and "poetess" and suchlike are becoming a thing of the past.

COL. J. L. RALSTON

Fred Rose, Labor Progressive member for Montreal Cartier and the only representative of his party in the House, said unjust attacks had been made on Quebec in the conscription dispute.

Liguori Lacombe (CDN — Laval-Two Mountains) also the sole member of his party in the House, said he had opposed Canada's declaration of war and the increases in war expenditures. Conscription was the consequence of these steps and he opposed it.

Completely Controlled

Mr. King told the House after the sitting opened that Gen. McNaughton had assured him that the situation in British Columbia army camps where draftees had staged anti-conscription demonstrations was being "completely controlled". He said the situation there did not mean mutiny and he asked members to guard their statements and avoid making a difficult situation worse.

Mr. King said that Works Minister Fournier, a Quebec Cabinet member, has not resigned.

Capt. J. A. Johnston (L—London), making his maiden speech in the confidence motion debate, said he supported the government in the action it had taken in making Home Defence Army men available for overseas. Hon. R. B. Hanson (PC—York-Sunbury) continues the debate today.

Col. Ralston opened his address with the blunt remark that when he returned from overseas in October he told the Cabinet "that we needed an additional 15,000 trained infantry as reinforcements overseas as quickly as we could get them there. That immediate need still exists".

The Main Question

This was the main question. He would not be "deflected" by other matters, which had been raised.

He did not think he could be "reprimanded" on the grounds of breaking Cabinet secrecy by discussing matters to which the Prime Minister had referred in his radio address of Nov. 8. He felt that two things said by Mr. King needed correction "First, the statement in effect that Mr. Ralston had reported that there was no actual shortage of reinforcements, and, secondly, the statement that Mr. Ralston had reported that there was possible shortage of reinforcements in the next few months.

An Actual Shortage

". . . I have indicated to the public, as I indicated to my colleagues, that there was an actual shortage, that the reinforcement pools were down very much, if not wholly depleted.

". . . It seemed to me that was a situation which rather indicated an actual shortage of reinforcements, and secondly, indicated that the possible shortage in the next few months was a probable shortage at the end of December."

He said he thought Mr. King was wrong in saying that the government had nothing before it up to October to suggest there would be any need for overseas conscription. On June 1 he brought to the attention of the War Committee advice from the Chief of Staff that after October the question would arise whether an army formation should be broken up or draftees sent over to maintain reinforcements.

Mr. King had said that on Aug. 3 assurance was given that there was no need of considered overseas conscription, but Col. Ralston said he could not remember any such reference being made.

On Sept. 22, Ralston had said he could not consent to the release of trained draftees as they might be needed.

"Those are the matters to which I refer and they indicate that the situation was not altogether unmentioned to the cabinet, although I admit quite frankly that had the situation been as I have discovered since, and as I reported to the cabinet, certainly I would have reported it at once," he continued.

Hurried Home

As soon as he checked the situation overseas he hurried home with his conscription recommendation.

Col. Ralston said he could not understand why Mr. King had made a statement that in the cabinet he had asked one colleague after another whether they could take the responsibility borne by the Prime Minister and they declined. Mr. King had said it was easy to oppose a position hitherto assumed by the government and propose new measures, but persons so doing should be prepared to take responsibility for the enactment of such measures and had no right to leave a ministry which might collapse in consequence of their action.

"I am going to say that is the strangest doctrine I have ever heard enunciated in this House," said Col. Ralston.

"If I were not respectful for the Prime Minister I would call it just plain nonsense; I will call it rhetoric."

Mr. King had asked three colleagues the question, not any more.

Mr. King: "I say to my honorable friend at once that I asked if any member of the cabinet would take the responsibility."

Col. Ralston: "I am corrected. What I am saying is that he asked three colleagues, specifically."

Prime Minister Objects

The Prime Minister was not in genuine search for a successor and has asked "a purely hypothetical question." Col. Ralston said he had answered "no!" and none of the others had consented. In the course of discussion Mr. King had indicated he had not intended going to the Governor-General to resign.

Mr. King: "I say to my Honorable friend that we were discussing very seriously at the time whether the government could be carried on, and the only reason I asked the question was that I wished to make sure as to whether I would have to continue to carry this load under the circumstances, or not."

Col. Ralston: "I say to the Prime Minister it was not so taken by the members who were asked. When I asked the Prime Minister if he was asking out of curiosity he either assented to that or indicated that he had not any intention of going down to ask the Governor General.

Mr. King: "No, that is not correct."

Col. Ralston said Mr. King was taking an untenable position in taking him (Col. Ralston) to task for saying he must resign if the policy he favored were not carried out.

Mr. King asked if, at a subsequent cabinet meeting, he did not say that if the government felt it had to take the course of introducing conscription at this stage "I would be quite prepared to resign at the end, and that I would like to know if any of them would be prepared to take my place?"

Col. Ralston said Mr. King could make his statement on subsequent meetings later.

MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS

My sister, never ill a day in her life until this affliction, has three healthy children ranging in age from nine to 15 years. As a girl of about ten she spent a week on a farm where she drank milk fresh from the cow, until her stomach turned against it, and she never drank milk in any form again. At the age of 28 she became awkward and unsteady on her feet, then had to take hold of a chair for support when she tried to walk, and finally had to take to a wheel chair, and even had difficulty using her hands and considerable slowness and stammering in speech. Numerous physicians agreed her trouble is multiple sclerosis. I was struck by what you said in one article about multiple sclerosis—that vitamin A treatment has apparently given benefit in some cases. I thought my sister's exclusion of milk (as well as cream and butter) from her diet since she was ten years of age may have had something to do with the development of her trouble, as I gather that milk, cream and butter are the richest food sources of vitamin A. (H.S.F.)

All I know is what I read in the textbooks, medical journals and letters from doctors and laymen.

In one book (Nutrition and Disease, by Edward Mellanby, M.D., F. R. C. P., F. R. S., published by Oliver and Boyd, London, '34) I read this:

"I shall now briefly describe my experience with 12 cases (of multiple sclerosis) treated with a diet high in vitamin A — it included 1½ to 2 pints of milk a day, 2 eggs, mammalian (any animal that suckles its young) liver, green vegetables and carrots, and cod-liver oil about two teaspoonfuls twice daily."

Dr. Mellanby went on to say that he was impressed by (1) the great improvement that took place in the early cases, however severe, from which up to the time of writing his book there had been no relapse; and (2) the stationary condition of the more chronic or long-standing cases—they got no better but no worse.

It should be remembered that in multiple (sometimes called disseminated) sclerosis, regardless of whether any particular treatment is used, remissions may occur and these remissions sometimes last for years during which there is no further progress of the trouble or no further impairment of muscle or other functions.

So, as I suggest in the Green Book—"Nerves and Nutrition," for copy send twenty-five cents and stamped pre-addressed envelope—it may be more convenient and effective to take three 25,000 unit capsules of vitamin A daily—that is natural vitamin A, not carotene—than it is for most persons to try to follow the high vitamin A diet Dr. Mellanby describes. Two months should be a sufficient time to determine whether vitamin A will help the victim of multiple sclerosis. If no improvement is apparent in that time it would be useless to continue the treatment any longer.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS
Factory Canned versus Home Canned

You said scurvy in mild degree is common among all classes in America today, especially in bottle fed babies who do not receive a daily ration of orange or tomato or fruit juice or factory canned tomato juice. Do you make a distinction of factory canned from home canned tomato, and if so, what is it? (C.M.)

Answer—Yes, the vitamin C in fresh fruit, fresh vegetable, greens, etc., is destroyed by oxidation. That's why fruit juice expressed from the fruit and kept for hours or overnight loses its vitamin C to a considerable degree. The commercial canning process is a vacuum process—fresh fruit or juice hermetically sealed before cooking—which prevents oxidation. Home canning is usually open kettle cooking which greatly increases oxidation. If the fruit, vegetable or juice completely fills container so no air space remains, and the container is hermetically sealed before heating, cooking or sterilization, and the seal not broken, then the home canning process is just as good as the factory vacuum process so far as preserving the vitamin C is concerned.

Dealers Rewarded With Gifts For Long Service

Importance of goodwill in employer-employee relationships was emphasized to district dealers of the McColl-Frontenac company on Wednesday evening when approximately 50 dealers, consumers and company representatives in District No. 2 convened at the Y.M.C.A. for the annual dealer award dinner meeting sponsored by the company's head office in Toronto.

Long term dealers with the company were suitably rewarded for their years' of service with the firm being presented with parchments and other remembrances in keeping with their various periods of association with the firm. No. 2 district comprises the area between Oshawa, Lindsay, Peterborough, Tweed, Belleville and Bloomfield.

Present from the provincial head office were T. J. Thompson, district manager, who acted as chairman for the meeting; Tom Kendall, superintendent of sales promotion and advertising; G. B. McClean, Ontario division manager and A. Fernie, credit manager. Twenty years as dealer with the firm, Mr. Harold Ward of Rednersville was presented with an engraved gold watch; Mr. Tom Lafferty, Belleville, 15 years, with a silver tray and J. E. Coffey, Lonsdale, 10 years, with a Parker pen.

Speaking briefly to the meeting Mr. Kendall advised dealers to associate conscientious returned men with their businesses and pointed out the advantages of balanced selling of all products and commodities relating to the selling of gasoline.

Entertainment during the evening was provided by Mr. and Mrs. William Grant and their daughter, Helen, who delighted with trio arrangements of xylophone and piano numbers, and by Jimmy Bankier who was heard in several Scotch numbers. Joe Shortt led in community singing with a rollicking motion picture comedy completing the evening's entertainment.

Quick-Wittedness Of French Doctor Helps Naval Rating

Halifax, Nov. 30 — (CP) — Three ratings from the Canadian tribal destroyer Athabaskan, which was sunk in the English Channel last April, can thank the quick-wittedness of a French medical officer for their presence in Canada instead of in a German prison camp, Chief Stoker W. D. Mitchell of Vancouver and Victoria, said today.

Mitchell told of the French officer's ruse after arriving here aboard a hospital ship as a wounded survivor of Athabaskan. The three men saved from a German prison camp were Stoker John Dolan of Montreal, Able Seaman Edward McCloy of (18 Water St.) Brockville, Ont., and Ordinary Seaman Raymond Moar of Chatham, N.B.

Of Athabaskan's survivors, 30 were taken to hospital at Orleans, and at the end of June 25 were moved to Germany. By early August three of the five who were left were pretty well recovered.

"When the American forces neared Orleans, the German commandant came to the hospital and ordered the French doctor to get all the 'walking wounded' ready — they were going to be evacuated to Germany," said Mitchell.

"So the doctor hurried around and told the boys to get back into bed, and to tell anyone who asked that they weren't able to move." The deception worked: a number of French Senegalese and Arab patients were moved to Germany, but the 30-odd Canadian, American and British patients in the hospital were left behind and freed by the American troops Aug. 16.

MAY RETIRE FROM POLITICS

Ottawa, Nov. 30 (CP)—A possible hint that he might be contemplating retiring from political life was seen last night when Col. J. L. Ralston, former Defence Minister, asked the Speaker's permission to read into the Commons record a farewell message he had made to the army and defence personnel.

He referred to the fact that "probably this is the last time that I shall have an opportunity of addressing the House on matters of this kind..."

Halt Lend-Lease Shipments Iron, Steel on Jan. 1

Washington, Nov. 30 —(AP)— The United States plans to halt lend-lease shipments of iron and steel to Britain Jan. 1 — which means a drastic downward revision of the war aid program for 1945— it was announced officially today in a statement summing up lengthy Anglo-American lend-lease conferences just concluded here.

They resulted in a $5,600,000,000 program for shipments to Britain during 1945—a cut of almost 50 per cent under comparable figures for this year.

Elimination of cost-free shipments of steel and some other "raw and semi-fabricated materials" to Britain is made possible by decreasing war demands on Britain's own steel industry, it was learned. It has been ordered into effect Jan. 1 in order to smooth the way for reconversion of British industry to civilian production on an "equitable basis" with reconversion in the United States. British authorities are eager to reconvert in order to begin restoring their 71 per cent loss in exports.

The principle of "equitable" reconversion was worked out for the first time in these conferences, headed by Lord Keynes, British economist, and Harry White, American treasury expert.

It is taken to mean that Britain may relax her war production controls and shift production capacity where she can on a basis of equality with the United States, and that lend-lease arrangements from now to the war's end will not deny her that opportunity.

The statement promised no change in the fundamental policies that lend-lease is a wartime system only and that no article which Britain receives under lend-lease may be re-exported.

British Press Extends Greetings To Mr. Churchill

London, Nov. 30 (CP-Reuter) — The British press today extended warm greetings to Prime Minister Churchill on his 70th birthday.

The papers stressed they were voicing the sentiments of the country and of the friends of freedom throughout the world.

As the Times of London phrased it: "Mr. Churchill has proved himself in the years of national unity a true national leader, not only in his appeal to the popular imagination and in the control of strategy but also in his mastery of the political scene.

"Along with enduring youthfulness, disarming humor and essential dislike of pretension and parade he has disclosed in all great issues an ever-increasing maturity of patience and tolerance which supply the reason why the loyalty of his colleagues in an all-party government has roots which go into something deeper even than the plain and paramount duty of the hour."

The Manchester Guardian said: "No British name has even meant so much to men and women under every sky.

"Mr. Churchill was a greater man and spoke with a greater power when he took control of our fortunes because he had spent those lonely years brooding over the coming danger and thinking only of the fate of his country and of Europe. All the force of his character disciplined by adversity and unspoilt by ambition all the strength of his talents were absorbed in his task of leadership.

"Whatever the future that awaits him he has lived his finest hours."

Turn Tide of War

New York, Nov. 30 — (CP)—Winston Churchill "turned the tide of war," the New York Times said editorially today in extending congratulations to the Prime Minister on his 70th birthday.

"The war would have been won even if Winston Churchill had fallen long years ago in the Sudan or South Africa," said the paper. "But it would not have been won so soon . . . Americans, reading the long casualty lists of today, may soberly reflect that those lists would have been longer and extended over more months, and even years, if it had not been for Winston Churchill."

Rental Restrictions Passed by Board

Ottawa, Nov. 30 (CP)—New rental restrictions, designed to check evasion of rent control through the sale or rental of furniture, charging of commissions or collecting of rewards, were announced today by the Prices Board.

The new order prohibits any person from charging or demanding payment of a commission or reward from a tenant and not more than one month's rent may be collected in advance.

To prevent exploitation of tenants through the sale of furniture at excessive profits, the order prohibits any person offering housing accommodation for rent from selling or renting furniture to a tenant unless the price or rental for the furniture has been set by the rentals appraiser.

The order also provides against any new racketeering practice by giving the rentals administrator authority to issue special directions if "unreasonable or unjust" conditions are imposed on a tenant.

NEW OFFENSIVE MAY SEAL OFF HUNS IN BALKANS

25-Mile Advance May Continue Into Austria—Budapest May be Circled

London, Nov. 30 (CP)—Russian and Yugoslav Partisan forces thrust forward 25 miles west of the Danube in southwestern Hungary today in a huge offensive that has the threefold possibility of encircling Budapest, driving straight into Austria and sealing off all Nazi troops in the Balkans.

Premier Stalin in an order of the day yesterday announced the capture of 350 communities in southern Hungary and northern Yugoslavia, confirming the drive about which the German radio has spoken for the last week.

Pecs, coal mining and railway centre 98 miles southwest of Budapest was seized, as was Mohacs, a like distance directly south of the Hungarian capital and Bataszek, 85 miles south of Budapest, Moscow said.

The Russian communique said the drive across the Danube by Marshal Feodor Tolbukhin's 3rd Ukraine army and Yugoslav Nationals was north of the big river's confluence with the Drava, a point 130 miles due south of Budapest. The break-through was on a 93-mile-wide front that extended on its northern flank to within 37 miles of the Hungarian capital.

31-Mile Advance.

(Marshal Tito in a broadcast communique reported by the Federal Communications Commission announced a 31-mile advance in the area and said Russian and Partisan troops now were "pursuing the beaten Germans toward the west." The bulletin also listed many Partisan victories inside Yugoslavia.)

Moscow named no captured towns north of Bataszek although the further northward extent of the drive had been implied in the announcement of the width of the bridgehead west of the Danube. Apparently Red army troops today stood somewhere between the Danube and the north end of Lake Balaton, 100 miles from the Austrian border and 130 miles from Budapest.

Budapest, meanwhile, was under close siege from the northeast by parts of Marshal Rodin Y. Malinovsky's 2nd Ukraine army. The Moscow war bulletin did not mention this sector, but the German radio admitted further losses along the front stretching 85 miles northeast from the capital.

Berlin Admission.

Berlin said the Russians had broken into Eger, 60 miles northeast of Budapest adjoining the vital Budapest-Miskolc railway and guarding a pass through the Matra mountains into central Slovakia.

Another Soviet army, the 4th Ukraine, led by Gen. Ivan Petrov, continued to push its way westward in Slovakia across rain-drenched terrain. Moscow said the flank guards of the 2nd and 4th Ukraine armies already have established contact in the border area north of Muskolc, while Petrov was near to clearing the Dukla pass into Poland on his northern flank.

STALKED DOWN MONKEY

Capoocan Village, Leyte, Nov. 30 (AP)—There's just one little drawback to the war dogs used by the United States army on Leyte. They're too good. The dogs alert the soldiers for anything—Japs, Filipinos or—well, for instance, one dog had a squad alerted for 20 minutes one day. The squad carefully stalked down a monkey.

Lancaster, Pa., Nov. 30 (AP) — Donald Landis, an inveterate smoker, today found 300,000 cigarets at a street intersection. He notified police who discovered the cigarets fell from an express company truck. Said an official of the company: "We'll reward Landis for his honesty but not with cigarets.

Sydney Mines, N.S., Nov. 30 (CP) —A fully-equipped liferaft has been found on the shore at Canberry, near here, it was learned last night. A similar raft, bearing the same number, drofted ashore near Florence, a few miles away, on Nov. 19. No indication of origin of the rafts has been disclosed.

Lt. Godfrey Scott Thanks Kinsmen For Fags Sent

"After all seven cigarettes a day, if you get them, aren't very many for those men who have to spend the greater part of a day in a watery, muddy slit trench waiting for some enemy sniper to poke his nose out," Lieut. Godfrey Scott, former newspaper correspondent of this city, wrote in a letter to chairman Buster LaBarr of the Kinsmen Fag Fund from Belgium recently. Lieut. Scott went on to say the boys don't always get Canadian cigarettes in their rations either and therefore cigarettes sent them through private projects are always welcome. He assured Chairman LaBarr Belleville boys he had met overseas were always looking forward to receiving cigarettes from home. "They not only taste better and satisfy the boys, but tend to remind us of home," he added.

"When we run out of Canadian cigarettes sent to us we have to take those made in England, which are little or no substitute for a good old Canuck fag," wrote Vic Whitely from the muddy trenches of North Italy in thanks for fags also received.

The list of Belleville boys overseas sent 300 Canadian cigarettes through the Kinsmen Fag Fund this week included the following:

WEDDINGS

MELCHIOR—THOMAS

St. Michael's Church was the scene of a quiet wedding last Monday morning, November 27, at nine o'cock, when Margaret Bernice Thomas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Thomas, became the bride of A. Patrick Melchior, only son of Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Melchior. The ceremony was performed by the Rt. Rev. Monsignor Nicholson.

During the Nuptial Mass, Mrs J. Grant presided at the organ and Mr. E. Brown was soloist.

The bride wore a dress of sheer white wool with small black hat, and was attended by Mrs. P. Richards, who wore acqua wool with black hat.

Mr. P. Richards was groomsman. After a wedding breakfast served at the home of Mr. and Mrs. P. Richards the couple left for a short trip to Montreal and points east.

Put Appearance Before Safety

London, Nov. 30 — (CP)— Many of London's women war workers refuse to wear safety hats at work because they put personal appearance before safety. One result is that two London women are involved in accidents every week.

For the third year running, Sir Wilfrid Garrett, chief inspector of factories, complained in his annual report about the hair styles of women workers and their refusal to wear safety hats or caps.

Factory and welfare chiefs, commenting on the report, agreed that:

"The safest hair style is the full Eton crop. If modern girls don't want to go to this extreme, a good alternative style is to pull the hair tightly across the scalp, with a bun at the back, and the whole head covered by a safety hat."

The woman welfare supervisor at one factory employing several thousand women said that "although we supply safety hats free and exhibit posters showing how serious scalping accidents can be, younger women still refuse to wear them."

"They insist on curls and long hair and just refuse to cover their heads for safety," she said. "Older women wear the hats as requested. In our factory all the head accidents occur to attractive young girls who want to look pretty at work."

Employers maintain that the wearing of hats should be compulsory. They recommend:

1. A jockey cap, covering the head, with a strong net to enclose the hair at the back.
2. A bandeau, with a fine hairnet completely covering the hair and tied in a knot on top.

"Buzz" Beurling Weds

Montreal, Nov. 30.—(CP)—George (Buzz) Beurling of neighboring Verdun was married here on Wednesday to Mrs. Diana Whittall Gardner of Vancouver, in a quiet ceremony attended only by two witnesses.

The ace of the defence of Malta, who has been in civilian clothes for the last week, following his rejection on medical grounds when he attempted to rejoin the R.A.F., was in his air force uniform for the wedding. He wore the ribbons of his decoration—the D.S.O., D.F.C. and Bar, and D.F.M.

The bride wore a dark dress and carried a bouquet of white orchids, sent from Vancouver by her mother. After the ceremony, the couple left for the Laurentians by car.

The ceremony was conducted in St. George's Anglican Church by Archdeacon Gower-Rees. R. O. Johnson, Montreal businessman, gave the bride away and A. W. O'Brien of the Montreal Standard acted as best man.

Thinks Pea Soup One of Reasons For High Birth Rate in Quebec

Toronto.—Pea soup drinking is probably one of the reasons for the high birth rate of French Canadians. This was suggested here yesterday by Albert E. Cliffe, consulting chemist of Montreal, who discussed the latest research into vitamin E, the so-called "sex vitamin".

Mr. Cliffe, who was addressing an Electric Club luncheon, said that "the percentage of sterility among French Canadian women is one of the lowest in the world".

"Vitamin E is not an aphrodisiac", he emphasized. "But it is necessary for healthy reproductive function. Garden peas are the second richest source of vitamin E, and the vitamin E in peas is not injured in the process of cooking pea soup".

Wheat Germ Richest Source.

Wheat germ products of wheat germ oil is the richest source of vitamin E, said Mr. Cliffe. He recommended that his audience sprinkle a little wheat germ on their cereal every morning.

Vitamin E dosages are now being used by the medical profession to assist reproduction and control women's ailments, he said.

He insisted that a well balanced diet was a far superior method of obtaining vitamins than through pills, and advised a cereal and a salad every day. He warned against the "artificial diets" of today.

"We are boiling the vitamins out of our vegetables in our modern methods of cooking. When grandmother cooked, she boiled her vegetables in a big pot, and used the water for soups, but in the modern small kitchens this is not possible, so the water is thrown away", he said.

Vitamin E is being used in animal and poultry raising, he said. Last year Canada sent Britain 360 million eggs, but if vitamin E had not been given the Canadian poultry, "we could not have sent 300 million eggs to Britain".

Mr. Cliffe stressed that vitamins are often useless when one of them is taken individually, and the others are non-existent in the diet, for instance: "Vitamin A does not work correctly without vitamin B, and doesn't work at all without vitamin E."

Mrs. Lily Clarke Injured in Crash

London, Ont., Nov. 30.—(CP)—Edward Clarence Robertson, 46-year-old Goderich, Ont., jeweler, and his wife, Lillie, 49, were injured fatally last night when the automobile in which they were riding collided with a big United States army dump truck in North London.

Robertson was killed instantly and his wife died shortly after in hospital.

Two other persons riding in the Robertson car were seriously injured. They were: Mrs. Verna Binks, 22, of Paisley, Ont., who suffered a fractured pelvis and fractures of both collarbones; and Mrs. Lily Clarke, 26, of Belleville, Ont., who suffered lacerations and contusions. Husbands of the women are members of the armed forces.

Police said the army truck was driven by James M. Green of Wyandotte, Mich.

Police laid a charge of dangerous driving against Green this morning and Crown Attorney C. O. Savage announced an inquest will be held tonight.

The truck, police said, was in a convoy of United States Army vehicles.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Children's Choice

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My husband and I are having a disagreement . . . a friendly one, Mrs. Beeckman . . . about the way our two children are to buy their Christmas presents for their relatives and friends. Our children are seven and nine years old, and I consider them too young to choose the right gifts, particularly for our close relatives, and so I think I should do as I always have done, buy the gifts for them and let them give them. But this year my husband is making an issue of this plan, insisting that "it is good for them" to choose the gifts they are to give, even if the gifts aren't really suitable ones.

Would you like to "step in" and tell us which one you agree with? My husband knows that I am writing to you.

Mother.

Since you have given me such gracious permission-to-enter, I'd love to "step into" this discussion. But perhaps you won't like to have me say that I completely and enthusiastically agree with your husband's point of view.

I see no value, either to the child or to the spirit in which a gift should be given, in a mother's doing her children's Christmas shopping, assigning with a fairly impersonal (at least to the child), "This is the present you are to give to Daddy," or "Grandmother will like to have you give her this." This cheats the child of the thrill of planning his gifts, buying them with his very own thoughtfulness, choosing them with what he likes to think, is proud to think, is his own appreciation of what the recipients would like.

There is, I believe, something about this way of having a child give his gifts through someone else's choice that seems to develop the idea that he may be anticipating gifts in return, rather than giving the gifts for the joy of giving them. On the other hand, there is inevitably something lovely in spirit that gets into a gift . . . a child's gift, as well as a grown-up's . . . that is chosen by the giver himself. Anyone with the right kind of feelings would prefer to receive a simple, inexpensive something (even, as your husband maintains, if it isn't an especially suitable something) chosen by the child himself, rather than an expensive something chosen by an adult "proxy" for the child.

It isn't necessary for you to take the children with you on unplanned and un-charted shopping trips . . . if convenient to you, one, or two, of these look-see's might be fun, but more might tire and baffle them. But you can wisely and cooperatively talk over their lists and choices with them (with the minimum of coaching from you!) and undoubtedly locate these simple things at neighborhood stores.

But do remember that, if you thoughtfully and cooperatively help your children to plan and choose their own Christmas gifts, you can give them a mighty valuable and enduring sense of discrimination and thoughtfulness. Never were truer words, "The gift without the giver is bare."

Christmas Card Signature

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me which is correct? I am going to have our names imprinted on our Christmas cards. My friends tell me that one's husband's name comes first; say, John and Elsie Smith. But I think it should be Elsie and John Smith. Which is the correct form?

Reader.

When cards are imprinted with the names, the customary form is Elsie and John Smith.

Fashion Flashes

THERE'S NOTHING like a turban for combined smartness and comfort. A new design is made of Roman-striped moire ribbon, draped helmet fashion into a huge, upstanding chou, held by a jewelled pin.

Time was when it was silk for best and wool for casual or everyday wear. But now, wool frocks go places. Beige wool jersey, with an all-over scroll design in bronze sequins, makes a smart and warm "best" dress.

The beloved pearl bead necklace is high fashion. At smart events, almost every women is wearing pearls, real, culture or just plain artificial. These vary from dog collars and multi-strand large pearl chokers to earrings, rings and multi-strand bracelets.

Very soon now the first of the new prints will be appearing in dresses and on yard-goods counters. One of the prettiest designs is a Mexican theme with guitars, sombreros and mantilla combs as the main motifs.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

His Friends Say It Was All His Wife's Fault

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Seven months ago I met and fell in love with a man my age. I'm single but Jack is married and has two small children. He is divorced and his friends tell me it was all his wife's fault. She is now begging him to take her back. But Jack says he never intends to go back to her.

I love him and we are planning to marry after the war if we still care for each other. Do you think we would be happy under these circumstances, or would our marriage be a mistake?

Perplexed.

In a case like this, don't you think it would be well to find out a little more about the cause of the divorce? Husbands and wives always have their partisans when a marriage is broken. If you're not planning to marry until after the war, you'll have plenty of time to find out why Jack's first marriage went on the rocks. And there's always the question of making provision for children of a previous marriage.

Mother Thinks a Shorter Groom Would Spoil Wedding Picture

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm in love with a young man of my faith. We are the same age, but my mother doesn't like him because he is of a different nationality. He's in love with me too. Mother says he's too short for me and that it would spoil the looks of the wedding. I'm very tall for a girl, and he's only a few inches shorter. Please tell me what to do. I would like my mother to approve of my future husband before we are married.

Dot A.

Of the many reasons advanced for turning down a prospective son-in-law, this is the first time I've ever heard of disparity of inches brought forward as a hindrance. No sensible married couple would expect to go through life making an attractive wedding picture. This is a work-a-day world.

Why not do as Consuelo Vanderbilt did at her first marriage? She wore flat heeled shoes and the Duke of Marlborough had a few rounds added to his heels. As for the man of your choice being of a different nationality, it depends on the man rather than the country from which his ancestors came, whether the marriage will turn out well or not.

Both Are Twenty-Six—Shall They Marry or Wait 'Till After the War?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm engaged to a soldier. We're both 26, and have gone together since high school days, although we've broken up off and on. Since he's been in the service we've realized we want each other for keeps.

He's coming home on furlough soon, and I want to be married. But he thinks we should wait until after the war, as he doesn't want to leave me with responsibilities if anything should happen to him. I don't believe in marrying when very young, but at our age we shouldn't wait until after the war. Which one of us is right?

A. R.

If you were 18, the more sensible course would be to advise you to wait—but who is ever sensible in love? You've known each other since high school days, have been in love, engaged, broken up, and now it's taken the war to make you realize how much you love each other.

Why not marry as you feel capable of assuming the responsibilities "if anything should happen to him?" (which Heaven grant may not happen.) You certainly have my blessing in going to the altar.

MAN WHO SMASHED HUNS AT BOULOGNE TIRELESS OFFICER

Brig. J. M. Rockingham Made Dash from England to Get Into Some of the Heaviest Fighting in France

With 1st Canadian Army in France, Nov. 30 —(CP)— If ever there was an unhappy man on D-Day it was a giant of a soldier known now in Canada's apparently tireless 3rd Division as "Rocky." The Second Front had come and Rocky wasn't there. He was "sweating it out" at Staff College in England.

Today he is Brig. John M. Rockingham, D.S.O., of Victoria, B.C., 32, six foot three and as tireless as the division of which he is part. But then he was Col. Rockingham, late officer commanding Royal Hamilton Light Infantry.

He had trained and raised the R. H. L. I. after their reorganization following the Dieppe raid of 1942 and then, as he puts it, "they decided I needed an education so they sent me to Staff College."

Not long after D-Day his spirits perked up a bit. Earmarked for appointment to Italy, he was on 48 hours' embarkation leave in Yorkshire when headquarters ordered him to proceed to France the following day.

By noon next day he was as close to the war as anyone could wish to be—in what he described as "the deepest slit-trench in Normandy" near Louvigny Wood under constant and heavy mortar fire.

Anybody who was there will confirm that Louvigny Wood was stiff going. The brigadier's manner of saying it is that he and his men were "thoroughly mortared."

His job at this time was his old one—Officer Commanding R. H. L. I., the unit having suffered casualties, among them the O.C. The outfit hung around Louvigny for a few days and then were pulled out to get ready for the now famous breakthrough at Caen.

Under Heavy Fire.

As it turned out the R. H. L. I. were nine days and nights under constant and terrible fire before being relieved and Rocky says, "the boys did a magnificent job." Casualties were heavy and they ran into a lot of tanks and S. S. troops. "Yes," says Rockingham, "a bloody good show!"

Then came the push to Falaise and the unit was only one day on the way when Rockingham got a call to Corps Headquarters and learned he now was a brigadier and had better hot foot it to the officers' shop to re-equip and get back to the job.

Late September found him battering at the Channel ports of France. His assignment being the taking of Boulogne which he did in very handy fashion, finally scrambling in his armored scout car up the steep sides of Le Portel Hill, overlooking Boulogne, to account personally and with a good deal of enjoyment, the surrender of the German garrison commander, Lieut.-Gen. Ferdinand Heim.

The mysteries of censorship being what they are, Rockingham's name was released after the Boulogne cleanup as the man who directed the job and nobody knows why this should have occurred. But it did, putting Rockingham in the position of being the only active Canadian brigadier who has been named. It seems to have pleased the men he leads as being a tribute to the good show they put up.

He went on from there. And his next jobs were even tougher for this old, young man, the "Saturday Night" soldier who in 1939 was a second lieutenant with the Canadian Scottish, whose balmoral and tartan he wears and who not long afterwards took down one pip when he was a captain to come overseas as a lieutenant.

He was born in Australia, but he points to his enlistment in the old N.P.A.M. in 1934, to his home in Victoria and his job there, to his Canadian wife and his two Canadian children and asks, "out of that—don't you make it pretty much Canadian?"

Need More Than Feminine Charm

London, Nov. 30—(CP)—Shapely legs and feminine charm cut little ice with the average services audiences unless the "glamor girls" can also act, according to Lieut. Richard Gilbert who commands the entertainment unit of the 56th (London) Division.

"Glamor girls are not essential in troops' stage-shows," said Gilbert. "Experience has proved that even a pretty girl has to act, sing or dance effectively to gain the full appreciation of the average critical audience. Troops want good music and singing, with plenty of color. They also enjoy good tap and other dancing."

Gilbert's latest revue, incidentally, has an all-male cast of 16 soldiers.

NORWEGIANS HELPED TO DEFEND BRITAIN

London, Nov. 30 —(CP)— Disbanding of Britain's Home Guard on Nov. 5 saw the end of one Norwegian contribution to the defence of Britain. More than three years ago Norwegians stationed in an English country district formed a Home Guard section, many of the members being men from Norway's own civilian forces which fled after the German invasion in 1940.

"We are the only foreign Home Guard section in Britain and we regard it as a great privilege," said the Norwegian commander.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was doing my homework and feeling against it, and pop was trying to read his paper without going to sleep at the same time on account of having eaten 3 helpings of liver and onions for supper, and ma said, Now William if you allow yourself to drop off you know very well it will cut into your good night's sleep so you'll toss and turn after you really get to bed, and everybody's night's rest will be disturbed, including mine, so please for land sakes dont slide into one of your long naps.

I wasn't going to, pop said, I was going to slide into one of my short ones, he said, and ma said, Now William I know just what you need. I suggest that we take a nice old fashion walk the way we used to at night just for exercise and the fun of it, dont you remember? That's the very thing to really refresh you, and then you'll really sleep as nature intended, she said.

By gollies that's the sanest advice I've heard since the doctor told me I didn't need to give up smoking, pop said. There's nothing so relaxing as a good brisk walk, unless maybe it's a good leisurely swim, and we dont happen to be living on a canal. Put on your low heel shoes, he said, and ma said, I know just where we'll walk to and make it more interesting. We'll walk all the way to the Narcissus. I hear there's a very good picture there, and after the show we'l be just rested enough for the walk home again, or if we feel we've had enough we can take the bus home, she said.

It's a woman's world, pop said. I suggest that we take the bus to the Narcissus and if I dont like the picture I can lide into one of my long naps and then counteract it by walking home.

Which they did, probably taking the bus both ways.

DEMONSTRATORS SMASH WINDOWS IN SOME OFFICES

At French-Language Newspaper, Le Canada, Marchers Attack Messenger Boy

Montreal, Nov. 30 —(CP)— After hearing Andre Laurendeau, Quebec Leader of the Bloc Populaire, tell an anti-conscription meeting in an east-end market hall that a majority had "no moral right" to "bind French-Canadians to a conscription measure," a group of young men, estimated at more than 1,000, last night paraded through the downtown financial section of the city, smashing windows in a number of offices.

Conscription had been forced on the country by "Toronto's 200 group, imperialists and financiers, who control the English-speaking press and, unfortunately, part of our French-speaking press," Mr. Laurendeau said.

When the meeting closed, the youths formed into a parade and marched through the main streets of the city to the financial section, chanting "a bas la conscription." (down with conscription).

At the office of the French-language newspaper, le Canada, the marchers broke all windows on the ground floor and Bernard Fournier, 16-year-old messenger for the paper, was attacked by some of the youths before he escaped into the building.

From le Canada, the parade split into two groups, one marching to the National Selective Service where several windows were broken. The other headed toward the Montreal Gazette building and smashed open a newspaper kiosk on the way, spilling the contents over the street.

Marchers Turned Back.

Before the party reached the Gazette, squads of police arrived and turned back the marchers. The youths retreated eastward for several blocks and broke a number of windows in stores near Bleury and Craig Streets. Police dispersed the crowd and later said they had arrested a 15-year-old boy.

In his speech, Mr. Laurendeau referred to the resignation last week of Hon. C. G. Power, minister of National Defence for air, and said it was "sad" that the only Quebec member of the Federal Cabinet who had resigned so far was "an Irishman."

(Mr. Power resigned from the Federal Cabinet in protest over the order-in-council which provides for 16,000 N. R. M. A. personnel to be sent overseas. He announced later he was "through with politics" and would not seek re-election to his Quebec south seat.)

"We have here, evidence that one is never so much betrayed as by one's own people and that there always will be Judases," Mr. Laurendeau said. "We have witnessed the betrayal of Quebec. We have seen Mr. King's surrender, without dignity or honor."

French Canadians had agreed to participate in the war on condition that conscription for overseas be not imposed. Now that conscription was in force "Quebec feels that she has been betrayed."

PICTON

Tribute Paid To H. & P. E. Regt. Now Overseas

Picton, Nov. 30.—Tribute to Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment was paid in an address by Lt.-Col. A. V. Yates, M.C., V.D., at a dinner given for "C" Company, H.P.E.R. (R.F.) at Picton armouries, Tuesday night. The regiment was formed in 1920, composed of the 16th Prince Edward and the 49th Hastings. When war was declared in 1939, the unit was ready and those who had laboured for years were rewarded when it was chosen part of the First Division. The regiment has won undying fame for the two counties as a result of their work in Sicily and Italy, he said. The Reserve battalion had served as an important source of reinforcements of partly trained men. On the cap badge is the word 'Paratus', meaning 'Prepared' and the regiment had always lived up to that motto, he said.

Capt. Ray Young proposed the toast to the King and S.M. Sam Gentile that to the Regiment.

Members of the Company enjoyed a venison dinner, the meat course being provided by Major W. C. Hicks and Capt. R. Young.

All Should Make Will.

Not only should everyone make a will but they should check the provisions of same at least every three or five years, to keep up with possible changes in taxation, succession duties and family relations, stated C. P. Jerry, an official of a Toronto trust company, in an address at the Rotary Club here. It is mark of good citizenship to be sure that your temporal affairs are in order, so that dependents may receive the maximum from the lifetime efforts of the person making the will.

Rev. W. G. H. Swayne stated the boys' club was flourishing and several hobbies are being encouraged. Plans for the December Jamboree were discussed.

Treasurer John Arnaud stated that 160 thousand more cigarettes were enroute overseas to Prince Edward County servicemen and women. He expressed thanks of the club to Philip Dodds who had been responsible for compiling a mailing list. Money was raised by sale of salvage.

Montreal Papers In North Africa

R.A.F. Transport Planes Provide Unique Service for French Morocco

By HAROLD FREEMAN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Rabat-Sale, French Morocco —(CP)— The first newspapers received each day in these twin cities on the Atlantic coast of North Africa are French language dailies of Montreal.

The papers usually reach here just one day after they are published in Montreal. They are brought across the ocean by pilots of the R. A. F. transport command, and they go over big in news-hungry Rabat.

It started quite casually, when occasionally an incoming pilot would have a Montreal paper with him when he landed. So much interest was shown that the pilots began making a habit of bringing three or four papers with them each trip. Residents of Rabat and Sale look for them now, and the newspapers are filed at Rabat libraries.

The white stone buildings of the twin cities overlook a modern airport which has become practically next door to Montreal, the way Transport Command pilots look at distances. The two centres, one on each side of a narrow, winding river, are snuggled up so closely to the Atlantic coast line that the blazing white of the buildings are practically the first thing in Africa to be spotted by trans-Atlantic planes.

A first-class airport, one of the Staging Post links with which the R. A. F. has blanketed the middle east, greets incoming pilots who put down in Africa frequently after non-stop flights from Montreal. Every day of the week, Liberators from Canada stop here en route to the Middle or Far East.

Some times the trans-Atlantic planes break their journey at the Azores, but often they fly the 3,700 miles from Montreal to Rabat non-stop—the longest non-stop hop in the world made by planes without extra gasoline tanks.

Kin Will Continue Jack Miner's Work

Kingsville, Ont., Nov. 30 —(CP) — The protection and care of migratory birds that made the Jack Miner bird sanctuary here known throughout North America is being carried on by the widow and three sons of the late Canadian naturalist and there is no intention of letting it lapse.

Manly Miner said his mother and two brothers, Ted and Jasper, are continuing the work that engaged their father until his death Nov. 3 at the age of 79. The practice of catching and banding the migratory ducks and geese which stop to rest at the Miner sanctuary was credited with doing much to help naturalists trace the migratory courses of the birds.

Mr. Miners' work of inscribing each bird leg and with excerpts from scripture verses is also being continued.

Manly Miner estimated that since his father banded his first duck in 1909, some 50,000 have been handled and that more than 35,000 Canada geese have been banded since 1915 when Miner decided to check up on migratory habits of these birds.

The work is to be carried on through the Jack Miner Migratory Bird Foundation, a philanthropic organization founded in 1932. The Miner Bird sanctuary was deeded to the Foundation several years ago which means that it can never be sold or mortgaged, thus assuring that the work of Canada's great naturalist will be continued.

Luxemburg Bridge Saved by Patriots

By MARGARET [illegible]
Canadian Press War Correspondent

Luxemburg, Nov. 30 —(CP)— Luxemburg had an underground resistance movement against its German conquerors much as France, Belgium and Holland had, but its size and [illegible] of its work is almost impossible to find out.

Some day 95 per cent of the population engaged in some sort of resistance, others say only a handful did. Since what resistance there was was divided among rival groups, it's hard to get a picture of the whole scene.

Some claim the world famous Bridge of Death, longest stone span in the world which spans the lovely valley of the Petrusse in the middle of the city of Luxemburg and from which many Jews flung themselves when the Germans occupied the country, was saved only because resistance workers fought off the Germans. Some 52 other bridges throughout the duchy were destroyed by the retreating Germans.

Many men and women who worked in German-controlled factories will tell you they did so so they could carry on sabotage against the machines of war they were making. Others who wore swastikas, shouted "Heil Hitler" and worked in Nazi headquarters warned people who were about to be arrested by the Gestapo so they could escape.

Largest of the groups seems to have been the Luxemburg Patriotic League whose members were all young people. Since the liberation it has been absorbed into "Union" federation of all resistance groups.

When Luxemburg boys were conscripted into the German army, those who came home under the pretence of leave were helped escape into the country's heavily wooded mountains by resistance workers who provided them with food and passports to cross the border.

Others who escaped the army formed themselves into small bands of partisans who waged guerilla warfare against the Germans.

When an occasional Allied plane was forced down over Luxemburg, resistance workers helped crew members to escape into France and Belgium.

Deserted Children Problem in Chicago

Sometimes the mothers are mentally retarded but more often it is a bad mother made worse when the husband left for war, Dr. David [illegible]man, municipal court psychiatrist, reports.

Eskimos Praised by U.S. Chaplain

Fairbanks, Alaska, Nov. 30—(CP) —After nearly three years amongst the Eskimos in Canada's Northwest Territories, Rev. Robert J. Biasiolli, 30-year-old Roman Catholic priest, is convinced that "morally, the Eskimo is the best in the world."

The tall thin priest, member of the Oblate Order, believes that the full-blooded Eskimo fundamentally is honest, truthful and law-abiding and, when converted, practises his religion faithfully. He is degraded to a great extent, however, by association with the white man outside.

"The Eskimo doesn't know what a lie is," Father Biasiolli says. "He would never take anything that didn't belong to him. He is obedient and respects the orders of the tribe leader, the eldest person, to the last letter."

Native of San Antonia, Texas, Father Biasiolli was ordained in 1938 and, given a choice of going to the Philippines or the Northwest Territories, chose to live among the Eskimos. He now is a chaplain, with rank of captain, serving out-of-the-way bases of the Alaskan Division, United States army air forces.

After his choice for his life's work was made, the young priest flew up to Chesterfield Inlet, on the west coast of Hudson Bay, in an old German Junkers plane.

From Chesterfield Inlet he travelled north by dog team to Repulse Bay and then on to Pelly Bay. His only contact with the outside world was three years later when he made a 1,300-mile trip by dog team to Churchill, Man. He started in February and arrived in May.

It was then also he discovered his country had been at war nearly six months. He joined the services two months later.

He learned the Eskimo language in 1 1-2 years and today can speak it fluently. He mushed behind his dog teams to the various villages and in some of his pilgrimages couldn't see the lead dogs due to terrific winds which swirled the lightly-packed snow "at a lightning rate of speed."

"I've seen Eskimos leave their igloos and, although only 10 yards distant fail to find their way back. They build an igloo on the spot and sometimes are "marooned" two or three days."

One characteristic the young priest couldn't solve was the Eskimo's sense of humor. "They are always laughing and they think it's a huge joke when a fellow Eskimo falls on his head or loses his trap lines. A misfortune to them is funny."

Father Biasiolli tipped the scales at 160 pounds when he left Texas. He gained 40 pounds but lost that and another 20 when he split his hand open while on the trail. He stitched the gash himself but infection set in and his weight declined rapidly.

R.C.A.F. Choral Group Now Eighty Strong

Ottawa, Nov. 30 —(CP)— What started as a scratch group of Royal Canadian Air Force singers for a church service in September now is the 80-strong "A. F. H. Q. Choral Group" practising for their first formal concert.

The singers, who hail from all parts of Canada and work at Air Force Headquarters, are under the direction of Sqdn.-Ldr. G. J. Mitchell of Waterloo, Que.

The group's first concert of all-Christmas music will be given here shortly before Christmas.

Sqdn.-Ldr. Mitchell, who maintains that his job in the air force is navigation, not music, is a past president of McGill University Glee Club and has organized and led choirs and dance orchestras at several of the stations to which he has been posted.

He started his musical career on the organ of Waterloo United Church of which his father, Rev. E. D. Mitchell, is minister.

Dunlop Accuses Rasputin Of Taking A Powder As Villains' Team Vanquished

Watson and Collins Please Large Wrestling Crowd by Winning; Dunlop Wants Katan as Partner

"That low down hairy Russian doublecrossed me. He wouldn't fight, as a mater of fact I wouldn't be surprised if he was in cahoots with Collins and Watson. I want a return bout, but instead of that crazy Russian give me John Katan. At least I can trust "Honest John", screamed Al (Bunny) Dunlop after he and Ivan Rasputin lost a tag team wrestling bout to "Irish Tom" Collins and "Whipper Billie" Watson before over 2,100 excited fans at the Hume Arena last night.

As far as the battle royal went it not only terminated with Watson and Collins giving the villainous pair of Rasputin and Dunlop a little of their own rough-house medicine, but the ring ruffians finished matters by fighting between themselves.

For unadulterated fun the principal match was a wow and anytime Promoter Tunney attempts another team show, business should be on the up-beat. Actually it was advertised as a tag team match, but ended up with a "who fights who" atmosphere as all four contestants were inside the squared circle making matters much too interesting for Referee Bert Maxwell, who was undoubtedly the busiest man in the Market St. sport palace last night.

Prolific Plan

Early in the match Rasputin and Dunlop devised a prolific plan whereby one would hawl his ring adversary into his own corner where either the Mad Russian or "Bunny" would pell mell the helpless victim from outside the ring depending upon the circumstances. When Dunlop wasn't trussing Watson up from behind so Rasputin could shellack him a la Joe Louis, then the picture would be reversed despite all of the frantic efforts of Referee Maxwell and the verbal protests of the patrons. However, the favored team of Watson and Collins weren't exactly missing the crafty ring boat and got in some ideas of belligerency on their own account and it paid off in winning dividends. "The Whipper" held Rasputin while Collins dove head-first through the ropes to flatten the Russian with a straight running dive and press.

In the second round Dunlop and Rasputin argued as to who should take the punishment that by now was being meted out by Collins and Watson to a fare-thee-well. However, the villains' team finally got together with Rasputin strangling Watson from outside the ring leaving Collins' partner an easy victim for a back-breaker and press despite the angry protests of Collins.

Tries Tack Trick

All even Rasputin tried his old "tack trick", which nearly caught the innocent Collins off guard, but Watson was "hep" to the idea and just wasn't having any of that malarkey. With all four principals milling around the ring Watson trussed Dunlop up into the strands of upper ropes following which Collins and he picked Rasputin up bodily and using him for a battering ram proceeded to polish off Dunlop. This system backfired and "Ivan the Great" backed Watson into Dunlop's corner from where "Bunny" measured "The Whip" with a haymaking right, that Watson ducked and it caught Rasputin on the button for a K.O. and a loss for the villains' team.

After losing Dunlop accused Rasputin of giving him the business, leaving him in the lurch, forgetting that he himself had K.O.'d the hairy Russian, which left everyone happy, except possibly the losers.

Jim Burke, drop-kicked himself out of business in the semi-final when he lost to Bill Stack by being too energetic and anxious. In the opener Mickey Forbes, son of Referee Jackie Forbes, wrestled a draw with Jack Sibthorpe in a fast clean bout that saw plenty of acrobatics.

CANADIENS CAN INCREASE LEAD AT TOP OF LOOP

Habitants Meet Rangers While Boston Bruins Take on Hawks

The symmetrical pattern of the National Hockey League race, woven by a quarter-season's play, will be unaltered by tonight's two games regardless of their outcome.

The league-leading Montreal Canadiens will be at home to New York Rangers, tied for fifth with Chicago, whose Black Hawks entertain the fourth-place Boston Bruins.

The pattern is simple, consisting of two well-defined halves of three teams each. That basic design has acquired a look of permanence, and indications are that there won't be anything more than local disturbances in the two sections between now and next March.

Prospects are good for an exciting championship battle among Canadiens, Toronto Maple Leafs and Detroit Red Wings, while in the subsection Rangers and Hawks are likely to raise strong disputes to Boston's claim on the last playoff spot. But it becomes increasingly doubtful that any club will jump the fence, currently the seven-point barrier between Detroit and Boston, into the "other league."

Canadiens' objective tonight will be to expand their one-point margin over the Maple Leafs, who are idle until Saturday. A doubtful Habitant starter will be goalie Bill Durnan, who injured an elbow in last Saturday's game at Toronto. Paul Bibeault will be on call.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press.)

Secretary Dan Ferris of the Amateur Union of the United States announced at New York last night that, subject to transportation arrangements and the approval of the International Federation, Gunder Haegg and Hakon Lidman, two Swedish stars, would arrive late in December to compete in indoor track meets over a period of three weeks. Haegg, who holds the 1,500-metre and two-mile world's records, barnstormed in the U.S. in 1943 in aid of war charities. Lidman is the outstanding hurdler of Europe and is credited with doing the 110-metre high hurdles in 14 seconds.

Ludger Tremblay, starry forward of the Quebec Aces, Allan Cup defenders, has been signed by Providence Reds of the American Hockey League, it was stated at Quebec last night. The Aces have lost a goodly portion of last year's championship lineup already.

After a seven-bout exhibition tour in the States, Sgt. Joe Louis, world's heavyweight titleholder, reported for duty yesterday at Camp Sanks, N.Y., where he will assist in the physical-training program.

An offer of $200,000 for the Aga Khan's famous stallion, Stardust, now at a stud farm in Ireland, has been received from California, it was reported in London, Eng., yesterday. The Aga Khan is in Switzerland and it was not known if the offer had been accepted.

Wally Shanowski, star defenceman with Toronto Maple Leafs of the National Hockey League before joining the R.C.A.F., will practice with his former team today and Friday when the squad prepares for their game against New York Rangers at Toronto Saturday night. Stanowski has been discharged from the air force on medical grounds and probably will rejoin the Leafs if he is not subject to army call.

Jack Stewart, former defence star of Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League, was discharged from the R.C.A.F. at Winnipeg yesterday under the air force's new demobilization plans. It is understood he will return to his farm at Pilot Mound, Man., though it was said there is a possibility he may rejoin his old club.

A Miami syndicate headed by James Donn, florist, rushed $300,000 preparations for the renovation of the long-idle Spruce Park track, 15 miles away, and announced last night the stables were filled with thoroughbreds for the opening Friday of a 20-day meeting with a $1,000-purse minimum.

John Roxborough, former manager of Joe Louis, and Everett Watson, a prize-fight promoter, both of Detroit, yesterday started serving a prison sentence of 2 1-2 to five years for conspiracy in connection with a numbers racket. They were convicted three years ago and their appeals had recently been dismissed.

BUFFALO BISONS formt0anu
(By The Canadian Press.)

Buffalo Bisons last night increased to three points their lead over the second-place Hershey Bears in the American Hockey League eastern division by defeating Providence Reds 4-3 at Buffalo. In the western division third-place Cleveland Barons won 7-3 from Pittsburgh Hornets, tied with Indianapolis Capitals for first place.

Providence took a three-goal lead early in the game at Buffalo on scores by Jacques Lavoie, George Bellemare and Paul Courteau. Kenny Kilrea began the scoring for Buffalo late in the second period. Tallies by Len Alderson and Doug Lewis in the third evened the score and a goal by George Pargeter in the last minute of play gave Bisons the victory.

Barons were ahead all the way in the game at Pittsburgh from Ed (Whitey) Prokop's first score midway in the first session. Lloyd Klein was outstanding for Hornets, accounting for two of their three tallies.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By SYD THOMAS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Nov. 30 —(CP)— It won't come to pass, but developments on the Toronto soccer front make one wonder what would happen if the Union dispute gets any hotter. There was a little matter of a threatened referee strike last summer, and now the Referees' Union is asking a closed shop for the officials. Probably if some scab labor gets out on the field to do the officiating, the Union refs will have to parade up and down the sidelines with large placards reading: "Unfair to organized bottle-duckers." The Union has made a start on tightening things up by asking the Toronto and District Senior Soccer League to bar two referees who didn't take out their Union cards last year.

Get Rich Scheme?

Speaking of referees, Myrtle (Montreal Star) Cook doesn't think too kindly of the basketball referees in Montreal who demand a pay boost from $2.50 a game to $3.50. Myrtle says the girls' leagues have to run raffles to collect enough money for the referees and often take up a collection among the players to pay off the officials.

If basketball in Montreal was a paying proposition and the referees depended on their fees for a living, it would be different, the Star columnist said, adding: "$2.50 for 40 minutes actual toil isn't hay—it's Victory Bond fodder."

Incidentally.

Just to start up another of these "best player" disputes, we pass on Lew Hayman's opinion that former Ottawa star Tony Golab was the keenest thing Canadian football produced in recent years. The former Toronto Argo coach calls Golab because of his hustle and ability to play every minute as though a championship was in the offing . . . Coach Glen Brown of Montreal Navy came up with a 22-carat suggestion with his idea of an all-navy football game for New Year's Day, like the classics put on by our cousins to the south. He suggested Paris, France, as the scene of operations, but the idea would go over in a big way anywhere—weather permitting . . . Fans forget so quickly. Norm Smith, who drew his share of home crowd applause when he played with Detroit Red Wings a few years ago, was mistaken for an usher in that same Detroit stadium the other night. . . .

Venereal Disease

A CHALLENGE TO LEADERSHIP

THE eradication of V.D. is a challenge to leadership.

Those who, yesterday, accepted that challenge left legacies of knowledge, hope and courage.

Through their keen, searching eyes the sinister, squirming syphilis germ was first exposed. From their countless experiments came "606" . . . and the blood test. From determined lips came words which helped tear away the shroud of prudery.

Today, others have taken up the challenge. Science has made priceless discoveries which rob Venereal Disease of much of its terror. Health Departments are waging aggressive war on syphilis and gonorrhœa. Physicians and nurses are alert.

Leadership is strong on the HEALTH Sector. It must be equally strong on the other three . . . WELFARE . . . LEGAL . . . MORAL.

To welfare leaders, squalor, neglect and insecurity are challenges to be met . . . to be overcome, if the roots of Venereal Disease are to be destroyed.

On the legal sector, aggressive leadership by law enforcement officials, the legal profession and civic authorities can turn the tide of battle against a vicious enemy of mankind. By permanently closing houses of prostitution and cleaning up undesirable places which facilitate the meeting of healthy and infected young people, Venereal Disease will be sharply reduced.

The continuing threat of Venereal Disease is a tremendous challenge to church and home. The moral sector can reduce V.D. . . . IF the moral fibre of the nation is strengthened . . . IF individual character is fortified . . . IF the sanctity of marriage is upheld . . , IF, above all, the moral wisdom of the ages is applied in the practical, daily issues of personal, community and national life in Canada.

Whether your leadership is in a family group, a club or a community, you have an opportunity to serve. Learn the facts about Venereal Disease and its control. Inform others. See that conditions in your community are the kind that will give your son and daughter, and your neighbour's, the chance to grow up in an atmosphere of decency, wholesomeness and good health.

THIS IS YOUR CHALLENGE!

CASUAL COMMENT

by K.J.C.

With the municipal elections coming up next Monday we give you some pointed "cannots" before you cast your ballot.

You Cannot— —

You cannot bring about prosperity by discouraging thrift.
You cannot strengthen the weak by weakening the strong.
You cannot help small men by tearing down big men.
You cannot help the poor by destroying the rich.
You cannot lift the wage-earner by pulling down the wage-payer.
You cannot keep out of trouble by spending more than you earn.
You cannot further the brotherhood of man by inciting class hatreds.
You cannot establish sound security on borrowed money.
You cannot build character and courage by taking away man's initiative and independence.
You cannot help men permanently by doing for them what they can do for themselves.

Did You Know.

Earl Whitehill, former Detroit pitcher, is being considered by Manager Lou Boudreau as candidate for the post of coach of the Cleveland Indians to fill the vacancy left when Del Baker quit . . . Baker, incidentally, went to a similar position with the Boston Red Sox . . . Whitehill is a brother of Pitcher Eddie Whitehill who pitched for the Peterboro' senior ball club ten or 12 years back . . . Sends Ball Equipment.

The United States and Canadian armed forces have received 29,461 dozen balls, 88,383, bats, 59,922 rule books and 21,160 complete catching outfits, consisting of gloves, protectors, shin guards and masks, in three years from the Baseball Equipment Fund, it is reported by President Ford Frick of the National League and Clark Griffith, president of the Senators, who make up the committee. Most of the receipts for the fund are derived from the annual All-Star game, last season's contest at Pittsburgh adding approximately $70,000.

The fund also has packed 12,387 dozens of balls returned by the fans to the field and contributed $750 to a Canadian fund.

Total receipts for the three years were $427,602.19, and a balance of $1,984.59 remains. In addition to the $70,000 from the Pittsburgh All-Star game, other 1944 receipts were $2,500 each from the National and American leagues; $1,622.33 from the Southern Association.

Remember When.

Detroit's Joe Louis knocked out Charlie Massera in three rounds at Chicago ten years ago tonight in his eleventh professional fight. The Brown Bomber — who later became the world's heavyweight boxing champion — collected $1,100 for the nine minutes it took him to polish off Massera. Ten months later he collected $217,337. for flattening Max Baer in four rounds. Today he's a sergeant in the United States Army.

'Red' Garrett Has Been Killed In Navy Action

Toronto, Nov. 30 — (CP) — Dudley (Red) Garrett, former professional hockey player and property of Toronto Maple Leafs of the National Hockey League, has been killed in action with the Royal Canadian Navy, his father, Dudley Garrett, said last night.

Young Garrett played with Providence Reds of the American Hockey League and New York Rangers of the N.H.L. in the 1942-43 season, after figuring in the deal that brought Babe Pratt to the Maple Leafs.

Last season he performed with Toronto Navy of the Ontario Hockey Association before service teams dropped from the league.

Wartime Record In Blood-Stock Prices Likely

London, Nov. 30 — (CP-Reuter)— A wartime record in bloodstock prices is likely to be reached at the five-day December sales beginning at Newmarket next Monday, "Hotspur" racing correspondent of the Daily Telegraph said today.

The three major sales this year have reached the total of 530,756 guineas, (approximately $2,500,000). Next week's aggregate may be in the region of 400,000 guineas, bringing the year's total to £1,000,000. The record was £1,142,000 in 1928.

The recovery in bloodstock values since the early war days is shown by the increase in the annual total from 220,300 guineas in 1941 to 419,736 in 1942 and 533,734 in 1943.

GOLFER PLAYS HOCKEY

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 345
By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

When Horse Mule gets freakish hands, we always have a fit. Instead of what he understands, he does the opposite. At such a time, alas, alas, we cannot use a looking glass.

Keep looking at this hand:

♠ Q 3
♥ A K Q J 10 8 6 2
♦ A
♣ A 8

A player opened this hand with three hearts. Such a bid shows a maximum of eight tricks with a long-strong suit and an outside sure trick.

The long-strong suit is there. The sure outside trick is there. But the hand contains more than eight tricks. Consequently, three hearts is not the correct opening bid.

In answer to a three bid, partner may pass with no tricks; raise to four in that suit with one trick or more; invite a slam with two sure tricks.

With ten tricks, this hand is unwilling to stop short of game even if partner has no trick. With enough to make a game all alone, this hand is not interested in ordinary trick help.

Nor is this hand dependent on the help of two sure tricks to make a slam. It has a good chance to make a slam if partner has only one sure trick.

What is the opening bid that learns at once if partner has one sure trick? An opening of two in a suit. Therefore, the correct opening with this hand is two hearts; not three hearts.

Must you stop and figure out all that before an opening? With some systems, you do. Because they have so many exceptions, you must apply the principle of preparedness or anticipation.

Not so with Horse Sense, which takes into consideration all the angles. Automatically, it anticipates what is needed from partner.

Take care of the start and the end can be smart.

Big Will Thorne Looks To Future at Eighty-Seven

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Nov. 30 —(CP)— Big Will Thorne, amiable and aged, hopes to live to be Britain's first centenarian member of parliament.

"There are only 13 years to go and no reason why I shouldn't make it," said he as he celebrated his 87th birthday. Then he added with a touch of sly humor: "I'm very healthy, and very careful about crossing the road."

Will Thorne, who takes Turkish baths to keep his weight below 225 pounds, has been Labor M.P. for the Plaistow division of London's West Ham for 38 successive years. There is talk of younger blood in the Commons at the next parliament, but if Labor will have him Thorne will still be there.

"I shall stand again if they want me," he said. "If the Tories like to come along with a rival all well and good. I like a good scrap and the majority will be enormous—for the Labor party."

Thorne is a "character" of the Commons. He carries a football referee's whistle which he sometimes blows to call noisy members to order and his lively interjections at question time have become almost a part of parliamentary procedure.

He rose from humble surroundings and in his political fights for the working class has never forgotten his own early days. He began work at the age of six in a Birmingham rope factory, earning the equivalent of 50 cents a week.

"My father had been killed and as I was the eldest of four children I had to help support the family," he told a reporter on his birthday. "So I never went to school.

"Instead, every Wednesday, I went to the relief officer and got four loaves of bread and four shillings—one for each of us. There was not so much talk of social security in those days."

Aided Gas Workers

Typical of his labor experiences was the help he gave to gas workers in forming a union in 1889. He gathered 800 workers together on a piece of waste land in a London suburb, collecting pennies in a bucket, and formed a trade union that within six months reduced working hours from 12 to eight a day. Thorne was secretary of that union for 54 years.

Here are some birthday observations of this popular, hearty Labor member:

End of the war: "I lost a small bet on this because I thought it would end Sept. 28. It will still end before the end of the year—I hope."

Treatment of Germany: "Maybe we shall have a sort of government official—answerable to the cabinet—installed in every district of Germany to watch over things. Yes it will take a lot of officials. But then, we have a lot of officials, haven't we?"

Hitler: "He won't be taken alive. No years of internment or exile for him. Probably commit suicide. Shooting or poisoning."

House of Commons: "We're better behaved these days. More gentlemanly. Not like the old days when you could expect a good bust-up, a bit of throwing out and plenty of life and vigor. Maybe we have been too busy concentrating on winning the war."

Sport Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
Associated Press Sport Writer

New York, Nov. 30 — (AP)—Ever hear of people who wanted to give away money? . . . That's getting to be a hot subject in minor league baseball and one which will be argued over again at next week's Buffalo convention . . . Last year the Southern Association asked that class A-1 leagues be allowed the privilege of paying bonuses to players other than first-year men . . . leagues of lower classification asked to be declared in and the whole business was voted down . . . This year the Southern is trying a new tack by asking the right to pay bonuses for signing players coming out of the Armed Forces and the Atlanta club proposes giving the player his choice between a cash bonus and 10 per cent of the price when he is sold into a higher class . . . Looks as if they might be worried about the player shortage — only the same league wants to raise player limits right down the line so that clubs can absorb returning servicemen without hardship.

Tension in B.C. Camps Seems To Be Eased

By The Canadian Press

Tension in British Columbia Army camps at which home defence troops have demonstrated against the government's overseas conscription policy appeared eased today with the report from Pacific Command officials that the men were carrying out their regular duties and training at Vernon, Prince George, Chilliwack, Nanaimo and Courtenay.

Pacific Command reported last night that a troop train carrying an English-speaking home defence regiment from Saskatchewan on a routine move to another station in British Columbia had left the village of Terrace, 500 miles north of Vancouver, without incident. The Saskatchewan Regiment earlier had been prevented from leaving Terrace by pickets of other units there.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King told the House of Commons yesterday that the situation in British Columbia camps was being "carefully watched and completely controlled."

Meantime military investigations were continuing at points where home defence troops had held anti-conscriptions demonstrations.

Small Minority

In an interview at Ottawa Defence Minister McNaughton said the disturbances were due to a comparatively small minority who were stirring up other members of the home defence units. At Quebec, Brig. Edmond Blais, officer commanding Military District No. 5, announced that all home defence troops from his district would shortly be returned there for training under their own officers.

All ground floor windows of the French-language daily newspaper Le Canada in Montreal were smashed last night by more than 1,000 young men who also broke windows at the National Selective Service offices on Notre Dame Street, three blocks away.

The group, chanting "A Bas La Conscription" (Down with Conscription) and other slogans, earlier had attended a meeting where they had heard Andre Laurendeau, Quebec leader of the Bloc Populaire, say a majority had "no moral right" to "bind French-Canadians to a conscription measure."

The crowd was dispersed by police.

Three Destroyers, 10 Jap Transports With Troops Sunk

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines, Nov. 30 — (AP)—Slashing American fighter planes sank 10 Japanese transports and 3 destroyers, with at least 4,000 reinforcements aboard, in a blistering Tuesday-Wednesday battle which crippled an apparent enemy effort to land a full new division on Leyte island.

The assault pushed to 21,000 the Japanese death toll for reinforcements who failed to reach port, but some fresh troops evidently slipped ashore to join the rain-swept battle of Ormoc corridor.

Two transports in this six major reinforcement convoy were destroyed in Ormoc port, after they partially had unloaded men and supplies. One vessel blew up when hit. The other eight transports were destroyed "well out at sea," today's communique said, and an estimated 4,000 troops were lost.

The destroyers were sunk while escorting the convoy.

The Japanese have lost 28 transports and 17 escort vessels, mostly destroyers, in their efforts to pour men onto Leyte. In addition three cargo vessels, "apparently headed" for Ormoc, were sunk last week off Cebu.

It was probable, said the communique, that this latest convoy was bringing in another division, "as prisoners of war captured on the front stated they had been told the 2nd Japanese Infantry Division was expected."

There was no estimate of the number of men who might have landed at Ormoc. Despite heavy sea losses, the Japanese have put ashore more than 35,000 reinforcements since Oct. 25.

Steaming rains limited ground activity for the third straight day.

Front-line American echelons are being supplied partially by air.

AN APPLE FOR EVE

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER TWO

Long after this particular evening, when all her thoughts were so absorbed by Larry Ingersoll that Loveday could hardly recall herself sufficiently to hold her own in the quiet family conversation, she was to look back to this night with wonder. Just why the talk then should not have followed its usual quiet bent she did not know; often there was no talk at all as her grandmother knitted steadily, her mother fingered her solitaire cards and frowned over them, and she herself sat buried in a book. Sometimes for half an hour there would be no sound in the room except the comfortable sound of the clock ticking and the fire gnawing at a lump of coal and the soft swishing of branches outside in the dark as the wind fingered at the window blinds.

Tonight there was a change, sudden silence.

"How old will thee be next week, Loveday?"

"Twenty," Loveday's mother answered, stopping her game and looking at the girl. "It seems impossible!"

"It seems old," Loveday said simply.

"Old!" her grandmother echoed with her gentle laugh. "Wait until thee's eighty-two!"

Eighty-two was much too great an age to hold any interest whatsoever for Loveday. Her mother's age was less, but even that seemed outside the range of personal interest tonight to a girl not yet twenty.

"Mother, how old wer you when you got married?" she asked.

"I was thirty-three, Loveday. And that was thirty years ago."

"But, mother, wasn't that rather late to marry?"

Her mother's sensible, attractive, sun-browned face twitched with a smile.

"Your father and I waited eleven years."

"Eleven years!"

"That would be thirteen years from now for Larry and me," Loveday thought. Aloud she said, "Why that long time?"

"My father was an invalid. He needed constant care, day and night. I've told you this before."

"I know. And you'd been married ten years before I put in an appearance."

"There was your brother, of course." Martha Gurney had resumed her game, but now her fingers stopped again. She could speak of him quietly, although she did not often speak of him at all. "Hugh was born after we had been married about five years," she said.

"Then you came after we lost him," Martha said. "You were the thing I had to live for. I was glad then that your father wasn't there to know it."

Loveday knew the story. The little brother, not five years old, had somehow wandered away on a summer afternoon; there had been family alarm, later a general alarm. Little Hugh had somehow got far up into the woods; his small body in its faded, weather-soaked, familiar little blue play suit had been found long afterward in a culvert high on the mountainside, into which the child had apparently crept for shelter. And only a few weeks later Loveday had been born to the stricken house, to be the comfort and delight of her surgeon grandfather and his Quaker wife and of her widowed mother.

"You know of your grandfather's money, Loveday?" her mother asked unexpectedly after an interval of silence.

"I know it's lost," Loveday answered, half closing her book.

"You know a search was made everywhere for it, or for papers or notes, or any indication of what had become of it?"

"Was it bonds or money or just a will or what was it?" she asked idly.
pay attention, darling, for it's im-

"We think it was money," her mother said. "You see, Loveday—portant for you to know this! It was bonds first; your grandfather put evrytthing he had into bonds. He saved for forty years to build a children's hospital—a hospital for little cripples."

"Incurables," Loveday put in, to show that she was attentive.

"Not necessarily; no. But for all crippled children. There were to be cottages and terraces and a clinic and dispensary, of course, and possibly a nurses' training school, all on this place."

"I know. All that stone," Loveday said, nodding. Her grandfather had bought up granite blocks wherever he had been able to find them, and an immense pile of them, on one of the level fields of the estate, the size of a small house, still remained as evidence of his plan.

"We know now," her mother pursued, "that he was—was not himself for months before he died. He had a fall from one of the orchard ladders, and they thought afterward that it had injured him. For months he was turning his securities into cash, and depositing it in various banks. We knew nothing of what he was doing, but I think if we would have known we would have felt that whatever he did was right. But after his death there was simply no trace of it. No papers, no notes. Every cent had been withdrawn from the banks. There was his old will, written when you were a baby—after your father died—leaving you one third of everything, leaving Grandmother and me this place, and leaving all the rest for the hospital."

"Was it much, Mother?" Loveday asked, dreamily interesteid.

"It was a great deal. We knew it couldn't simply have disappeared; we had detectives here. Every closet and nook and corner of the whole place was searched; they tapped walls and groped through the rafters and tore out the chickens' nests and took up the carpets. No use."

"I remember them scouring around here," Loveday said. "Was it thousands?"

"It was possible several hundred thousand."

"Oo-oo!" the girl said, impressed. She had never thought of the mythical lost fortune in connection with herself personally before. Now she thought with a sudden delightful twinge of her heart that it would be fun to have plenty of money—if one married—a darling little house like the Spanish bungalows in Santa Pepita Canyon. . .

"It may be found someday," her mother was saying, "and if it is you must be ready to claim it. Not for your sake, but because of the hospital. Someday there must be an Owen Hugh Gurney Memorial Hospital here, and all that stone must help to build it."

"He couldn't have spent all that money, mother?"

"No, he didn't spend it," old Mrs. Gurney said quietly. "Thee knows that, Martha."

"We would have known if he had spent it," Martha Gurney agreed. "He never spent anything on himself. He worked in the garden here; he went into some hospital for consultation; he seemed absolutely normal to the end. But afterward we heard from different sources that he had been worried about the money, talking of it. He had drawn out all he had saved from various banks. He had said to one or two persons that he thought he was being followed."

"I remember his ninety-fourth birthday!" Loveday said with sudden animation. "I just thought he was old. I didn't realize how extraordinary it is for a person to be ninety-four! That gives me seventy-four years to go. I remember his always drinking hot water before meals and telling us all to do it," she went on, smiling into the fire.

Her grandmother looked at her over her glasses.

"What does thee think thee would live on were thy mother and I to be taken away?" she asked. "Doesn't thee ever think of that?"

"Not often. Especially if you both are going to live to be ninety-four," Loveday told her, laughing.

"You would get in touch with Mr. St. George at once," Martha Gurney said.

"Well, I must say this is a cheering conversation!" Loveday protested. "It seems to me I liked Mr. St. George. But I remember hating his disgusting little boy—what was his odious little name, Rodney?—who laughed when the blackberry vines tore my skirt off!"

"Warren St. George of San Francisco would be a good friend to you, Loveday," her mother said. "He has managed everything since your grandfather died. We would not have known what to do without him."

"I remember him, gray hair and nice," Loveday said. "I called him 'Uncle Warren,' didn't I? He's the father. And Chris St. George; that was the older brother," Loveday went on; "he wasn't so bad. I got stuck on the conservatory roof—nasty little Rodney had lured me up there—and Chris lifted me down and dusted me off and held my band while we walked back to the house He was—well, I was nine and I know he was in college. And then Fanny—Wasn't there a nice fat girl named Fanny, with a white dog?"

"They are fine, good people," old Mrs. Gurney said.

"Perhaps they have it, Grandmother"

"Have what?"

"All grandfather's money," Loveday's voice weakened into laughter, and she put her head down on her knees.

"Thee is truly giddy, child," her grandmother said in mild reproof.

"No, but you are almost twenty now," Loveday's mother reasoned seriously, "and old enough to realize that there is that obligation over us all—to find that money and use it for the purpose it was meant for."

The next day was like every other day at home but spiced with the expectation for Loveday of an encounter with Larry. Rain was pattering down softly and gently when she left the house for her walk after luncheon, equipped with rubbers and a raincoat; it fell freshly against her cheeks as she went down the road.

Felt Tired, Rundown;
Stomach Out Of Order

Relates How Syntona Ended Gas, Cramps, Acidity, Nausea, Headaches and Dizzy Spells — Appetite Improves And He Sleeps Better.

All who suffer from disorders of the stomach, liver, kidneys, or bowels or any of their long train of distressing symptoms will be interested in the experience of Mr. William Sanger, Glanford Station, Ontario, as reported recently. Read his sincere statement:

"In the last four or five years I suffered terribly with stomach gas and indigestion. I felt so rundown and miserable that I often could not work at all. Food I ate just fermented and caused a burning feeling and sour liquids would rise right up into my throat. Often I couldn't keep any food in my stomach at all. I would get dizzy, bilious spells accompanied by floating spots before my eyes and throbbing headaches.

"I had tried all kinds of medicines but nothing was helping me. Then my boss' wife persuaded me to try Syntona, and I have found it excellent. It helped my stomach and bowels right from the first, and now, after a few weeks, I am feeling just fine again. I enjoy my meals, I sleep well and I have more energy, I don't get those awful headaches and dizzy spells any more and my whole system feels more healthy than it did in years."

MR. WILLIAM SANGER

If you, who read this, suffer like Mr. Sanger did, make up your mind to begin taking Syntona today. See how much better you, too, can be feeling in just a short time.

Syntona is sold and recommended in Belleville at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST.

WALL STREET

New York, Nov. 30 —(AP)— Profit cashing today stalled scattered rail and industrial sprinters of yesterday's stock market session although assorted favorites managed to override selling handicaps.

American Telephone edged into top territory for 1944 along with Southern Railway. Ahead most of the time were Bethlehem, Western Union "A," American Smelting, Santa Fe, Atlantic Coast Line, Du Pont, Douglas Aircraft and United Aircraft.

Canadian issues were firm, posting fractional gains.

Mess Room Chatter Of Canada's Airmen

With the R. C. A. F. Overseas, Nov. 30 —(CP)— Airmen in the Canadian Bomber Group in England have given up their "Home for Christmas" slogan they adopted when the Allies were racing through France and now are convinced they'll be spending this Yuletide in Britain.

Depending on what Christmas plans Bomber Command has for Hitler, many Canadian airmen have received invitations to spend the holiday with English families. But those not so fortunate will be well looked after on their stations.

Plans are being laid for the usual concert parties to tour all establishments and dances will be held in all messes. Best of all, the usual custom of officers waiting on airmen at Christmas dinner will be back again.

The recently-appointed commanding officer of the Britain-based Buffalo Squadron is an Englishman who wears "Canada" badges. He is Wing Cmdr. Edward William Pierce, a native of Leigh-on-Sea, Essex, who first joined the squadron as an R. C. A. F. pilot officer fresh from the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan.

When Pierce went to New York in 1938 he was a member of the R. A. F. Volunteer Reserve. In 1940 his firm transferred him to Winnipeg to the R. C. A. F.

In his new job—following a spell as chief flying instructor at an operational training unit—he succeeds Wing Cmdr. Kenneth Gatward, D. S. O. and bar, D. F. C., who has completed three tours of operations.

Flt. Lt. J. S. Shiach of (377 Home St.) Winnipeg, pilot of a Coastal Command Halifax, scored direct hits on an 8,000-ton merchant vessel and an escort craft trying to creep at night across the Skagerrak from Norway to Denmark. To make sure of confirmation, Shiach circled so that all members of the crew could see the results of their attack.

"They saw two red distress signals fired from the doomed vessel. When 30 miles from the scene of the attack they could still see the ships burning and lighting up the sea for miles around," said R. C. A. F. headquarters.

It was a close call for FO. Tommy Shore of (80 First Ave.) Ottawa and his crew when flak riddled the gasoline tanks of their Iroquois Squadron Halifax on the way to Dartmund.

"Three haymakers of flak tagged us just before we reached our objective," said Flt. Sgt. John McIlroy, 20, of (151 Milverton Blvd.) Toronto, the mid-upper gunner. "Each burst riddled a gas tank."

The flight engineer warned the crew there wouldn't be enough fuel to get home if they continued to the target, but Shore ordered the navigator to work out the shortest route back and flew ahead. Hours later the Halifax, flying on its last gallons of gas, touched down safely on the dark runway of a coastal airfield in Britain.

Sqdn. Ldr. Bill Vanexan has just been awarded the D. S. O. after finishing two operational tours. The burly pilot from (403 Winston Ave.) Ottawa and Smith Falls, Ont., has been taken off operations and is due to be repatriated.

Vanexan wound up his flying career as a flight commander in the Iroquois Squadron. In 61 sorties he kept his crew out of flying battles entirely.

Commons Greet Churchill On 70th Birthday

London, Nov. 30. (CP) — Prime Minister Churchill "70 years young", was greeted with a roaring cheer when he entered the House of Commons today to follow his usual custom of putting in a full day's work on his birthday.

"Seventy not out"—an extremely good score in cricket—was the personal greeting given the Prime Minister by 87-year-old Will Thorne, Labor, oldest member of the House.

Mr. Churchill wore a rose in his buttonhole and appeared in high good humor as various members congratulated him.

The "70 years young" label was given Mr. Churchill by the Sydney Morning Herald, which said his "flair for living dangerously" had made him the one leader who could inspire the world during the dark days of the war. London papers also were full of praise and congratulations.

Even the Germans took notice. Helmut Suendermann, deputy press chief, wrote about Mr. Churchill in today's "Voelkischer Beobachter" under the title "we accuse". A D.N.B. broadcast of the article included these words: "Churchill once said there was no chance for him in a peaceful England, in a calm atmosphere. He was a fighter".

Much better the finest pelt of a fur not in the so-called "luxury" category, than a cheap grade of the "luxury" fur. So much better a magnificent coat of silvertone muskrat of superb quality than a cheap mink.
